To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, $25,000: Provided, That not to exceed one person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $3,000 per annum.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am afraid that the Committee on Appropriations has not made effective provision for the legislative service. I should propose an amendment and urge it vigorously except that I am not willing to run counter to the general spirit of economy. But this bureau has received $45,000 in earlier years. This amount has been cut down to $25,000. It is of the greatest value to the Congress, to Members of the House and of the Senate. I have been familiar with that Library for 30 years, and I conjecture that there are many Members of this House who do not fully realize how valuable an asset it is for furnishing information. There is, I believe, a more complete collection of official documents issued by the British Government in the Library of Congress at Washington than in the British Museum, for I have examined both. At least this is true: That these documents in this Library are very much more readily available than they are in the British Museum; the reader can obtain access to them in much less time. I can illustrate how complete the Library is, for several years ago I was skeptical about the correctness of a statement which I read in regard to the passage of a statute in New South Wales in Australia; it seemed to me that the writer had made a mistake. Within less than 30 minutes after I arrived at the Library I found that statute with a complete copy of all laws passed by the different Commonwealths of Australia. The information therein contained can be digested and furnished to Members of Congress at this time, and it is extremely useful. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why the amount was placed at $25,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. It was carried at $25,000 last year.

Mr. BURTON. And the year before at $45,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. In 1921 it was $25,000, and in 1920 it was $45,000. It has been $45,000 only one year.

Mr. BURTON. We have quite as much occasion to use the Library now as at any time. A number of questions are constantly arising as to the legislation of other countries, in regard to the soldiers' bonus, and other subjects; also, upon a very wide range of topics I have found that the response from the legislative service bureau has been very prompt. I think not only are the salaries in that Library very low, but they are badly adjusted. The expert does not receive sufficient consideration, an understanding of which is essential here. I am not sure that this is the case now, but some years ago the messenger at the door at the House of Representatives reading room was receiving $780 a year. A most expert bibliographer, the first man to enter the Library as a graduate from the library school at Albany, a master of several languages and very expert in that branch of the work, was receiving the same salary. I take it that this report of the committee promises as soon as this reclassification bill passes that more adequate salaries will be paid to these employees in the Library.

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not speak for the committee, but as far as I am personally concerned I think there are a good many civil-service employees of the Government whose services ought to be extended. I think we have gone about as far as we can go in restricting the expenses of the civil services of the Government, particularly those that touch the service of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For providing a safe, permanent repository, of appropriate design, within the Library of Congress Building for the originals of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, $12,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that we will have no difficulty in finishing consideration of the bill now under discussion to-day, and I hope the House will pardon me for interrupting the reading of it a moment to speak upon a topic which I think might not be out of place just at this point. The paragraph which has just been read makes an appropriation to provide a safe, permanent repository of appropriate design within the Library of Congress Building for the originals of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, it is proper that this should be done, and I have no objection to the appropriation. It is well that the material elements, the ink and paper, upon which the deathless ideals contained in these two great documents were written, should be preserved for the eyes of future generations to behold. But a far more important thing than the mere preservation of these material elements is to preserve in the minds and hearts of the American people the principles and ideals of the fathers which they wrote into these two documents.

The Bible tells us that on one occasion one of the Pharisees, which was a lawyer, asked Jesus a question, tempting Him, saying, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" Jesus answered, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment."

"And the second is like unto it, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." No Christian will question the authority of the answer.

Likewise upon the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence rest the whole fabric of American government, and if in an evil hour we ever cast their principles aside, either from considerations of expediency or studied indifference, then our whole structure of Government will be imperiled. I sometimes think, I do not know whether I am correct or not, that there is a certain growing irreverence for the Constitution, and contempt for the restraints of organized government. As a member of some of the committees in the House, I have not infrequently heard men of more than ordinary intelligence suggest that upon a mooted constitutional question Congress need not give very serious attention to it, but should go ahead and vote for the bill and leave the interpretation to the courts of the country. I do not take that view of congressional duty. I have the highest respect for the courts, but I think a Member of Congress should also feel a very keen sense of his own responsibility to the Constitution. Mr. Chairman, the whole essence of the Constitution, it seems to me, is involved in that provision of it which guarantees to every person that he shall be protected in the enjoyment of his life, liberty, and property. That is within itself the highest end and purpose of Government. Any Government which does not guarantee to its citizens protection in the enjoyment of these natural rights is either the tyranny of despotism or the tyranny of anarchy, and in either event is intolerable to freemen.

I realize that of these three natural rights the least sacred of them is that of the right of private property, and if we ever have to relinquish any of them, it will probably go first. Yet if the property of the citizen be not protected by the law of the land, then there will be no incentive to accumulate and one of the greatest of all civilizing influences will be lost. The protection of the citizen in the enjoyment of his property rights is one of the oldest and most highly prized rights of the Anglo-Saxon race.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. There are few finer passages in English literature than those familiar words of Edmund Burke in his speech upon the excise bill, "The poorest man may, in his cottage, bid defiance to all the forces of the Crown; it may be frail, its roof may shake; the wind may blow through it, the storms may enter, the rains may enter, but the King of England can not enter. All his forces dare not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement." It seems to me that there is a growing disposition in this country among a certain portion of our people—I hope the number is a much smaller minority than sometimes seems probable—to penalize a man because forsooth he has accumulated property.

I do not enter the lists as a champion of wealth. Because if to be wealthy is a crime, I shall have no trouble to prove myself "not guilty." But I do know if you deprive the citizen of his right to accumulate, then he will not accumulate, and chaos and industrial anarchy is the inevitable result. One of the best things Mr. Lincoln ever said was:

Property is the fruit of labor; property is desirable; it is a positive good in the world. That some should be rich shows that others may become rich, and hence is just encouragement to industry and enterprise. Let not him who is homeless pull down the house of another, but let him build one for himself, thus assuring, by example, that his own shall be safe from violence when built.

I am sure that most Members of the House will agree with me that capital for the most part is but the wages of yesterday, and that it is just as necessary to protect the wages of yesterday from confiscation and unlawful seizure as it is the wages of to-day. You can not deny fair earnings to capital without ultimately impoverishing labor, and by fair earnings to capital I, of course, mean only those which are reasonable and just. Unfortunately there are some labor leaders in high authority who seem to have no adequate conception of this fundamental fact. Take the railroad problem, for example. Secretary Hoover very correctly said in his speech a few days ago that a veritable witch's cauldron is being stirred up in that great industry by appeals to class hatred. Regardless of whether one agrees or not with the tentative valuation which the Interstate Commerce Commission has fixed as to the value of the railroads of the United States, he is bound to admit that it has taken lots of somebody's accumulated wealth to build them.

The number of railroad stockholders in 1920 was 700,795, according to Interstate Commerce Commission reports.

The exact number of railroad bondholders is not recorded, but is generally estimated at approximately 1,000,000 people, making the total number of security holders at the end of 1920 1,700,000.

Some of these stockholders and bondholders have large amounts invested and some have small amounts, but they all contribute to make up the sum and total of the whole.

If these people do not continue to furnish the money to finance the railroads for the future, and they certainly will not unless they are given at least a reasonable opportunity to earn fair returns on their investment, then, may I inquire, who will furnish the money?

Not likely the railroad employees, though it must be admitted that, based on 1921 salary earnings, they would within a few years be in a position to furnish a large amount of the capital needed if they cared to make the necessary savings and would invest it in that way.

For example, since 1916 the total compensation paid to railroad employees increased from $1,500,000,000 in that year to $3,700,000,000 in 1921, an increase of $2,200,000,000 per annum. If the railroad employees want to own the railroads let them accumulate but one-half annually of the amount of such increase and they could take such accumulations and at the present value of railroad stocks in less than four years could purchase controlling interest in all the railroads of the United States. Bonds would not have to be purchased because control of the properties depends upon the ownership of the stock, and it is my understanding that there is about six and one-half billions capital stock outstanding, while the outstanding bonds is upward of $10,000,000,000—

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. I would ask the gentleman whether the railroad employees would be able to save one-half of these additional earnings, if the whole of the additional earnings are to be spent in added rents, in added cost of groceries, and added cost of clothes?

Mr. BLACK. No. If such were true they could not. But such is not the case. In my judgment this increase of $2,200,000,000 in compensation over the figures of 1916 has given the railroad employees very excellent opportunity to make some substantial accumulations. Whether they have done so I do not presume to say; but if they have done so they have not invested such savings in railroad securities. I am making no attack upon the railroad employees. I am simply calling attention to a very important question. Somebody has got to furnish finances to operate the railroads or the employees will have no employment and the country will have no adequate transportation. If the more than a million and half investors in stocks and bonds are not given an opportunity to earn a fair return on their investments then they will simply not invest, and the Government will have to step in and furnish the finances or the whole railroad development will come to a halt.

I trust the gentleman from South Carolina is not one of those who holds to the theory that a nation can abolish poverty by destroying wealth. That is a very interesting theory, but not a new one at all. It has been tried out, off and on, for 6,000 years, and always with disaster. Lenin and Trotsky are trying the experiment in Russia, and to-day that vast country, which was once the granary of Europe, has fifteen or twenty millions of its people starving to death and have to receive a good part of their scanty sustenance from the United States, which Trotsky denounced a few years ago when leaving it as the "damn capitalist country."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman that I did not attack his political philosophy or question his political economy. I merely questioned the soundness of his arithmetic.

Mr. BLACK. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that, for I have the highest respect for him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say, in conclusion, that notwithstanding the complexities of modern industrial and economic problems, we will do well to adhere to the principles of the American Constitution in effecting their solution. We should not be ready to embrace the shallow and specious arguments of some irresponsible agitators of the present day. The newest is not always the best.

The hero of an hour will pass as quickly as he came. The flash light will dazzle and blind, but when the eyes are rubbed the impression will have passed away. And men are like impressions. There are more of the flash-light kind than there are fireflies on a summer's night, but there are some who are carved along deep lines for great purposes. It was these kind of men who wrote the Declaration of Independence and framed our Constitution.

And faded will be the glory of the country and feeble will be our love for the liberty of our fathers when we shall turn our backs in repudiation of their greatest handiwork.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture, including partitions, screens, shelving, and electrical work pertaining thereto, $12,000.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The House has not the time to listen to a discussion of the numerous questions presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. But when the gentleman from Texas speaks of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence in the same breath he makes a very serious historical error. The Declaration of Independence represents a period of democratic enthusiasm, while the Constitution of 1787 represents a period of reaction, of fear of democracy. The builders of the Constitution sought to establish a form of government which should retain the power of government in the hands of those who owned property. The Declaration of Independence was the greatest document in the history of the struggle of mankind for liberty. It proclaims that all men are born free and equal.

Of course, that is not exactly true. When born, men are equal in their helplessness only, and the helpless are not free. The Declaration of Independence announced the noblest ideal ever presented to mankind. The framing of the Constitution, as the gentleman knows, followed a period of confusion, of chaos. It was the result of the effort of a young democracy to place itself on its feet. It was a very successful effort, it is true, to establish a stable form of government, but it was a departure from the Declaration. I can not go into that any further. All I want for the present to say to the gentleman from Texas is that when he talks of accumulated capital as the result of saving, he repeats an old piece of nonsense contained in textbooks of economists who have long ago been repudiated by thinking men. Take the gentleman's proposition of saving on an income of $1,800 per year. Let us assume that a man saves $800 a year. If he lives a thousand years he will have saved $800,000. Unless the gentleman can provide a remedy, can show us how we can live for 1,000 years and thus save $800,000, his entire economic structure falls to the ground.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do not expect to take very much time, but I do want to set forth my entire dissent to the proposition advanced a few minutes ago that from the Declaration of Independence to the adoption of the Constitution this country was festering with chaos and anarchy. If there ever was a time when statesmanship was displayed it was displayed in the first place in winning the Revolutionary War and in the next place in working out a situation which brought about the adoption of the Constitution, the foundation of this great Government, and instead of chaos and anarchy there never was a time when in this country rights were more rigidly regarded and more sacredly enforced than by the fathers of this country at that time. That is all I want to say. I dissent from that proposition distinctly.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1923 any executive department or independent establishment of the Government ordering printing and binding from the Government Printing Office shall pay promptly by check to the Public Printer upon his written request, either in advance or upon completion of the work, all or part of the estimated or actual cost thereof, as the case may be, and bills rendered by the Public Printer in accordance herewith shall not be subject to audit or certification in advance of payment: Provided, That proper adjustments on the basis of the actual cost of delivered work paid for in advance shall be made monthly or quarterly and as may be agreed upon by the Public Printer and the department or establishment concerned. All sums paid to the Public Printer for work that he is authorized by law to do shall be deposited to the credit, on the books of the Treasury Department, of the appropriation made for the working capital of the Government Printing Office, for the year in which the work is done, and be subject to requisition by the Public Printer.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the paragraph. I think the proposition requires some explanation, being a departure in law.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, if the gentleman desires me to make a statement in respect to it, I will say that all of these items asked for public printing and binding, page 33, are parts of the same general plan. I do not know whether the gentleman was here when I made a statement at the beginning of the debate or not, but I will be glad to repeat what I said. The gentleman knows there are two methods of making appropriation now for work in the Government Printing Office. One of those is being made by the allotment method. Under that the appropriation has heretofore been made, some five or six million dollars, directly to the Government Printing Office. This appropriation has been allotted to the various Government departments in specific amounts. Whenever printing was ordered by a department from the Government Printing Office which was authorized by law, the amount of the printing was charged against the allotment of the department which had ordered the printing. In addition, in all bills, or practically all bills, appropriating for the various departments there were items for printing specifically and other items which could be used for the purpose of obtaining printing at the Government Printing Office. In the case of those appropriations payment was made by the department direct to the Government Printing Office for the printing that they ordered. The proposition of this bill is to put all printing upon one basis, that is, upon the repay basis by which the amount for printing for each department will be appropriated directly for that department. In that way we hope eventually to collect all items for printing for each department under a single item, so we will know exactly what the printing for each department is costing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why the necessity for the provision contained in part of line 18, page 35—and bills rendered by the Public Printer in accordance herewith shall not be subject to audit or certification in advance of payment.

Mr. ANDERSON. The object of it is simply to establish a credit to the department in order to avoid a period during which under this scheme the Printing Office might have no money with which to pay employees and buy material which it was necessary to purchase in order to do the printing.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, this means that there will be no audit at all?

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, yes; there will be the regular audit after payment is made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But no effective audit if the money is paid.

Mr. MANN. The money is paid only by transfer on the books.

Mr. ANDERSON. And a settlement has to be reached between the Government Printing Office and the department before they have an audit.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. It is only a transfer on the books anyhow. And this is through transfer so the Printing Office will have money to its credit without waiting a year.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling attention to the condition in the office of the Public Printer so far as employment is concerned. I have been informed that a number of men have been discharged in the bookbinding department. I assume that the Public Printer has been compelled to discharge a number of employees by reason of the economies forced in every department or by reason of lack of work.

What I would like to suggest to the Public Printer is that he should at least follow the recommendations adopted by the unemployment conference which was called by the President. While the conference did not accomplish very much, it did, among other things, recommend to private employers that in reducing their force, instead of entirely separating men from their jobs, they should divide the work on hand among as many employees as possible. The conference advised that employers should retain all workers, if possible, so as to distribute the opportunities of employment among the largest possible number of workers.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, that will work out in a plant where ultimately you can expect to get up to the peak of employment you had. But here is a plant where the department is overmanned from any point of view of requirement in the future.

Mr. LONDON. The practice I am now suggesting was the practice, to an extent, at least, of the former Public Printer. I understand he found a way of applying that principle to some extent.

Mr. ANDERSON. They were taking them on then.

Mr. LONDON. You take a number of men, place them in positions which they believe to be permanent, and then throw them out of employment. I submit that in so acting you inflict an injury the effect of which should be softened as much as possible by a considerate employer.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furniture and fixtures, typewriters, carpets, labor-saving machines and accessories, time stamps, adding and numbering machines, awnings, curtains, books of reference, directories, books, miscellaneous office and desk supplies; paper; twine, glue, envelopes, postage, car fares, soap, towels, disinfectants, and ice; drayage, express, freight, telephone and telegraph service; repairs to building, elevators, and machinery; preserving sanitary condition of building, light, heat, and power; stationery and office printing, including blanks, price lists, and bibliographies, $39,000; for catalogues and indexes, not exceeding $16,000; for supplying books to depository libraries, $75,000; equipment, material, and supplies for distribution of public documents, $35,000; in all, $165,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used to supply to depository libraries any documents, books, or other printed matter not requested by such libraries.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think we have usually carried the item for binding reserve remainders. That seems to be left out in this bill. What might be the purpose, may I ask?

Mr. ANDERSON. My recollection is, I will say to the gentleman, that was proposed to be stricken out by the Budget Commission in making the estimate. I do not know what the reason was.

Mr. MANN. What do they know about it? However, if the gentleman does not have the information, I will let it go.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not have it in mind, and I do not recall any testimony on it.

Mr. MANN. I wish I knew.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

In order to keep the expenditures for printing and binding for the fiscal year 1923 within or under the appropriations for such fiscal year, the heads of the various executive departments and independent establishments are authorized to discontinue the printing of annual or special reports under their respective jurisdictions: Provided, That where the printing of such reports is discontinued, the original copy thereof shall be kept on file in the offices of the heads of the respective departments or independent establishments for public inspection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is proposed by this? Do you propose that they shall not print their annual reports?

Mr. ANDERSON. No. This item was carried last year. The object, if I understand, was to cut out a good deal of detail in the reports which was wholly unnecessary and which really added nothing to the sum total of human knowledge. And I understood as a result of this provision there has been a very large reduction in the volume of departmental reports and in the cost of printing them as well.

Mr. MANN. You say this was carried last year? What was it carried in?

Mr. ANDERSON. In the sundry civil bill. And it had such good results last year that we thought we would carry it again and see if we could scrape up a little bit.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Roach amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the other amendments. The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ROACH: Page 18, after line 8, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"For packing boxes, $4,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Thereupon the House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 5.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because a quorum has not voted, and I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees. Those in favor of the amendment will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 190, nays 79, answered "present" 1, not voting 160, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 10, 1922.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 3, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Over-lue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau transmitting a list of useless records in that bureau having no historic value and requesting action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The President pro tempore appointed Mr. FREELINGHUYSEN and Mr. JONES of New Mexico members of the committee on the part of the Senate and ordered that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof.

PETITIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the general secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America favoring the passage of Senate joint resolution 160, authorizing the extension, for a period of not to exceed 25 years, of the time for the payment of the principal and interest of the debt incurred by Austria September 4, 1920, for the purchase of wheat from the United States Grain Corporation, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of sundry citizens, firms, and organizations of Lake Worth, Fla., praying for immediate enactment of legislation to eliminate the war tax on telegrams, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented two petitions of sundry citizens of Kinsley, Brookville, and Falun, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices on certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution adopted by the Board of County Commissioners of Bottineau County, N. Dak., favoring the enactment of legislation appropriating $5,000,000 for the relief of farmers in drought-stricken regions, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petitions of J. D. St. Peter, of Parshall; J. L. Severson and 3 others, of Robinson; Edwin K. Eckre and 9 others, of Walcott; E. O. Nyhous and 27 others, of Ypsilanti and vicinity; W. J. Maddock and 23 others, of Plaza; L. Noltmiller and 47 others, of Valley City; John Nathan and 30 others, of Goodrich; C. Bertel and 35 others, of Windsor and vicinity; Lawrence Madland and 43 others, of McKenzie and vicinity, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices on certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SWANSON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Joint resolution memorializing the Interstate Commerce Commission in regard to a reduction in freight rates.

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission is now holding in Washington a hearing on the question of reduction in freight rates and has invited shippers and others interested in the matter to give testimony;

Whereas carriers by railroad have been granted during the past three years an increase in freight rates of approximately 80 per cent;

Whereas commodities that constitute a large part of the tonnage handled by carriers are selling for about prewar prices, and many of these commodities can not be transported to market on the present freight rate without loss to producer;

Whereas markets where shippers formerly found ready sale for their products must be abandoned and business relations of long standing discontinued as a result of the percentage increase in freight rates;

Whereas since water rates have been reduced to practically prewar basis many all-rail shippers must lose their business or be ruined in competing with those shippers who enjoy water rates;

Whereas industrial plants are closed down or running part time, business is paralyzed, millions of men out of employment, tonnage handled by railroad carriers has fallen off, and nothing in sight to indicate an improvement in business conditions under present high freight rates;

Whereas a pyramiding of freight rates is unavoidable in the natural course of commerce (a half dozen freight charges often being made on the same article between producer and consumer);

Whereas this multiplicity of freight charges, of approximately 80 per cent more than they were prior to 1917, prevents such a reduction in living cost and rental charges as the present price of agricultural products and building material at point of production would seem to warrant; railroads says wages must be reduced before rates can be cut; labor is reluctant to accept a reduction because it has not seen a material reduction in the cost of living and rental charges; the producer of raw material must sell his product at prewar prices, and after the product has traveled the usual avenues of commerce and the multiplicity of freight charges are added to the first cost he must pay for it as a manufactured article at from 50 to 100 per cent more than prewar prices;

Whereas we believe a substantial reduction in freight rates is necessary and will materially aid in bringing about normal business conditions; that it will result in a revival of business and consequent increased tonnage to the carriers, which increased tonnage will more than offset revenue from rate reduction: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of delegates concurring): First, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and hereby is, memorialized and urged to order a substantial reduction in freight rates.

Second, That our Senators and Representatives in Washington be requested to favor the passage of such legislation as will enable the carriers to reduce expenses, so that employees may be warranted in accepting lower compensation by reason of less cost of living.

Third, That a certified copy of this preamble and these resolutions be transmitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives from Virginia.

Agreed to by the senate January 25, 1922. O. V. HANGER,
Clerk of Senate.

Agreed to by the house of delegates January 26, 1922.
JNO. W. WILLIAMS,
Clerk of House of Delegates and Keeper of the Rolls of Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for amendments to the act to regulate commerce and to the transportation act of 1920.

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission has so construed the transportation act of 1920 (generally known as the Esch-Cummins Act) as to cause it to make orders advancing freight rates and passenger fares applicable to intrastate transportation in disregard of State laws and the orders of State commissions; and

Whereas such construction of said act is in direct contravention of the understanding had at the public hearings on the Esch-Cummins bill, as repeatedly stated by its patron, Senator CUMMINS, who has consistently stated that the effect of said act was never intended to interfere with the jurisdiction of State commissions over intrastate rates and fares, except to the extent already defined by the United States Supreme Court in the Shreveport cases; and

Whereas in certain recent cases the Interstate Commerce Commission has asserted that under said transportation act of 1920 it has the same authority over electric railroads that it has asserted in steam railroad cases, thereby abridging the constitutional regulatory powers of the States; and

Whereas it has shown to be impracticable for the Interstate Commerce Commission to attempt to supervise the distribution of cars on an equitable basis as between individual shippers throughout the United States, and there should be some governmental authority within reasonable reach to which appeal can be made to provide such equitable distribution of cars; and

Whereas by the said transportation act of 1920 the Interstate Commerce Commission is given exclusive authority to authorize the total abandonment of lines of railroad, and has exercised this authority at long range with apparent lack of complete information as to the local conditions: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Virginia (the House of Delegates concurring), That we urge upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to so amend the existing legislation as to clearly define and limit the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission so that no intrastate rate or fare may be changed or set aside without proof by competent evidence, and upon findings of fact made, that the same injures a person or persons, or a locality or localities, engaged in interstate commerce to such an extent as seriously to diminish the business of such person or persons or seriously to retard growth and development of such locality or localities;

Resolved further, That our Representatives in Congress are requested to advocate the incorporation in such amendatory legislation through the Capper or Nicholson bills, or in some other way, a declaration of the purpose of Congress to recognize the rights of the several States to exercise full and final jurisdiction over all rates for intrastate transportation which do not injure persons or localities engaged in interstate commerce in the manner aforesaid; and

Resolved further, That said Representatives in Congress be respectfully urged to advocate such legislation that the regulatory authorities of the States may make reasonable orders and regulations, not in conflict with the Federal law or with lawful orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, requiring cars within the respective borders of such States to be equitably distributed to shippers desiring same; and

Resolved further, That our Representatives in Congress be respectfully urged to advocate an amendment under the law so that certificates of convenience and necessity granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall not purport to relieve the carriers obtaining the same from conforming to the laws of the States with respect to construction and operation within the States for intrastate transportation, or with respect to the abandonment of such transportation; and

Resolved further, That copies of the foregoing preamble and of these resolutions be forwarded by the clerk to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives in Congress from Virginia and to the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Agreed to by the Senate January 25, 1922.

O. V. HANGER,
Clerk of Senate.

Agreed to by the House of Delegates January 26, 1922.

JNO. W. WILLIAMS,
Clerk of House of Delegates and Keeper of the Rolls of Virginia.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Traverse County Farm Bureau, of Wheaton, Minn., favoring enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3136) to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3137) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the political status of the people of Porto Rico, and to provide an autonomous government for the said island, creating the Associated Free State of Porto Rico; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

AMENDMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for salary of the Chief Clerk of the Court of Claims, intended to be proposed by him to the Departments of State and Justice appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED ST. LAWRENCE RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 235), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas the project for the canalization of the St. Lawrence River, and the development of hydraulic power in connection therewith, between Lake Ontario and the head of tidewater in the St. Lawrence River below the city of Montreal, at the joint expense of the Governments of the United States and the Dominion of Canada, contemplates that the Government of the United States shall contribute one-half of the cost of the construction of the necessary channels, dams, locks, and hydraulic works in that portion of the St. Lawrence River between the northern boundary of the State of New York and the mouth of the Richelieu River, which portion of the St. Lawrence River passes entirely through Canadian territory, and upon which the United States has no riparian rights, or rights with respect to the water power, and has no contact with the banks, or with the proposed navigable channels, canals, dams, locks, or hydraulic works, for which the Government of the United States is expected to appropriate one-half of the cost of construction: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that, as a condition precedent to the Government of the United States joining with the Government of the Dominion of Canada in the construction of such works, the Dominion of Canada cede to the United States the territory lying between the Richelieu River, Lake Champlain, and the northern boundary of the State of New York, including the bank and the bed of the St. Lawrence River to the center of the channel thereof, from the point of intersection with the northern boundary of New York to the mouth of the Richelieu River, in order that the United States may become joint owner with the Dominion of Canada of the course of the St. Lawrence River to the head of tidewater below the city of Montreal, and joint owner with the Dominion of Canada in the proposed canals, channels, dams, locks, and hydraulic works, and of all rights of navigation and of water power appurtenant thereto.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, was read twice by title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Last evening when we took a recess it was agreed by unanimous consent that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] was to have the floor at the opening of the session this morning to proceed with his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair observed that by unanimous consent the Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor, but the Senator from Alabama is not here.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Alabama notified me through his secretary that he would be unable to finish his speech this morning on account of extreme hoarseness, and I was to say that to the Senate. I was waiting until perhaps we might have a fuller attendance. I wish to say now that the Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor, but has relinquished it and sent word accordingly. So we may proceed with the appropriation bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That being cleared up satisfactorily—Mr. HEFLIN entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is now present. The Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I informed the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] that I did not feel able to go on with my speech this morning and that he might proceed with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 3, in the items for Office of the President, to increase the appropriation for printing and binding from $3,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 4, after the word "traveling," to insert "and official entertainment," so as to make the paragraph read:

Traveling expenses: For traveling and official entertainment expenses of the President of the United States, to be expended in his discretion and accounted for on his certificate solely, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 13, to increase the appropriation for fuel for the Executive Mansion and greenhouses from $8,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to strike out lines 17 and 18 in the following words: "For reconstructing one greenhouse, Executive Mansion, $5,000," and to insert, "For reconstructing greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $6,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 17, to insert:

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL BRIDGE COMMISSION.

To enable the commission created by section 23 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913, to investigate and report to Congress a suitable design for a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from the city of Washington to a point at or near the Arlington estate, in the State of Virginia, together with such surveys and estimates of cost as they may deem advisable, to be expended under the direction of the commission, and to remain available until expended, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 11, to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$150,000," so as to read:

For carrying on the work of the Bureau of Efficiency as authorized by law, including salaries and contingent expenses; supplies; stationery; purchase and exchange of equipment; printing and binding; traveling expenses; per diem in lieu of subsistence; not to exceed $100 for law books, books of reference, and periodicals; and not to exceed $150 for street car fare; in all, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. In the items for the Bureau of Efficiency, on page 5, line 14, where the word "one" appears the second time, I move to amend by striking out "one" and inserting in lieu thereof "three" and the word "each" after the numerals; and in the same line where the word "six" occurs, to strike out the word "six" and insert the word "eight."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 5, line 14, strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three" and the word "each" after the numerals, and in the same line strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight," so as to read:

Three at $4,250 each; eight at $4,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Civil Service Commission," on page 5, line 19, before the word "each," to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$6,000;" and on page 6, line 10, to increase the total from "$305,420" to "$308,420," so as to make the paragraph read:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Three commissioners, at $6,000 each; chief examiner, $3,500; secretary, $2,500. Provided, That the secretary of the Civil Service Commission shall be deemed an employee for the purposes of this act; assistant chief examiner, $2,400; chiefs of divisions—1 $2,400 (who shall act as assistant secretary), 2 at $2,000 each; certification clerk, $2,000; examiners—7 at $2,400 each, 3 at $2,000 each, 6 at $1,800 each; clerks—6 of class 4, 28 of class 3, 39 of class 2, 52 of class 1, 34 at $1,000 each, 22 at $900 each; messenger, $840; assistant messenger, $720; skilled laborer, $720; 4 messenger boys, at $420 each. Custodian force: Engineer, $840; general mechanic, $840; telephone switchboard operator, $720; 2 firemen, at $720 each; 2 watchmen, at $720 each; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 3 laborers, at $660 each; 4 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $308,420.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to inquire, with reference to this amendment, the reason for increasing the salaries of the Civil Service Commissioners?

Mr. WARREN. I will state to the Senator that the Budget calls for $7,500 each for the Civil Service Commissioners, as their duties are greatly increased. We have on several occasions heretofore attempted to raise their salaries, but we have not come together in both Houses. I think without a doubt they are earning the $7,500 which the Budget estimate calls for, especially when we consider that so many of the newer commissioners, like the Federal Trade Commissioners and others, are paid $10,000, who, of course, have less perhaps to do than the Civil Service Commissioners.

I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that in the bill the only salaries the committee has recommended to be increased are these three to be increased $1,000 each, and another one to be increased $400, which is the salary of a man in a very important office in charge of all of the many Government buildings and who has a large retinue of men under him.

Mr. CARAWAY. I sincerely hope the committee will recede from the proposed increase of salaries of the Civil Service Commissioners. With a general cutting of pay of people all over the country whose salaries are small, and with millions of men out of employment, I see no occasion for raising the salaries of commissioners who are receiving now $5,000. The present commissioners are no better men than those who preceded them. One of the greatest men of the Republic served on that commission at $5,000 a year and raised no complaint. Others went through all the time of increase of pay generally during the late war, and there was no increase of their pay.

I am going to say now the only unkind thing I have ever said about a man since I have been a Member of either branch of Congress, where he was not present to reply. The present Civil Service Commissioners are not entitled to an increase of pay. They are not entitled to it because they are not exercising the functions of their office with a fair and impartial judicial temperament. I know whereof I speak when I say that the commission is lending itself to the most outrageous abuses of candidates for offices in my own State. I speak of no other. They not only are refusing to grade certain papers so they thereby make others eligible but are refusing to permit anybody to see the papers. Certain papers which were graded and which showed the applicants were not entitled to ratings because graded as low as 60 per cent were seen by a politician from my State to have had those grades raised to 70 or 75 per cent. Men who are entitled to ratings can not get them. They will not pass on them at all, and will not permit anybody to see the papers. They are lending themselves to a positive fraud, and I am not going to permit any increase of their pay if I can help it. Of course, I may not be able to prevent it.

I say now in apology that this is the only time I have ever said anything unkind about anybody, in office or out of office, who was not able to reply in the same forum and at the same time. I realize that it is bad taste, but their conduct is so shocking that it has to be stated. I hope the Senate will not increase the pay of these men who are prostituting their offices for partisan purposes. I hope the Senator will withdraw the proposed amendment asking for an increase of pay.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that I could not withdraw it, because it was acted on by the full Committee on Appropriations. I think, if the Senator wishes, and no one objects, we might lay it aside until we have a more complete attendance of the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was going to suggest that be done until others are present, because I do not care now to suggest the absence of a quorum, in order that others might vote upon it.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the amendment may be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment on page 5, line 19, will be passed over for the present, and also the amendment in line 10, page 6, increasing the total.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the clerks at the desk be authorized to correct the totals, where necessary, when we finish the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 12, to strike out "$56,780" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

For additional employees for the Civil Service Commission, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to offer an amendment at this point, in order to enable the commission to conduct another line of investigation. We erred in inserting that amount in a lump sum in this place. I send to the desk two amendments, desiring that the one which is written in pencil may be first considered and that which is in typewriting be considered next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 14, after the word "except," it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert in lieu thereof "five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will now state the second amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 14, after the word "each" and before the period at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That $40,000 of this amount may be expended only in connection with all expenses incident to investigations and research as to the character and training and experience of applicants for examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 9, line 17, after the word "commission," to insert "by the officer in charge."

of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission"; and in line 19, to strike out "$6,000" and to insert "$10,000," so as to read:

For expenses made necessary by the act entitled "An act establishing a Commission of Fine Arts," approved May 17, 1910, including the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the commission by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission, $10,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does that amendment contemplate an increase in the salaries under the commission?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no; it is to cover all expenses.

Mr. McNARY. The amendment was stated so hurriedly that I did not catch its full import. I see now it is as stated by the Senator from Wyoming.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Commission of Fine Arts," on page 9, line 19, after the figures "$10,000," to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That no person shall receive compensation hereunder at a rate exceeding $1,800 per annum and only one person shall be employed at that rate: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be expended for traveling expenses other than those incurred by members of the commission for actual travel only in going to and returning from Washington to attend the meetings of the commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the items for Employees' Compensation Commission, on page 10, line 7, after the words "special agents," to insert "2 at $2,000 each"; in line 15, after the word "month," to strike out "$8,000" and to insert "$10,000"; and in the same line, to strike out "$122,940" and to insert "$128,940," so as to read:

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION.

Salaries: Three commissioners, at $4,000 each; secretary, $3,000; attorney, $4,000; chief statistician, $3,500; chief of accounts, $2,500; assistant chief of accounts, $1,600; accountant, $2,250; claim examiners—chief, $2,250, assistant $2,000, assistant $1,800, 5 assistants at $1,600 each; special agents—2 at $2,000 each, 2 at $1,800 each, 2 at $1,600 each; clerks—7 of class 3, 12 of class 2, 27 of class 1, 3 at $1,000 each; chief telephone operator, $1,000; messenger, $840; experts and temporary assistants in the District of Columbia and elsewhere to be paid at a rate not exceeding $8 per day, and temporary clerks, stenographers, or typists in the District of Columbia, to be paid at a rate not exceeding $100 per month, $10,000; in all, $128,940.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 23, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses Employees' Compensation Commission from "$19,000" to "$20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 6, after the numeral "11," to insert "and advancement of costs for the enforcement of recoveries provided in sections 26 and 27 where necessary, and not exceeding $25 in any one case"; so as to make the paragraph read:

Employees' compensation fund: For the payment of compensation provided by "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, including medical, surgical, and hospital services, and supplies provided by section 9, and the transportation and burial expenses provided by sections 9 and 11 and advancement of costs for the enforcement of recoveries provided in sections 26 and 27 where necessary, and not exceeding $25 in any one case, accruing during the fiscal year 1923 or in prior fiscal years, $2,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 2, to increase the appropriation for authorized expenditures of the Federal Trade Commission from "$800,000" to "$900,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it was not thought that this appropriation bill would come up so early this morning. It contains a number of important items, and many Senators desire to be present when they are considered. We have reached one such item now, and I think it is proper that I suggest the absence of a quorum, in order that absent Senators may be notified that we are working on a bill that is of very great importance. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegge	Hale	Moses	Pepper
Cameron	Harris	Myers	Philips
Capper	Healin	Nelson	Sheppard
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kendrick	Oddie	Warren
Fletcher	Keyes	Overman	Williams
Gerry	McNary	Page

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is unavoidably absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was requested to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOR], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] are detained from the Senate in attendance upon the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Twenty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Kellogg	Newberry	Sutherland	Watson, Ga.
Lenroot

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Ball	Ernst	Lodge	Stanley
Borah	Fernald	Ransdell
Colt	La Follette	Stanfield

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Bursum	Harreld	Jones, N. Mex.	Sterling
Culberson	Kenyon	Pittman	Weller
Frelinghuysen	King	Simmons

Mr. CARAWAY. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] is detained by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, line 2, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out "$800,000" and insert "$900,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 12 the committee proposes to strike out lines 4 to 24, both inclusive, and on page 13 lines 1 to 14, both inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert:

For carrying out the provisions of the act of June 10, 1921, establishing the General Accounting Office, including salaries of officers and employees, traveling expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence while absent on official business outside the District of Columbia not to exceed $50,000, rent, purchase, and exchange of books, and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $2,496,101.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before considering that item, I give notice that I shall move—I shall not press the motion now—to reconsider the vote by which, on page 5, the amount of $125,000 was increased to $150,000, and various other changes of which I have not been advised were made.

I should like to inquire whether the item under the head of "Civil Service Commission" has been disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment on line 19, page 5, was passed over.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that the matter of salaries of the commissioners was passed over.

Mr. KING. I shall not press it at this time, but I give notice that before the bill is passed I shall submit that motion. I understand that it is necessary to give notice of a motion to reconsider within the calendar day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move to reconsider or simply give notice that he will do so?

Mr. KING. I give notice that I will do so.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator, as I understand, gives notice that at a later time he will move for reconsideration.

Mr. KING. Yes; I do not want to interfere with the item now being considered.

Now, I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge to explain to the Senate the reason for striking out all of the matter found on page 12 and page 13 down to and including line 14, and substituting in lieu thereof the general provision for $2,496,101.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am very glad to respond to that inquiry. In fact, I intended to explain it anyway. That is for the Comptroller General's office, which, as the Senator well knows, is a new office. When that office was created it was a consolidation of all of the accounting of the Government—for instance, all of the auditors and others—and it extended into a very large number of men. While it cut down the total amount necessary, and was in the line of economy generally, it was the assembling of various interests and various kinds of work, all pointing to the one matter of the general accounting of the Government.

Some of the officials continued under the old salaries and some of them were suspended, and the Comptroller General has managed the office with less money than was required with the regular lines of employment heretofore obtaining. In other words, he has saved money, and necessarily, when he started, there had to be a lump-sum appropriation. I think the Senator knows that the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate, and especially the chairman of the committee, are irrevocably opposed to lump-sum appropriations where they do not reduce expenses or where they are avoidable. In this matter the subcommittee of the House and the full committee passed the item exactly as we are undertaking to restore it, but when it got on the floor before the bill was passed it was stricken out, and this long line of statutory places was inserted instead. The Comptroller General said this would be a very delightful arrangement if his department were fully established and we could afford those salaries, but at the present time and for the next year it would cost them considerably more to handle it until they could get a little more consolidation, to which I will refer in a moment. So, from his evidence, to which the Senator may refer if he wishes to do so, it was made very plain that by using men at lower salaries for certain work which could be done, filing, and so forth, he would have more help for the same amount of money than he would have if we provided for this line of statutory salaries.

Furthermore, we are entering upon the consideration of a general reclassification, as the Senator knows, which would take in this department with all the others; so it would seem as if, taking everything into consideration, we ought to respond to the Comptroller General's wish this one year and make the item as it was first provided for by the House committee, because it looks to me as if by that course we would save a good deal of money.

In this connection I wish to say that at this time the employees of this establishment are necessarily housed in 17 or 19 different buildings, but they are assembling them as fast as they can. There is one building which has now been relinquished, a building which I think the Navy Department had, the Walker-Johnson Building, which has been rented for years to the United States and is under lease until July. The Comptroller General said he was anxious to go into that building and that he had arranged with the proper committee to go into it, but to move in now and to move out on the 1st of July would be a great inconvenience, and he wished to make a new lease, which would cost anywhere from $25,000 to $30,000; so we added $27,500 to the House appropriation. That is the only difference between the appropriation we have recommended and the bill as it passed the House in regard to this one item.

In this connection I will state that one of the offices of the Comptroller General has been in the new annex of the Treasury Department, and he states that when they turned over the auditing of the various establishments the upper story of that building was packed full of sacks of mail, including checks by the tens of thousands, and various papers which were in mail sacks unopened and which had not yet been checked up and examined and filed. That occasioned the employment of many men at not high salaries, but that work will be cleaned up during the coming year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there may be sufficient reasons to justify this departure from accepted practice and rule. I have heard the Senator from Wyoming, as well as other Senators, frequently declaim against the unwisdom of lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is right about that. In this case it is not a change; it is simply continuing for one year more, only the second year, this proposition of a lump sum.

Mr. KING. During the last administration, when we were in the war and immediately following the war, a policy was adopted with respect to some of the new executive agencies and administrative bodies of making appropriations in lump sums to meet the expenses of such agencies. Our Republican friends criticized very severely what they stated was a departure from accepted practice, and I sympathized entirely with their criticism; indeed, supported them in their criticism. They declared that that policy would lead to waste and extravagance and to the employment of inefficient persons. Undoubtedly there was much truth in this charge. I believe many inefficient persons were employed and that there was extravagance in the administration of some of these bureaus and new Federal agencies. Large salaries were paid in many of the executive agencies which were created, much larger than in the established departments of the Government, and it was not unusual to find in the same building an individual doing a given class of work at a salary of $1,500 or $2,000 or $3,000 and another person doing exactly the same character of work receiving double that compensation.

That evil grew out of the "lump-sum" appropriation plan, a plan which imposes no proper restrictions or limitations upon those charged with their expenditure. And now the Senator from Wyoming, who is doing most excellent work in keeping down appropriations, accepts that which he has condemned and characterized in the preceding administration as unwise and indefensible; he is now perpetuating a policy which he declaimed against with so much vigor, and, as I believe, with so much justice. His explanation seems plausible as one listens to it, and if one had ample time to examine it carefully and compare existing conditions with the reasons alleged, it might be found to be warranted; but I confess, Mr. President, notwithstanding the explanation which he has made, that I am not converted to his view.

I am not able to understand why officials who are assigned certain work to do in this new agency or under this particular branch of the Government should be differentiated from employees in other branches of the Government who are performing like service.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this enormous appropriation, $2,496,000, for this one branch of the service is entirely too great. I understood from the Senator that the work was greater now, or might be greater, than in the past.

Mr. WARREN. No; Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I may be in error in regard to that inference.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator overlooks the fact that there were six different large establishments of auditors alone which have been done away with by this combination, and the business of those different auditors has been taken charge of by this new office. The Senator will remember that the law was passed only a short time ago, late last year, and the reorganization has been carried on with all the rapidity we could expect; but of course there is the checking up of the different departments, which we had held down pretty close in our appropriations, and this will be only for the one year, as I said before.

I do not know what the House will do if this is agreed to. There still will be the conference committee to consider it; but the House adopted this long amendment, and of course it was against the wish of the House committee, and I was convinced, after looking into the facts and taking the evidence, that this was the best thing to do, so we have inserted it and will let it go to conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is well known that I have been fighting lump-sum appropriations for years, and we succeeded before the war in abolishing practically all of them; but from the testimony before the committee I am satisfied that for one year only it is necessary to have this lump-sum appropriation. It is agreed this will go only through this year, until the matter can be arranged. It will save money to the Government. As the Senator from Wyoming has said, they have 10 or 15 buildings in this city where work was being done under the old auditing system. We have abolished all those different offices and put them all under the one system, and are going to try to get them into one building if we can. There are thousands and thousands of checks which have been sent out which are in bags stored away, and there are also all kinds of documents which ought to be filed. If we have to employ people at large salaries to do that, as under this proposed system we would have to do, it would be wrong and cost a great deal of unnecessary expense, when you can hire men for eight or nine hundred dollars to attend to the filing of the checks.

The Comptroller General has said that this will be an ideal system of salaries when he gets his department organized, but while we are going through this evolution, or period of reorganization, we can employ men at much lower salaries than are fixed here. The Comptroller General does not propose to increase one man's salary, but he proposes to employ a lot of men at smaller salaries than are indicated in the House provision.

Under this new system, by which we abolished all the auditing offices, we left the comptroller with 10 large buildings filled with records, and he is trying to get them under one system, and he says he can employ men at lower salaries than those fixed by the House. That is the reason why I am supporting this amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I gather from what the Senator from Wyoming said that we do not really save anything by it, because this lump-sum appropriation of $2,496,101—

Mr. OVERMAN. The amount is the same, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I think the Senator is wrong.

Mr. WARREN. I said there was $27,500 additional for the rent of this new building, to be available after the 1st of July.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the lump sum of $2,496,101 is $27,500 more than the items in the House provision would aggregate?

Mr. OVERMAN. This includes the rent of one building, and the Comptroller General must have another building.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is really an increase over the House estimate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not as to the system I have been talking about. That is simply for the rent of a building.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps I did not explain that fully. The Senator is correct as to the amount the Comptroller General deems necessary to have expended, but he will employ 20 or 30 or more men for the same money if he does not have to pay the large salaries which are included in the proposed statutory plan.

Mr. FLETCHER. What I was trying to get at was the difference between this total amount, the lump sum, and the amount of appropriation under the House provision.

Mr. WARREN. The difference is $27,500; and that is to cover the rent of a building.

Mr. KING. If it is merely desired to employ a larger number of individuals to do what might be denominated temporary clerical work and a less number of higher paid employees, that could easily be accomplished by eliminating from the House text a number of items, covering what are called higher grade men, who, I understand, are not desired, and then provide for the employment of 20 or 30 or 40 individuals, or whatever number is necessary, at a compensation not to exceed a certain amount, the aggregate being within the total appropriation provided in this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator let me read one paragraph just at this point?

Mr. KING. Let me say that I have read all the testimony taken before the House committee and the Senate committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Probably the Senate ought to hear it. The Comptroller General said:

To illustrate what I mean by neglect, when we came into existence on July 1 of last year we discovered in the Veterans' Bureau alone about 11,000,000 checks issued by the old War Risk Bureau that were in mail sacks and never had been sorted, and thousands of requests from soldiers, from Members of the Senate and Members of the House, and from relatives of soldiers asking about payments that should have been made during the progress of the war.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator mean that there are 11,000,000 checks or checks amounting to $11,000,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. Eleven million checks.

Mr. WARREN. Eleven million in number.

Mr. OVERMAN. And they are stored there now in old sacks and bags, and he has to get them and sort them out. He said further:

We could not answer those requests for information, because we could not find the checks. We used all the cheap labor we had, and hired some other cheap labor. We pay $900 and $1,000 a year for those check sorters; and we rushed that work, realizing that it was the right thing to do not to keep the soldiers out of information or money that was coming to them, with the result that now those checks are all sorted, and we are in a position to give 15-minute service on any inquiry coming to us with reference to any payment due to a soldier from the beginning of the war up to the present moment.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that the evil of which he now complains, or rather the condition to which he refers, was brought about by this very policy. We appropriated large sums for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance when Mr. Cholmeley Jones and others were in charge; these sums amounted to hundreds of millions of dollars. It was intended that the disabled soldiers and their dependents should be amply provided for, and that those entitled to insurance benefits should be fully paid. I am afraid that in the administration of the law there were too many employees—high-priced men and low-priced men—too much machinery, too much red tape. Inefficiency manifested itself and waste resulted. These checks referred to by the Senator from North Carolina accumulated and many soldiers who were entitled to relief were denied for indefinite periods that which was clearly their due. There is still inefficiency and waste, if I am to believe all the reports brought to my attention, in the administration of the laws dealing with the Veterans' Bureau and the hospitalization plan of the Government. It is now proposed to continue the lump-sum plan and permit the employment, practically without limit, of thousands of employees to administer the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose that to be true, it is no answer to the proposition we have before us. Since the present official has been in charge of this system, with $10,000,000 and 10 different combinations all put under him and all this chaos turned over to him, he must meet that situation. That has been done since the last appropriation. If the previous officials were at fault, and perhaps they were, as the Senator says, the present official ought not to be held responsible for it.

Mr. KING. The lump-sum appropriation is responsible for the chaos, and now the Senator thinks a lump-sum appropriation will relieve us of chaos.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether it will or not.

Mr. KING. If a lump-sum appropriation produces chaos, let us hope that a lump-sum appropriation will eliminate chaos on the theory that like cures like. The Senator will remember the Latin maxim, similia similibus curantur.

I believe it is exceedingly unwise, and I register my protest against the policy that looks to a continuation of the lump-sum plan. If the arguments in favor of it exist here, then the argument will be much stronger for the maintenance of such a policy, and this will be pointed to as a precedent to continue the policy of lump-sum appropriations when the bill to reorganize the departments and coordinate agencies is before us for consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. It will never be continued, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. KING. While it is not particularly pertinent to the pending amendment, it is pertinent to the bill as a whole, and I should like to inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge whether he can advise us as to the comparative cost of all the agencies, departments, bureaus, and instrumentalities provided for in the pending bill and the same agencies, bureaus, departments, and instrumentalities for the present fiscal year and the preceding fiscal year. I am not making any criticism, but the Senator will see that under the report submitted it is impossible to institute a comparison between the various agencies and departments for the coming year and the agencies and departments for the past year. Because of this consolidation and coordinating we can not say that the cost for any particular item was the same last year as this year, because that item may be merged with some other item, but in the aggregate covering the same governmental agencies, the same governmental administration. Will the Senator advise us whether there have been any economies or whether the same amount in the aggregate is found in this bill as in the bill for the present fiscal year?

Mr. WARREN. The amount appropriated by the pending bill is larger than ever before, because of the immense addition for disabled soldiers; that is, compensation, vocational training, and hospitalization. I think I have exactly the figures. The amount in the pending bill for the purposes I have mentioned is $406,038,843.45. Then there is an item for the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation of $100,459,000. Those two amounts together to over a half billion dollars, and yet the smaller amounts we are passing on here, small in comparison, are all lower than or, if not lower, only equal to what we have spent heretofore. The Senator naturally in his comparisons must make allowance for these two large sums.

Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the matter of the disabled soldiers. It may be unavoidable, but in my opinion some of this money should not be expended. It serves no good purpose. I believe that every disabled soldier should have every possible care that is needed, but when it comes to having 32,000 to 35,000 in the hospitals, where hundreds of them are adjudged by the physicians who care for them to be sufficiently recovered to go out into the world, it seems that the various appropriations we have made, as the result of one Sweet bill after another, have gotten the pay so high that the compensation for a man with a family or even a single man, added to his allowance for vocational education, for hospitalization, and general support, is more than he can earn in any other way, and so it suits some of them better to live in a hospital than elsewhere.

We never had an army, and probably never will have, but what there will be some "coffee coolers." There have been some men even in the volunteer service whom we have had to watch, and still more, perhaps, in a drafted service. They were the first ones after the Civil War, and all other wars, who called for help from the Government, because the young men and the old men of vigor and honesty seek to support themselves, if able, rather than to rely upon the Government.

I wish it distinctly understood that not a word of what I am saying applies to those noble heroes who actually need and ought to have the support of the Government. I have no desire to stint or in any way to take from that which is necessary for them. But the latest maneuver, if I may be allowed to say it, is a proposition which I believe came over in the last so-called Sweet bill, which proposes to decentralize the Government Veterans' Bureau and place a lot of depots or district offices about the country. I happened to know of one of them in another State where there are between four and five hundred clerks, where they use three upper stories in a very large office building for the clerks, paying rent amounting to more than $50,000 per annum. Salaries start with five or six thousand dollars for the head, and go on down. When we multiply that by 14, and then calculate what good they have accomplished, we find that the work all has to come back here to Washington after all.

Every soldier who feels that he has been wronged or is not receiving compensation enough through his local agency writes to his Senator or his Representative in Congress, and that Senator or Representative, without knowing what the situation is, turns the letter over to his clerk and tells him to write down to Col. Forbes and recommend that this man have whatever he asks for. I have said to Director Forbes, as others have said to him, that if every request of that kind that comes from my office should be turned down, if it was done upon examination and then turned down, I would be satisfied; but the report comes from that office that "Members of the House and Senate are our superiors, and they demand these things of us, and we are satisfying them as well as we can, but we will acknowledge that there are funds creeping out that should not perhaps be paid out."

I notice that the director and his assistants were outspoken in their opinion that decentralization is not a success, and calls for $19,000,000 or $20,000,000 a year more just to carry out the idea of having these institutions nearer, in a theoretical way, but not a practical way, to the men who are to receive the benefactions.

Mr. KING. With the item of appropriations to care for disabled soldiers I am entirely in sympathy, but I have had many complaints from various parts of the United States of the vast amount of machinery employed in the administration of the vocational rehabilitation act and in the distribution of funds to disabled soldiers. I believe that the cost is entirely too much; that the overhead expenses can not be defended. In my opinion millions are wasted in superfluous machinery and in paying the salaries of inefficient and incompetent officials, as well as thousands who are wholly unnecessary.

I received word quite recently of the fact that in one city, which I shall not name, the officials administering the law demanded the most expensive office building in the city, though it resulted in turning out tenants who had been there for years. They demanded the building, said the Government must have it, took three or four floors of this costly and expensive building, and placed a large number of employees therein. I was told by one of the leading Republicans of the city that 50 per cent of the persons so employed were not needed.

The Government is imposed upon, and thousands of persons are placed in executive positions when they are not needed.

There never was a situation which so called for economy and retrenchment as that which the Government finds itself in.

Mr. OVERMAN. One instance given the committee, as I recollect it, was that of a man who got a hundred dollars a month compensation and was drawing $5,000 a year in outside employment.

Mr. KING. I was not commenting upon those who are receiving funds from the Government because of injuries. I was criticizing the enormous amount paid for administration. The Senator will correct me if I am in error, but there are hundreds and, indeed, thousands of officials of the Government employed in distributing this money to the needy—to those who are entitled to it. Thousands are employed where there should be but hundreds.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is where there is need of reform, and I wish the Senator would endeavor to bring it about. This decentralization has cost, as the Senator has stated, about $19,000,000; and I do not get half the service I did when the work was performed here in Washington. When I write for information to the bureau my letter is sent to Atlanta; an examination is made there, and then another examination is made here, and the correspondence goes from one place to another, and one never gets anywhere. I have seen similar criticisms in some of our newspapers of the bureau because of the policy of decentralization and the consequent difficulty former soldiers have in getting examinations. There is so much red tape about it that it is almost impossible to get any relief at all for the men who need it.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that Congress ought to address itself to the question of reforming the administration of this great bureau. No one desires to restrict appropriations for the wounded and the disabled. They should be liberally compensated for the injuries which they received in the service of their country; but, I repeat, there is too much expense in connection with the administration of the law; there is too much money wasted and there are too many employees of the Government engaged in distributing the money to those who are entitled to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Utah is right about that. There is where the trouble lies.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, while my friends are looking over the printed matter in connection with this subject, I desire to make a few suggestions which, it seems to me, may be very pertinent at this time. I quite agree with the criticism which has been offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] in reference to many of these questions. I am in full sympathy with cutting down the number of employees in the different departments of the Government. At one time we had something like 112,000 or 115,000 employees. That number, however, has now been reduced to between 77,000 and 80,000, as I recall.

Mr. KING. Why do we not reduce the number to about 40,000, the same as it was before the World War?

Mr. FERNALD. I was about to make a suggestion along the line of the question of the Senator from Utah. There is no reason in the world why we should not reduce the number of Government employees to less than 50,000 in the next three months. However, I desire to say to my friend from Utah that I think these matters should be taken up before the committees, and that Senators should make their criticisms there rather than on the floor of the Senate. I do not take much time in the discussion of matters on the floor; but, as my colleagues on various committees will witness and recall, I do attend committee meetings pretty faithfully. I wish to say to my friend from Utah—and I feel sure that he will heartily agree with what I have to say—that many economies may be effected by bringing these matters to the attention of the proper committees, I am going to take a few moments to state exactly what has been done in that regard in the committee of which I happen to be chairman.

That committee—the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—in years gone by has spent many million dollars; but in the three years during which I have been the chairman of that committee we have not spent a single dollar.

I desire to say that that committee has also had charge of the United States Housing Corporation, and it has been a troublesome business. That corporation operates the dormitories between here and the Union Station, which take care of more than 1,800 girls. In the operation of that business we turned over to the Government last year $25,000, which was derived from a profit of 1 cent on each meal furnished to each girl. That, I think, is a most remarkable showing. As reported the bill which the Senate now has under consideration cuts the appropriation of 1920 for the Housing Corporation from $250,000 to a little less than $70,000. I myself have been over every item of expense which is to be incurred for the officers and clerks and all those who are connected with the Housing Corporation.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. KING. As I recall reading the pending bill on yesterday, there is considerably more than $1,000,000 carried in the bill for the Housing Corporation.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Maine now says that there has been a profit of $25,000 in its operation.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. KING. The Senator, of course, does not take into account the interest upon the capital which was invested, and the money which the Government spent, running into many millions of dollars, in the Housing Corporation.

Mr. FERNALD. No. That was before my chairmanship of the committee, and that expenditure seemed necessary during the war period.

Mr. KING. Neither has the Senator taken into account the item of deterioration.

Mr. FERNALD. No; but I want the Senator from Utah to wait for just a moment until I get through, for I am not advocating the Government going into that sort of business. I have always maintained when those buildings need to be repaired to any great extent it will be necessary for the Government to go out of that business, for, in my judgment, the Government can not conduct any kind of business successfully.

However, I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the case of all of the Government departments, if everybody connected with them, and particularly the committees of Congress, should undertake to cut down the appropriations, that result may be accomplished. The appropriation provided for the Housing Corporation is only $67,750, the sum of $70,000 having originally been asked for. I went over the amount paid each individual involved and found that the sum in the aggregate amounted to $67,750; so I suggested to the chairman that that exact amount should be appropriated. Therefore I hope that when we reach that particular item there will be no criticism of it. Furthermore, something like $27,000,000 worth of property at this time is handled by the United States Housing Corporation. It was handled last year for 0.63 per cent. I doubt if there is any commercial house in the country that would handle a business of that size at so low a cost as that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether all that property is in the District of Columbia?

Mr. FERNALD. No; it is scattered over 38 States.

Mr. KING. Why is it not sold?

Mr. FERNALD. We are selling it just as fast as we can. We have already sold about $40,000,000 worth, and it is being advertised and sold just as rapidly as possible.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator about what proportion of the property is in the District of Columbia?

Mr. FERNALD. I am unable to state the exact proportion, but a considerable percentage of the property is located here. We turned in last year $3,451,000 proceeds derived from sales. Much of this property is sold to tenants who are working in the navy yards and other Government establishments on the basis of percentage payments each year; so that it will be necessary for a long time to continue business relations with those to whom the property has been sold; but I am going to suggest at no late date that this work be turned over to the Treasury Department so as to do away entirely with the Housing Corporation. When, however, it is considered that we have cut the number of employees of that corporation something over 1,000 in 1920 to 33 at the present time I think it will be conceded that we have made a pretty good advance along the line of economy.

I speak of this one activity because the Senator from Utah and I have been quite in accord on these matters. He has and I have time and again in the Senate suggested that the different commissions which are constantly being created and located all over the country to do one thing and another are costing the people millions and millions of dollars. Every one of these matters should be treated as a business proposition, and, as I take a little pride in the management of the Housing Corporation, while the Senate had this matter under consideration and the Senator from Utah was discussing it, I wanted merely to say that there are some departments of the Government which are handled in an economical and business way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is gratifying to know that we have a business man in the Senate who is giving attention to these important matters. The State of Maine is to be congratulated upon sending us a shrewd business Yankee who applies business principles to the affairs of the Government. I wish that every department could make as fine a showing as the department which is controlled by the Senator's committee.

But, Mr. President, let me say, not by way of criticism at all with respect to the agency with which he is now connected, that we expended several hundred million dollars in the erection of the buildings controlled by the Housing Corporation, which are now in a sense, so far as those which have not been disposed of are concerned, under his control. I presume if we should figure up all that was spent in the District of Columbia and vicinity and at and near the navy yards and in other places where houses were constructed by the United States, the amount involved would be found to aggregate hundreds of millions of dollars. It is quite likely that when the final liquidation of those enterprises shall have been consummated the Government will be out 75 to 90 per cent of the cost of the buildings and grounds; in other words, the Government will lose hundreds of millions of dollars in its housing schemes and projects. I hope the Senator from Maine will speedily get rid of the various buildings now in his charge and not needed by the Government and cover into the Treasury of the United States the amounts received therefrom.

Mr. FERNALD. I am in entire accord with the Senator, and we are doing that just as rapidly as possible.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming or the Senator from Washington—I think the latter can answer my question—if it is not a fact that appropriation bills as framed by the House and the Senate committees contain less in the aggregate than the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is true.

Mr. KING. We have heard so much about the Budget, Mr. President, and about the great economies and saving that have been effectuated by the Budget system that one becomes somewhat nauseated with the constant repetition of the theme by the apologists for the administration. The other day we were regaled with a florid account of the meeting of several hundred Federal employees who were supposed to have had something to do with the Budget Bureau. The President addressed the gathering, and there was much glorification over the reforms which have been wrought. Gen. Dawes was there and a number of brooms were exhibited.

Let me add that I have confidence in Gen. Dawes, and if he had the power he would achieve real reforms. But he is hampered and restricted; as a result nothing substantial has been done by the Bureau of the Budget. We were told that there had been more than $100,000,000 saved in a given period by the Budget organization. Of course, that statement is accurate. Sometime ago when a statement was made by the administration to the effect that many millions of dollars had been saved—I have forgotten the exact amount—I offered an innocent resolution directing the Appropriations Committee to ascertain the amount that had been saved and recapture it and turn it into the Treasury. I was afraid the amount might take wings and fly away, so I was eager to have it secure in the Treasury. The resolution has not been heard of, and no money has been turned into the Treasury. The Senate committee and the House committee have been more economical than the Budget organization or the executive officers, and, in my opinion, they always will be.

I would rather trust the Senate committee and the House committee with respect to the appropriations than the executive officials of the Government. If we want economy, the economies must be effectuated by the Senators and Representatives and not by executive departments or officials. Executive officers have always desired to extend their authority, their jurisdiction, their power, to increase their emoluments, and to multiply the personnel under their jurisdiction or in the departments or agencies with which they were identified.

The burden of working reforms in the administration of the Government and in effectuating economies rests ultimately with Congress. If we had more Senators such as the Senator from Maine there would be a genuine movement to secure a reduction of the expenses of the Government.

I make the prediction, Mr. President, that, with all the economies which have been boasted of by the apologists for the administration and the boasted improvement spoken of by the Budget organization and others in the executive departments of the Government, the appropriations for the coming year will be four hundred million or five hundred million dollars in excess of what they should be.

I have looked in vain in the recommendations of the Budget authorities for improvements and reforms so much needed. In what I have said I am making no criticism of Gen. Dawes. I have said, and repeat, he can not row against the bureaucratic tide. I have looked in vain from this administration for that integration of agencies, that coordination of administrative bureaus, that will bring about the needed reforms in the Government.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] has stated that here in the District there are more than 70,000—I think he said 80,000—employees. Before the war there were from 37,000 to 40,000. Where are the changes? Where are the reforms? I repeat, the reductions in expenses, wherever occurring, are due to the House and the Senate. I pause here long enough to express my admiration of the work being done by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, Mr. MADDEN. I also congratulate my friend from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] for the fine work that he is doing, but he has not cut the appropriations enough. The Appropriations Committees have not cut enough. We have yielded too much to the importunities of executive officers, and we will continue appropriating these millions and billions, hundreds of millions of which ought not to be appropriated, until the people themselves, groaning beneath the burdens, will, with irresistible demand, compel us to work the economies and reforms in the administration which are imperatively needed.

Mr. President, it seems as if democratic governments do not know what reforms and economies are. It has been said by scholars and students and publicists that the most uneconomical and inefficient administrations in the world are found in democratic governments. I am afraid it is true. We have introduced here what we call the civil-service principle. Can anybody say that it has improved the administration of the Government? Certainly it has not brought any reforms, and I have looked in vain to find improvements. The civil service has been a sham and a delusion from the beginning, and in its administration to-day it has not changed.

Mr. President, as the Senator states, this bill contains in the aggregate millions more than similar bills or previous appropriation bills comprising the same subjects. When we get through meeting the deficiency bills, and when we make the appropriations for the coming fiscal year, I predict that for the year 1922 there will be no reforms, there will be no economies; the appropriations will be far greater than were stated; and for the fiscal year 1923 the appropriations will be hundreds of millions of dollars in excess of what they should be. We will see how much economy is practiced when we reach the naval bill and the Army bill. We will see whether the administration is in good faith in its professions of retrenchment. I offered a resolution to reduce the Navy to 50,000 and the Army to 75,000. It will soon become apparent whether there will be reforms in the Army and in the Navy. The appropriation bills that have come before us, showing, through the efforts of the committees—not the efforts of the executive departments—some improvements and some reforms do not go far enough. I regret that the bill before us does not carry in the neighborhood of forty to fifty million dollars less than it does. Those cuts, of course, should not be made in the appropriations for the wounded soldiers and the disabled soldiers; but there should be a large cut in the appropriations for the administration of that department, and there should be very large cuts in other administrative branches that are provided for in this bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may we proceed with the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment on page 12, beginning with line 4, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, under the subhead "General Accounting Office," it is proposed to strike out lines 4 to 24, both inclusive, and on page 13 to strike out lines 1 to 14, both inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert:

For carrying out the provisions of the act of June 10, 1921, establishing the General Accounting Office, including salaries of officers and employees, traveling expenses and per diem in lieu of subsistence while absent on official business outside the District of Columbia not to exceed $50,000, rent, purchase, and exchange of books, and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $2,496,101.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 14, line 10, to strike out "$60,000" and to insert "$65,725," so as to read:

Salaries: For officers, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia necessary to collect and account for the receipts from the sale of properties and the receipts from the operation of unsold properties of the United States Housing Corporation, the Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation, property commandeered by the United States through the Secretary of Labor, and to collect the amounts advanced to transportation facilities and others, $65,725.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I note there an increase in the amount over the appropriation carried by the House bill. Is there any explanation for that?

Mr. WARREN. That is a matter pertaining to the subject which the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] was just discussing.

Mr. KING. That is the item to which the Senator from Maine referred, is it?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 1, on page 16, the last clause read being as follows:

In all, $1,050,700.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, to correct the total just read, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 16, line 1, it is proposed to strike out "$1,050,700" and in lieu thereof to insert "$1,056,425."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator how the receipts from the rents compare with this outlay—what they yield in comparison with what we are paying out?

Mr. WARREN. The boarding houses, if I may put it that way, are making a little money. I think they cleared about $30,000 last year. Of course, all that money goes into the Treasury, and we have to appropriate it again.

As to the real estate, the rentals and sales, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], in discussing the matter a few moments ago, said that it was being disposed of at the rate of about $3,000,000 or $3,500,000 a year. The money comes in in partial payments and is turned in; but there is a great deal more to follow in the years to come.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know but that the Senator might have the figures showing what the Government had actually received outside of the sale of property—what we are actually receiving as rents from this property.

Mr. WARREN. I do not happen to have it at hand here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 8 on page 16, the last paragraph read being as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

For 11 commissioners, at $12,000 each; secretary, $7,500; in all, $139,500.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, with respect to the appropriations carried under this heading, whether there is any limitation upon any of the employees as to their compensation, except the commissioners themselves and the secretary?

Mr. WARREN. There is not, to my knowledge. The appropriation is some hundreds of thousands of dollars less than it has been heretofore—I should say between four and five hundred thousand dollars less. That is one place that has been exceptional in this Government in many ways. They have established what may be called a high court, and we have placed them, of course, not above the Supreme Court of the United States but, we might say, nearly or quite next to them. The original law which initiated this commission of course provided the number of commissioners and their salaries. That has been changed to some extent, but as to the other amounts it is the one lump sum that has run ever since it was inaugurated.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether schedules have been submitted to the committees showing the compensation of the various employees?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I will state to the Senator that last year we obtained a list from, I think, every existing institution that was paying under a lump sum, so that we have among our files of last year all of those items, the salary of every employee.

Mr. KING. How do they compare with the salaries paid in other departments of the Government for similar service?

Mr. WARREN. There are a number of high-class positions, quite a number of attorneys, receiving quite large salaries. I should say, of the two, taking them all together, they are more liberal. I will not say taking the character or supposed character of the men; but they run higher, of course, than institutions of what might be called less importance.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know how the salaries compare with those paid in the Shipping Board?

Mr. WARREN. The salaries paid to employees of the Shipping Board, aside from three or four salaries, I think are less than these are for the attorneys, and so forth; but there are two or three persons in the employ of the Shipping Board who have been receiving $35,000 each.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator recall the maximum amount paid for salaries under the Interstate Commerce Commission—the highest salary paid to officials?

Mr. WARREN. I do not recall it now, but it is probably something less than the salaries of the commissioners themselves, unless it is for temporary employment. In that case it might be more.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether or not the number of employees has increased?

Mr. WARREN. I think it can not have increased, from the fact that we are cutting down the appropriations for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. KING. Is that reduction with respect to the employees, or is it found in the item which provides for the ascertainment of the physical value of the railroads of the United States? The Senator will recall that a great many millions have been spent there.

Mr. WARREN. I recall it, and it has gone over a number of years, and the roads have changed very materially, and it will have to be gone over additional times after the first. There are some reductions in that, and there are reductions in the general line, and also in some lines an increase. For instance, legislation from time to time places additional duties on them. In the railroad line, outside of the physical valuation, as the Senator knows, in the last year or two we have made considerable increases in their duties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Assistant Secretary read to line 7, page 19, the last paragraph read being as follows:

For printing and binding, $150,000, including not to exceed $10,000 to print and furnish to the States at cost report-form blanks; and including not to exceed $1,500 for printing orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, other than that done at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he would not accept an amendment on page 19, to strike out, on line 5, all after the word "blanks," so as to eliminate the words:

And including not to exceed $1,500 for printing orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, other than that done at the Government Printing Office.

That is now entirely in the control of the Joint Committee on Printing as to every other department.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that I consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Printing as to that, and while he proposed an amendment, he said that it meant no possible difference in the amount of money, and as they had provided for it in that way, he did not object to it. If the Senator wishes, I can offer the amendment at this time, on page 19, line 5, after the word "blanks," to strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what I suggested.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, we have an amendment to offer which alludes to another matter, but the law requires it, and I send it to the desk to be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 7, insert the following:

INTERSTATE GOVERNMENTAL COMMISSION, COLORADO RIVER.

For salaries and expenses as authorized in the act approved August 19, 1921, entitled "An act to permit a compact or agreement between the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming, respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River, and for other purposes," to be immediately available and to continue available during the fiscal year 1923, $10,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, under whose jurisdiction is that appropriation?

Mr. WARREN. The commission is composed of one man representing the Government of the United States and one member, the governor or an appointee of the governor, from each of the several States mentioned. The Government's appointee is the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, and, of course, he draws no salary for this work. This appropriation is to pay the expenses of meetings and traveling expenses. We have made no appropriation heretofore, and as they will have to assemble very soon to continue the work, we have made the appropriation immediately available. It simply carries out the law.

Mr. KING. I know they recently met and the work was not completed, and, as the Senator has said, perhaps many meetings will be required before a satisfactory adjustment of a very important matter shall have been reached. I would like to ask the Senator, before that amendment is passed upon, as I have to step out a moment, to let the next item, for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, be passed over temporarily. I want to confer with the Senator from Washington, who is absent from the Chamber, with respect to that item.

Mr. WARREN. Without objection, I will ask that that be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over temporarily. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with line 1, page 20.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 23, line 17, to strike out "$3,600" and to insert in lieu thereof "$4,000."

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Wyoming the necessity of raising the amount given by the House. It would lead to conflict between the two bodies.

Mr. WARREN. When the Senator says the two bodies, does he mean the House and the Senate?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Since the bill passed the House there have been changes in the responsibilities, and it will be necessary to keep an experienced man there. They have a most excellent man, who had intended to take more lucrative employment, and his chief has asked for $4,500, so we have made it $4,000.

Mr. KING. Let him go and let them get somebody else.

Mr. WARREN. The Government would have to pay the price, considering the responsibility this man has. He has to take charge, under the United States officer who is the head of public buildings and grounds, of all of these Government buildings, of which, as the Senator knows, there are a great number. Others have just been turned over, including, I understand, the big Interior Department Building; and those buildings, and all the men who work under the head of the public buildings and grounds, are superintended by this particular man I am speaking of. It does not make any difference whether it is this man or some other man. I think the place is really worth $4,000.

Mr. KING. While the Senator has the floor, may I interrogate him just a moment in order to avoid further observations later on? I notice in the bill provisions for a large number of employees in the State, War, and Navy Building—assistant superintendent, a large number of clerks and engineers, lieutenants, electricians, plumbers, and skilled laborers, chauffeurs, 14 firemen, 15 elevator conductors, 48 laborers, a gardener, 3 attendants; then in the Walker Johnson Building a large number of employees; in the Potomac Park office building a very large number of employees, including clerks. I do not know why they need so many clerks. There is provision for a large number of carpenters and general mechanics, a large number of guards, 23 lieutenants, 23 sergeants, 23 again, 140 laborers, just in the Potomac Park building, 21 additional employees; then in the Mall building a large number of clerks and employees; temporary building, Virginia Avenue, a great number of employees; temporary buildings, B and C Streets, Twentieth and Twenty-third Streets NW., a great number of employees—assistant superintendents, clerks, principal clerks, clerks of classes 1, 2, and 3, messengers, a large number of firemen, and a great number of laborers, so that in those buildings covered by the items to which I have referred, though I have not tabulated the number, I think there are probably a thousand employees provided for just to take care of a few buildings.

Mr. WARREN. The expression "a few buildings" does not state the case fairly at all. It is a mile square or more of buildings, if they were in shape to measure them. The number of employees has been cut down largely. These are largely war matters, matters which have hung over from the war, until we can get down to a different basis. The Secretary of War has been able to cut from sixty-odd thousand employees down to five thousand and some, and I think that is about as fast as the Senator could expect us to cut. These are cut down until every man is done away with who could be spared with safety.

Mr. KING. Those sixty-odd thousand the Senator speaks of were not in Washington. They were in various camps and cantonments, and places where Government storehouses are located.

Mr. WARREN. They were in Washington and hereabout, not all of them in Washington, but they were all in the direct employ of the War Department. This matter of public buildings we have cut down $179,440, while taking on some additional work from other departments—that is, where they were doing their own janitor and watchmen work—so that the whole reduction does not appear in this $179,000.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not mean, of course, that there was only $179,000 appropriated in all of the items to which I have referred?

Mr. WARREN. No; I mean it is that much less than for the present fiscal year.

Mr. KING. If that is all the reduction, then it is wholly inadequate.

Mr. WARREN. I have already said that it was not all the reduction. I thought the Senator understood me.

Mr. KING. I did not understand that.

Mr. WARREN. Some of the buildings which have been turned over later of course had their groups of employees, who have been dispensed with, to some extent at least, because of the taking over by this particular branch.

Mr. KING. The War Department, under the guise of caring for surplus material following the war, had a very large number of employees, thousands of them. As I recall, when the last Army bill was under consideration it was disclosed that there were in these camps substantially as many clerks and employees as there were soldiers. We had in the department following the war a large number, thousands, upon the theory that they were needed to dispose of the surplus proceeds following the war and to adjust the records and put them in shape. One officer of the War Department insisted upon having a large number of men in order to get the files and the records in proper shape, showing the enlistments and discharges. I have forgotten the number, but it went into the thousands, who were in that one bureau or agency of the War Department. I think the War Department has been grossly extravagant in the past, and I am not sure that the present bill reveals the fact that it is free from criticism now on account of its extravagance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 9, page 24.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE WAGES OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to avail myself of the liberality of our rules to submit some observations upon the standard of wages paid to labor at this time. I am quite conscious of the fact that whoever undertakes to speak a word for labor at this time assumes something of a burden in view of the propaganda that has been made by the great industrial organizations of the country to reduce the wages of all labor. But throughout my public life I have never taken the easier way. I have tried as best I could from my point of view to render a public service whenever it was needed. I believe that the time has come to say a word in opposition to the general and widespread movement in the country to "take it out" of labor in order to reduce the cost of living.

Everyone feels the burden of high prices. They have not been greatly reduced since the war period. But there has been a general and well-organized movement to return to what are called normal conditions by way of reducing the wages of labor, to reduce the cost of meat and flour and steel and transportation by "deflating" labor. I think that the conditions which confront the American people to-day are the culmination of a false and wicked economic system, which is encouraged, sustained, and fostered by our National Government.

For more than a quarter of a century great business organizations have been effecting combinations in practically every line of production, the purpose of which has been to suppress competition and build up a monopoly control of prices in every line, but in manufactured products especially. This has resulted in squeezing the farmer and in plundering the consumer to the limit of the power of these great organizations and business combinations, in bullying and oppressing labor, in so far as it has been possible, in every branch of industry.

To meet that situation, to meet the organization power of the enormous aggregations of capital engaged in what we may term big business, the wage earners have, in the face of the bitterest opposition, endeavored to organize to the end that they might cooperate and collectively bargain with their employers, the great combinations. In this they have been only partially successful. Only a small minority are organized.

I do not believe there is anyone on the floor of the Senate who will undertake to say that there is any branch of what may be termed big business in the country that is not thoroughly and completely organized, giving them the power that enables them to dictate prices and to control everything that pertains to their business. And yet, Mr. President, there has been created in this country a sentiment against any organization on the part of labor to meet this condition in the industrial world.

Even a little group of Members of this body, representing agricultural constituencies, realizing that the farmer has been one of the victims of this complete organization of capital and power in the industrial world, has been subjected to every sort of criticism and attack. It has not been confined to the representatives of the great, powerful industries.

The President of the United States, his Secretary of War, and other members of his official family, have engaged in making an attack upon those Senators who have sought relief in view of the economic embarrassment that now afflicts agriculture as a result of the organization of big business into combinations and trusts to control everything the farmer buys and everything the farmer sells. This humble, this almost pitifully weak attempt to assemble together a few Senators in this body representing agricultural constituencies, to endeavor to relieve that situation, has made them the target of attack, not only through the publications that are specially supported by industrial combinations but from the administration, attacks by the President in person and by members of his official family.

So distressing is the situation of agriculture that even the administration has thought it necessary to assemble a conference to consider that situation, and yet any movement on the part of representatives of agricultural constituencies looking to a direct benefit to agriculture through legislation, because it impinges upon the system of organized monopoly, is made the subject of attack from official sources of the highest order. Emanating from the same sources are these attacks that are made upon labor's attempt to resist the same encroachment.

Labor has been able to organize, as I said, to the limited extent of about 25 per cent of the wage earners of the country, not a very alarming situation. Of course, the farmers, widely scattered over the whole country, find it next to impossible to effect any sort of comprehensive movement that shall afford them relief. They have been making some endeavors in that direction. They have attempted defensive organizations, just as labor has attempted to effect and has partially succeeded in effecting organizations for precisely the same purpose.

Mr. President, the great business combinations not only control our markets but they are all-powerful in government. There is not a Senator who would dare challenge the statement that they are very potential in the national conventions of each of the political parties of the country; that they are very powerful in legislation; and that they are very potential in the selection of Federal judges on the bench.

The individual, be he farmer, laborer, or consumer, is utterly helpless under existing conditions. He can not stand alone against organized business in combinations. The farmer, the laborer, and the consumer have a common interest. They do not enjoy any Government privilege or any advantage derived from legislation. They have alike been exploited by the privileged monopolies.

Mr. President, I wish to say that the farmers, I think, have a large and very direct interest in seeing that the wage earners and the men and women throughout the Nation who are working on salaries are constantly employed under the most favorable conditions. I believe that the farmers of the country ought to make their cause his cause, and, I think, for sound economic reasons. They constitute the great body of the farmer's market for all his staples.

When millions of workers are unemployed, when the purchasing power of tens of millions of those who are employed is unduly curtailed, it is inevitable that the market for everything the farmer produces suffers the greatest depression.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of Senators who do me the honor to listen to me to a very brief discussion of the relation of wages to the cost of living.

WAGES AND THE COST OF LIVING.

When the war ended and the American people found time to look after affairs at home they demanded a reckoning with those responsible for the riot of plunder which ruled in American business.

While the war was on the people blindly accepted the mounting costs of living as a part of the war burden. There was no time to investigate its cause; no facts upon which to determine as to its justice.

But when the war was over and prices continued to soar, when living cost 25 per cent more in 1919 than in 1918, and in 1920 cost 17 per cent more than in 1919, the limit of forbearance had been reached. The storm broke. The American people demanded that the robbers who were plundering the public after the war be called to account. And, sir, the robbers were ready to hunt down the enemy of society; the robbers themselves were ready to raise the cry of "Stop thief" and to lead an indignant public off on a false trail.

They raised a great hue and cry against labor. They claimed that the unions had forced enormous wage advances, and that this had lifted the general wage level and thus caused the unprecedented increase in prices.

Mr. President, there is not the slightest chance in the world that those really chargeable with the economic wrongs which the public suffers will ever be justly punished, but at least the responsibility should be placed where it belongs.

I have undertaken as best I can that task. I will say now that you can not put it on labor, and if Senators will give me their attention here this afternoon I will prove that assertion.

I lay down certain propositions here which are economically true and admit of no denial.

1. The nominal increase in wages has been uniformly less than the increase in the cost of living each year since the war.

I hope Senators will let that sink into their minds, for that is the first proposition I start with. I repeat it. I say "the nominal increase in wages," because I am going to distinguish in what I have to say here to-day between real wages, actual wages as measured by their purchasing power, and nominal wages. "The nominal increase in wages," I repeat, has been uniformly less than the increase in the cost of living each year since the war.

I want to amend that statement; I want to say not only since the war but during the war and since the war as well.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator if, for the purpose of his comparison, when he uses the expression "since the war" he means since the armistice?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No.

Mr. NORRIS. What does the Senator mean?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to withdraw the phrase "since the war"; I want to amend my statement by saying the nominal increase in wages has been uniformly less than the increase in the cost of living each year while the war was on and since the war closed. I broaden the statement, I correct it, because I know that I can support my amended statement.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator from Wisconsin means, as I understand him—I want to understand the proposition correctly, if I can—that the nominal increase in wages of labor has been less than the increase in the cost of living each year since the beginning of the war?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. At every stage.

Mr. KING. And I might say, if the Senator will pardon me, that in the District of Columbia one of the principal causes contributing to the distress of the people has been the enormously high rents, which, instead of going down, have increased here nearly 100 per cent in the last year.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and that has been despite the attempt of Congress to reduce rents.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; the feeble attempt of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; feeble and unsuccessful.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will state my propositions again in order to have them appear in the Record in a connected way. I lay down certain propositions here which are economically true and admit of no denial:

1. The nominal increase in wages has been uniformly less than the increase in the cost of living each year during the war and every year since the war.

2. The nominal increase in wages has followed and not preceded the increase in the cost of living.

3. Whatever nominal increase there has been in wages since the outbreak of the European war in 1914 has been forced by the increased cost of living, unjustly imposed upon the public by the war profiteers. Listen, sirs, wage advances have been one of the effects of high prices and not the cause of high prices.

A table compiled by the United States Department of Labor conclusively establishes these propositions, and shows in the most graphic manner how far behind the cost of living the wages of union labor trailed even during and since the war period when "high" wages have prevailed.

The comparison of this table, which I wish to have printed in the Record, Mr. President, in connection with my remarks, is made with 100 as the base in 1913. I wish to read, very hurriedly and very briefly, the percentages in the table for the consideration of Senators.

I start with 1913.

Taking 100 as the base for wages and 100 as the base for the cost of living, in 1914 the union wage rate had advanced to 102. The cost of living had advanced to 103.

In 1915 the union wage rate still stood at 102, but the cost of living had advanced to 105.1.

In 1916 the union wage rate had advanced from 102 to 106, but the cost of living had advanced from 105 to 118.3.

In 1917 the union wage rate had advanced to 112, but the cost of living that year had advanced to 142.4.

In 1918 the union wage rate had advanced to 130, but the cost of living had advanced that year to 174.4, as shown by the report of the Department of Labor.

Who is responsible for this increase in the cost of living? Was it due to the increased cost in wages? No, no.

In 1919 the union wage rate had been advanced to 148 from 130 the year before, but the cost of living had gone up to 199.3. If the union wage rate and the general scale of wages had not advanced somewhat, you would have had starvation everywhere in the country.

In 1920 the union wage rate had advanced to 189, but the cost of living, for which there was some responsibility attaching to somebody besides labor, had advanced to 216.5. The peak was reached in 1920, with the wages of union labor showing an increase of 89 per cent and the cost of living an increase of 116 per cent over 1913.

I ask unanimous consent that the table to which I have referred be inserted entire in the Record at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the Record.

The table referred to is as follows:

The comparison is made with 100 as the base in 1913.

Year.	Union wage rate.	Cost of living.
1913.....	100	100
1914.....	102	103
1915.....	102	105.1
1916.....	106	118.3
1917.....	112	142.4
1918.....	130	174.4
1919.....	148	199.3
1920.....	189	216.5

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not once during the period from 1913 to 1920 did the wages received by organized labor breast or reach the level of the steadily mounting cost of living. Wage advances lagged behind, and far behind, price advances throughout all this period of profiteering.

Mr. President, labor has struggled in the face of strongly opposing odds to maintain old standards of living, and it has lost in the struggle. Nominal wages may be high, but I say here now what I have contended on this floor again and again for three years and more, that real wages are low; and I am going to prove it this afternoon.

The total earnings of a laborer at the end of the week—listen to this statement—will buy less food and clothing and fuel to-day than they would buy before the war. In fact, sir, real wages have actually declined, not only during the period of the European war, but real wages have actually declined in this country for a period of 20 years, when you measure the wages that the man earns by the purchasing power of his labor, and that is the way he has to measure it; and I am appealing to Senators here this afternoon to get a new point of view of this problem.

I am coming now to fix the responsibility for the increased cost of living which has been the cause of despair to the American people for a period of many years. The responsibility does not rest upon labor. I will tell you where the responsibility rests.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THE HIGH COST OF LIVING?

In a critical study of the relation between wages and the increased cost of living, Prof. William Jett Lauck, the economist, made an analysis for the years 1912 to 1918, inclusive, of the financial reports of all corporations having an annual income of $1,000,000 or more, in the lines of business in which the ordinary consumer is particularly interested, as reported in Moody's and Poor's Financial Manuals. Mr. President, I do not think wide public attention has ever been called to this great, this monumental service which Prof. Lauck rendered; but these facts will reach the public finally, and their consideration will help to settle the question of the title to some seats on this floor before another November passes; and therefore I am going to put them into the Record. These corporations were shown to have taken $800,000,000 more in annual profits on the average for the years 1916, 1917, and 1918 than for the three-year period of 1912, 1913, and 1914; and the figures for production showed conclusively that the increased profits were not due to increased production. They were due to the fact that the corporation took a larger proportion of every dollar spent by the purchaser. The corporation took that.

These corporations, typical of the practices of all—now, just get this—nearly trebled their average net income on capital stock during the period covered by Prof. Lauck's studies. That they have continued to fleece the public, the increased prices for 1919 and 1920 and present prices conclusively prove.

These great profiteering organizations in every line of business raised prices until the people could no longer meet their extortionate demands. They were confronted with the alternative of reducing their profits or cutting the wages of labor. They turned upon labor. For more than a year they have been making war on labor unions, and charging labor with responsibility for high living costs.

This attack on labor in the end will fail. There will be great hardship and suffering, but in the end the truth will prevail. Labor will be vindicated, and will come out of the battle with a solidarity welded in the fire of common suffering, a great fighting force in the eternal struggle between the masses and privileged monopoly.

Mr. President, I address myself especially to-day to a consideration of the wages of the railway employees of the country. I do this at this time because the railroad corporations appear to have effected a combination with certain leaders of one or more of the farm organizations to aid in the propaganda to create public sentiment against the present wage scale of railway employees. I believe that all farmers' organizations would better serve the interests of agriculture in securing a substantial reduction in transportation rates by repealing all provisions of the Esch-Cummins law upon which the Interstate Commerce Commission fixed the value of railway property at the grossly excessive sum of $19,000,000,000 as a basis for freight and passenger rates, and also by repealing such provisions of the same law as have operated to impair and destroy the authority of State railway commissions over intrastate transportation.

I come now to speak what I believe to be the truth about the wages of railway employees.

THE WAGES OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. President, I assert as an economic fact that, under present conditions, there can be no further reduction of the wages of railway employees without national disaster. Railroad labor is receiving at present the least it can receive without sinking below the level of efficiency necessary to maintain the railroads in successful operation. It is receiving substantially no more real wages in terms of commodity values for services rendered than it received 20 years ago.

It is receiving far less than necessary to maintain itself at a comfort and decency level of existence. It is receiving so little that its buying power is greatly diminished, with consequent loss and hardship to other industries, particularly agriculture, which depends for one of its important markets upon the 10,000,000 people who derive their support from railroad labor. It is receiving so little that it has failed utterly to share in its rightful proportion in the increased productivity of the Nation's industry which has been achieved during the last quarter century.

It is no longer a question merely of justice or injustice to a class of employees; inexorable economic laws bar the way to a further reduction of the wages of railway employees.

I know that all this is contrary to the popular belief on the subject. The railroad executives, by costly propaganda which has extended to every part of the country, have created and fostered the impression that exorbitant railroad rates are due largely to exorbitant wages claimed to be paid to labor and that railroad rates can only be reduced by reducing the pay of railroad employees. There never was a more shameless, wanton, and vicious falsehood than this foisted upon the public. On another occasion I hope to deal with the cause of excessive railroad rates and the remedy. To-day I am dealing only with the single proposition that the wages of railroad employees can not be further reduced under present conditions without bringing disaster to the industries of the country.

The railway executives have filled the newspapers of the country with the figures they recently gave at the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission and before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce to show the great increase in the amount paid to labor during the last few years, and from this they seek to have the conclusion drawn that the compensation of the individual employee has been exorbitantly increased. They point out that the labor bill in 1916, before the enactment of the so-called Adamson law, was $1,468,576,000. In 1917, when the Adamson law was in effect, the compensation of employees was $1,739,482,000; that in 1918 it was $2,613,813,000; in 1919, $2,843,128,000; in 1920 that it stood at $3,698,216,000. (Interstate Commerce hearings, 1921, vol. 1, p. 14.)

They then summarize these totals and point out that the wage increase in 1917 was $270,905,000; 1918, $874,331,000; 1919, $229,315,000; 1920, $855,087,000.

They neglected to state that there were nearly 700,000 more employees in 1920 than in 1916 and that pay for extraordinary overtime in 1920 amounted to $275,000,000, or about 8 per cent of the total compensation paid to employees. (See testimony of Prof. Frank J. Warne before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, hearings, 1921, p. 1187.) They neglected also to point out that included in compensation to employees are the salaries paid to officers during 1920, which amounted to nearly $100,000,000, showing a great increase over salaries paid under public operation. (Interstate Commerce hearings, 1921, p. 1156.) Then the railroad executives, by the simple device of dividing the total amount paid to employees by the number of employees at a given date arrive at what is called the average earnings of an employee. By confining this operation to a particular class of employees, as engineers, the result is set forth as the average earnings of an engineer. And by the same method the so-called average earning of the different classes of railway employees is arrived at.

It must also be remembered that the attempt to deal statistically with the wages of railway employees must depend upon statistics published by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and these in turn are merely figures furnished by the railway companies themselves.

Mr. Warne in his testimony at the hearings above referred to—page 1187—thus sums up the fallacies of the so-called wage statistics presented before the committee by the railway executives who appeared as witnesses:

First. They include annual compensation to general and division officers exceeding in amount, in 1920, $92,000,000, which should be excluded.

Second. They include compensation paid employees engaged in new construction work, which properly should be charged to capital account and not operating expenses.

Third. They include compensation paid employees of affiliated and owned companies other than transportation.

Fourth. They include the additional compensation resulting from employment of larger number of employees in consequence of increased volume of traffic. In 1920 this increase in number of employees over 1915 exceeded 694,000 and represents an increase in total compensation in excess of $550,000,000.

Fifth. They include payments for overtime and increases in overtime, which economically represents not wage increase but the purchase of more man-hours, usually at higher rates. On the basis of 1920, a year of an extraordinary amount of overtime, as much as $275,000,000, or 8 per cent of the total compensation, was for overtime.

Sixth. They include in total compensation of class I roads for 1920 at least 98 roads, representing a mileage in excess of 6,500 miles, which were not included in earlier years. This shows an arithmetical increase in compensation of approximately $32,000,000 without a cent increase in wages.

Seventh. They include a larger number of more highly paid employees, such as engineers and conductors, in the later years of increased volume of traffic, compared with earlier years when traffic was not so heavy.

Eighth. They include in 1920, in total compensation, retroactive wage-increase awards by wage-adjustment boards, the amounts of which more properly belong to payments for preceding years.

Ninth. They include in 1920 compensation to employees of the United States Railroad Administration in 1918 and 1919 who returned in 1920 to their former positions with the carriers.

Tenth. They include total compensation to employees in traffic, advertising, publicity, and industrial bureaus and like activities whose services were discontinued under the United States Railroad Administration.

In a general way these various items total more than $1,250,000,000 of the total compensation paid in 1920.

In view of this criticism of the railway executives' figures it may well be asked whether any figures can be arrived at which will at all fairly represent the wages being paid to railroad labor at the present time and which have been paid to it during any considerable number of years in the past. All available figures on the subject are furnished in the last analysis by the railroads themselves. All figures obtainable from the Interstate Commerce Commission are only such as the railroads furnish. The ingenuity of the railroads in devising schemes and combinations to mislead the public and misrepresent the wages of the employees seems to be exhaustless. Literally hundreds of pages of testimony were taken up by the representatives of the employees in the hearing I have mentioned in exposing the fraud of the railway officials in this matter.

I might pause to say that I remember that in the testimony of Prof. Warne he calls attention to the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission required the railroads to report these wages and the amounts paid to employees only once a year. Their attention was called to the fact that the railway companies were selecting times in the year which would show most favorably to the roads in the reports upon the average amounts paid to employees. So the Interstate Commerce Commission, their attention being called to the matter, made a correction in their requirements, and asked the railroad companies to report twice a year. After further time, they still found errors and distortions in their reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission after making an investigation of the subject, and increased the reports required from the railroads to quarterly reports and finally to monthly reports, in an endeavor to correct the distortions and subterfuges resorted to by the railroads in making these reports favorable to themselves and unfavorable to labor. I cite that as merely directing attention to the character of the tables upon which we must all make our computations with respect to the average pay of railway employees; but, Mr. President, in so far as it impeaches the character of the record, it must be readily seen that the advantage is all on the side of the railroads, because they control these reports, they make them themselves, and with the best possible checks which the Interstate Commerce Commission can make upon their work, they are still very unreliable. So that any figures I submit here to-day ought to be considered, in so far as they are faulty at all, as having been made so by the railroads to their advantage and as against the interests of the employees. So true is this that the employees practically refuse to recognize the figures or to attach any importance to them.

I have, however, caused to be prepared from these railroad sources a series of tables in which the errors, whatever they are, are necessarily all on the side of the railroad contentions and against those of the men. These tables, computed from railroad sources, show a rate of compensation to the men in excess of the actual compensation as claimed by the men. But even accepting these figures, they show in a startling manner the falsity of the railroad claims.

These figures, therefore, represent the average earnings of the different classes of railway employees as much higher than they actually were during the year 1921, for the reasons which I have pointed out. It must be remembered also that prior to 1914 the railroads reported their number of employees to the Interstate Commerce Commission only once a year, and as the average wage is arrived at by dividing the aggregate amount received by the number of employees, it was always within the power of the railroads to make a favorable showing as to the average earnings of employees. I have, however, tested out this table by all means available to me and believe it to be substantially correct when certain allowances are made for the year 1922, to which I shall later refer.

The first figures I present are contained in Table I and are intended to show the average actual earnings of railroad employees in dollars from and including 1900 to and including 1921, the years 1900, 1907, and 1913 being taken as typical of the period covered by those years, and 1917 is taken as the last prewar year in which the roads were operated by the private owners. The year 1921 represents during its first half the wage conditions growing out of Federal control and adjustment by the Railroad Labor Board. In its last half it represents the effects of the beginning of the policy of wage reductions.

The earnings of 1921 are presented from the best available sources. The first set of figures shown under 1921 represents the amount which would have been earned during a full year at the rate of wages paid during the first half of the year. The second set of figures under 1921 represents the amount which would have been earned in a full year at the rate of wages paid during the second half of the year following the general wage cut ordered by the Railroad Labor Board, effective July 1, 1921. This wage cut averaged 12½ per cent, ranging from 8 to 16 per cent for the various classes. This last set of figures represents the present rate of earnings, except that it fails to take into account the reduction in earning power, amounting to approximately $100,000,000, or about $62 per man, resulting from subsequent decisions of the board abolishing overtime pay and other valuable rights which shopmen and laborers have previously enjoyed and from the practice of the railroads subcontracting a large part of their work at low wages:

² Represents the actual earnings of the first half of 1921 multiplied by 2, the product being reduced by the percentage ordered in the Labor Board decision of June 1, effective July 1, varying from 8 to 16 per cent for the various classes.

The increases shown in the first part of this table upon first sight appear large. The advance from $567 average for all employees in 1900 to $1,575 in 1921 seems to be very substantial and sufficient to compensate for every change that has taken place. But this impression is dissipated when we examine the second part of the table and see the enormous increase in the cost of living that has taken place during the same period. One also feels a distinct shock when he discovers what miserable wages the railway men were receiving in 1900 and the other glorious, golden years of "normalcy." Think of it, Senators, the average earnings of all railway employees, high and low, in 1900 was only $567, or at the rate of less than $2 a day. That was the wage upon which a man was expected to raise and educate a family, care for them in sickness and health, and lay by a few dollars for the day when he would become too old or too broken to perform the hazardous and strenuous work of the railroads and be thrown on the scrap heap by the relentless demands for ever-increasing efficiency, or put to tending crossings at a dollar a day.

Five hundred and sixty-seven dollars was the average earning of railway employees of the country in the year 1900. I do not believe it is possible to find even a railroad president or a banker to-day who will deny that such wages were far below any decent American standard.

Keeping this fact in mind, that the railroad workers were thus underpaid before the war, let us examine Part II of the table. This shows us that the railroad workers, as a whole, have barely kept pace with the increased cost of living, and that the most-favored occupations have at the very most only made up a small part of the amount by which they were underpaid in prewar days. We find that the only groups whose earnings have increased as fast as the increase in the cost of living are those who in 1900 were earning $2 a day or less. The earnings of the engineers and conductors, whom the railroad propagandists constantly denounce as men whose wages have been exorbitantly increased as a result of the war, have, as these figures clearly show, fallen far behind the increase in the cost of living, and they are actually worse off than they were at the beginning of the century.

In preparing this table I have not taken into account the enormous losses in earning power resulting from recent rulings of the Railroad Labor Board depriving employees of compensation for overtime and other valuable rights which they have enjoyed many years. Nor have I taken into consideration the reduction in earnings due to the illegal practice in which some of the railroads have engaged of subcontracting their shop work, their maintenance, and even some of their operating services, in order to reduce the wages of the workers and destroy their organizations. The losses in earning power as a result of these rulings have been conservatively estimated at $100,000,000, or about $62 for each employee.

If these factors are taken into account and proper allowances made for them, it will be found that the wages of railroad employees have lagged behind the increase in the cost of living and that they are therefore less well off than they were in 1900, when they were earning an average of $567 a year.

In order to demonstrate clearly the effects of the constantly decreasing purchasing power of wages, I have prepared a separate table (Table II) which shows the buying power of the railway men's wages in terms of the value which the dollar possessed in 1900.

The number of dollars which a workman may receive for the services of a day, a month, or a year means very little. It is the purchasing power of that dollar which counts. So, in order to gain any idea of the actual earnings of railroad labor at the present time and to compare it with its earnings in the past, it was necessary to translate both into purchasing power at some given time. That I have done in Table II in connection with the figures showing the change in living cost during the same period. I have taken the year 1900 as the base at which the purchasing power of the dollar represents 100 cents. During the 21 years which have followed the buying power of the dollar has declined until to-day it stands at only 38 cents. Prior to 1913 there were no figures available on living cost except the figures for food. Subsequent to that time all other items which go to make up the cost of living—clothing, fuel, rent, and miscellaneous expenses—have entered into the calculation of the Department of Labor, so that we now have a well-balanced set of figures available.

But it is significant that food prices have corresponded substantially with the prices of the other commodities, so there is little doubt that the measurement of the dollar prior to 1913 by its purchasing power of food is substantially correct when applied to the general cost of living.

THE BUYING POWER OF RAILWAY WAGES.

TABLE II.—Buying power, in dollars of average annual earnings of railroad employees (basis of purchasing power of the dollar in 1900).

	All employees.	Engineers.	Firemen.	Conductors.	Trainmen.	Machinists.	Trackmen.	Telegraph operators.

1921 ²	599	999	719	909	687	753	342	681

¹ First six months.² Second six months.

The following figures represent the changes in the purchasing power of $1 as used in making the above calculations:

1917	.52
1921 (first six months)	.37
1921 (second six months)	.38

The figures for 1900 and 1907 represent the purchasing power of the dollar in terms of the cost of food only, but for the other years in terms of all items entering into the cost of living, as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

This table, to my mind, presents the actual situation of the railway employees accurately and impressively. No honest mind can examine these figures without being convinced that the wages of the workers on the railroads can not be cut, under present conditions, without inflicting a grave injustice upon this splendid body of men of whom the Railroad Labor Board in its first decision said:

This long delay and succession of disappointments, coupled with the pressure of the further rise in living costs, produced deep and not unreasonable dissatisfaction on the part of railroad employees who felt themselves called on to make sacrifices, as they believed, far beyond those of any other class. Nevertheless, the great majority have continued to serve and to conduct the transportation of the country, awaiting with disciplined and patriotic patience the reduction of living costs, the decision of the director general on their requests, the action of Congress, the conclusion of the conference, the appointment of this board, the presentation of evidence to it and its decision.

It is worth while to analyze these figures in some detail. We find that during the first 13 years of the century the advance in the average earnings of all employees fell so far short of the constant increase in the cost of living that at the beginning of the World War they had actually lost $45 a year in buying power. Now, this would not have been so serious a matter if these men had been well paid at the beginning of the century. But they were not. Those were the days of the "full dinner pail," but in spite of extravagant promises and fervid oratory the dinner pails of the railroad workers with their earnings of $567 a year could not have been filled with anything more substantial than hot air. So when they were robbed by the rapid inflation of prices of $45 a year, leaving them with an actual buying power of only $522 a year, this great group of Americans, in many respects the very backbone of the Nation, were actually in poverty.

And yet the cost of living had been rapidly advancing from 1913 on through 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, but these railroad workers had been held down, subjected to conditions that reduced their buying power in 1917 below that of 1913. They remained at this miserable level until 1918, their buying power in 1917 being actually $2 less than in 1913. Then the United States went to war and the railroad employees came to occupy a strategic position, more important perhaps than that of any other group, unless it be the American sailor. The movement of troops, munitions, food, raw materials, and supplies of all kinds depended upon the railroad workers of the United States. Underpaid and overworked during the great traffic jams of 1916 and 1917—who can forget them?—which brought the railway corporations the greatest profits in the history of those organizations—the railway men might have used their power to extort any wages and working conditions they chose to demand. But they did not; they stuck to their posts through the terrible winter of 1917-18 until the privately managed railroads broke down and the Government was forced to assume control.

One of the first acts of the Railroad Administration was to do what the private owners had always refused to do. They created a commission. Do you remember about it? It was headed by the late Franklin K. Lane, then Secretary of the Interior. It was a commission to study and readjust the wages of all railroad employees. The work of that commission was done imperfectly and with great conservatism, but it resulted in what appeared to be large increases, because the Lane commission in this one readjustment had to make up all the deficit in buying power which the private owners had inflicted upon the workers during the preceding 18 years. The Lane commission submitted a report, from which I want to put into the Record two or three paragraphs. I should like to burn them into the minds of Senators. Listen to what that commission said:

It has been a somewhat popular impression that railroad employees were among the most highly paid workers. But figures gathered from all the railroads dispose of this belief. Fifty-one per cent of all employed during December, 1917, received $75 per month or less.

Think of it! In 1917 the cost of living had gone up 42 per cent over what it had been in 1913, and yet 51 per cent of the railway employees were trying to keep the breath of life in a family on $75 a month. They stuck to their posts and worked all through that terrible winter. The report continues—and 80 per cent received $100 per month or less.

The cost of living, however, as they got into 1918 had increased 74 per cent; it had almost doubled before the Lane commission got to work. Talk about loyalty to this Government! Find me some other band of men who equaled the loyalty of the railroad employees during that period.

What were those employees doing? What were the shipbuilders on Hog Island doing throughout this period? All the business organizations of this country were plundering the Government in its hour of need, and they are now making this crusade against the railway employees of the country to squeeze out of them the small real increases that have been made—and there have been very few actual increases made—in the earning power of their wages in 20 years.

Mr. President, it is difficult to find language in which to characterize the despicable, the diabolical character of this crusade that has been prosecuted and to which the press has loaned itself. Business organizations have adopted resolutions, and the Farmers' Conference that was in session here the other day passed a resolution to the effect that the wages of railway employees must be reduced, becoming the mere tools of the owners of the railway properties and of the other big business combinations combined with them in order to make this raid on labor.

I quote further from the Lane commission report, as follows:

The greatest number of employees on all the roads fall into the class receiving between $50 and $65 per month, 181,693, while within the range of the next $10 in monthly salary there is a total of 312,761 persons.

Just think, Mr. President and Senators, of the heads of families trying to maintain a family, to clothe them, to heat the homes, to pay the doctors' bills, to keep the children in school in 1918 on $50 a month when the cost of living was 74 per cent higher than it was in 1913. Think of these employees, receiving no advances in their pay, trying to take care of a family on from $50 to $60 a month! The report continues:

In December, 1917, there were 111,477 clerks receiving annual pay of $900 or less. In 1917 the average pay of this class was but $56.77 per month. There were 270,855 section men, whose average pay as a class was $50.31 per month; 121,000 other unskilled laborers, whose average pay was $58.25 per month; 130,075 station-service employees, whose average pay was $58.57 per month; 75,325 road freight brakemen and flagmen, whose average pay was $100.17 per month; and 16,455 road passenger brakemen and flagmen, whose average pay was $91.10 per month.

They say further:

These, it is to be noted, are not prewar figures; they represent conditions after a year of war and two years of rising prices. And each dollar now represents in its power to purchase a place in which to live, food to eat, and clothing to wear, but 71 cents, as against 100 cents on January 1, 1916.

That shows how rapidly the purchasing power of the dollar had declined.

The wage increase provided for by the Lane Commission was followed by other wage readjustments made necessary by the ever-mounting prices of the necessities of life, until during the first half of 1921, after the return of the railroads to private operation, the earnings of railroad employees were raised by the Railroad Labor Board to their highest point.

THE RAILROAD CORPORATION'S PROPAGANDA.

Then it was that the floods of railroad propaganda were turned loose, at a cost of millions of dollars, to damn these workers in the eyes of their fellow men. Full-page advertisements pilloried them in every newspaper in the United States as the cause of every evil, real and imaginary, from which the Nation was suffering. And all this expense was added to the cost of transportation.

What was the giddy height of wealth and affluence to which these workers had been raised so that the profiteers were forgotten while they were denounced? What were the princely incomes of this new class of war-made plutocrats? Oh, Mr. President and Senators, listen while I reveal the facts. They were actually earning—these 2,000,000 men who run the Nation's railroads—at the very peak of their affluence at an average rate which would have yielded them $1,790 a year, $10 less than Henry Ford pays the humblest and most unskilled worker in any of his plants or on his railroad. Mr. Ford pays a minimum wage of $6 a day and runs full time 300 working days a year.

But this $1,790 a year was in terms of the inflated dollars of 1921, which were worth only 38 cents in terms of the commodity prices of 20 years before. In terms of the buying power of the dollars of 1900 this $1,790 was worth only $662. This is the wealth in which the railroad workers were rolling at the very height of their earning power—the equivalent of just about $2 a day in terms of the days of normalcy and the full dinner pail.

But this did not last long, for with the decision of the Railroad Labor Board in June, 1921, the era of wage increases ended and the period of wage cutting began. By this one decision the wages of railroad employees were cut so their earning power was reduced to the level of a buying power of only $599 in the values of 1900. The effect of this decision is shown in table 2, but it has not been possible to include in that table the effects of subsequent decisions of the board and the growth of the practice of subcontracting, which have reduced railway employees' earning power by an amount which can not be exactly calculated, but which may be conservatively estimated at $100,000,000 a year.

Thus the incomes of railroad employees as a whole have now been reduced to the magnificent level of some $567 in purchasing power at which they were when the century began. They are back exactly where they started.

It is just like Alice in Wonderland. Do you remember how in "Through the Looking Glass" Alice and the White Queen started to run and for a long time ran so hard that Alice was quite exhausted and looking round her in surprise said to the White Queen:

"Why, I do believe we've been under this tree the whole time! Everything's just as it was!"

"Of course it is," said the Queen. "What would you have it?"

"Well, in our country," said Alice, still panting a little, "you'd generally get to somewhere else if you ran very fast for a long time, as we've been doing."

"A slow sort of country!" said the Queen. "Now, here, you see, it takes all the running you can do to keep in the same place. If you want to get somewhere else, you must run at least twice as fast as that."

So in this plunderland the railroad employees, like little Alice, have been running for 20 years and are now back exactly where they started.

But while the railway men as a whole have thus managed to maintain their buying power some of them have actually suffered a considerable decrease. The engineers, who began the century with $1,161 a year, now have a buying power in terms of the same values of only $999. The conductors from a buying power of $1,004 have now declined to $909.

Thus it is that the decline of the dollar from a commodity value of 100 cents in 1900 to 69 cents in 1913 and then to 38 cents in 1921 has wiped out all the apparent gains which the railway workers have been able to secure either through the work of their organizations or as a result of the supposed generosity of those who administered the railways during the period of Federal control.

Table I is the same as Table II, except that it shows in percentages what Table II shows in actual figures. Table III is as follows:

This table which assumes 1900 as the base of 100 per cent shows, using as an illustration the engineers, that the wages of the engineer in 1907 while higher than his wages in 1900 by the difference between $1,161 and $1,340, in reality had 97 per cent of the purchasing power in 1907 which his earnings had in 1900. In the same way it will be observed that the purchasing power of the earnings of the engineers in 1921, as shown by the table, is but 86 per cent of the purchasing power of his far smaller earnings in 1900.

The Harvard bureau of economic research has made a careful study of the physical volume of goods produced in the United States since 1899. Its results are published in the Review of Economic Statistics issued by the bureau for the month of September, 1919, to January, 1920. They show that from 1900 to 1917, while population increased 34 per cent, the physical production of agriculture, mining, and manufacture in the United States increased 83 per cent. In other words, the physical production of goods per capita increased by more than one-third from 1900 to 1917. We are certainly safe in assuming that the increase from 1900 to 1921 was therefore at least 30 per cent. This means an increase of 30 per cent per capita in the output of our industries in actual physical goods. If labor, therefore, is simply to hold its own and receive the same relative proportion of the total product it received in 1900, it would be necessary for the buying power of the earnings of labor to be increased by 30 per cent.

The proportion going to labor on any sound economic theory ought to be even larger than that shown on Table IV. Labor ought to demand and ought to receive not the same proportion of the product that it received in 1900 but an increased proportion. To whom does this increased product go if no part of it goes to labor? The answer is plain. It must go to capital. It must go to swell the great fortunes. To deny to labor the right to share in the increased product and wealth of the country is to make it an outcast in its own home. It is to reduce it to a permanent static position above which it can never hope to rise.

I have so far purposely refrained from dealing with standards of living. I do not believe that the wages of labor anywhere should be fixed merely by answering the question how little labor can receive and still function efficiently. I believe that labor should share in the ever-increasing wealth of the country.

President Harding will not be charged certainly with any undue bias in favor of labor, not by anyone who knows him, and knows his record when he was a Member of this body. In an address in New York City on May 23 last, as reported in the press of the country on May 24, he laid down the principle I assume he proposes that his administration shall apply in fixing the compensation of labor wherever that becomes a Government function. As reported in the press of the country on May 24, he said:

In our effort at establishing industrial justice we must see that the wage earner is placed in an economically sound position. His lowest wage must be enough for comfort, enough to make his house a home, enough to insure that the struggle for existence shall not crowd out the things truly worth living for. There must be provision for education, for recreation, and a margin for savings. There must be such freedom of action as will insure full play to the individual's ability.

This, you will see, is what the President promises as the minimum. It is that to which the lowest paid worker is entitled and which he should receive wherever the fixing of his wage becomes a function of the Federal Government, if the declaration of the President is made good.

Now, let us go one step further and see whether the wages which railroad labor is receiving to-day are enough "to make his house a home." Is it enough to assure him those "things truly worth living for"? Is it enough to insure "education for his children"? Is it enough to provide for himself and his family even the humblest "recreation"? What is the "margin for savings" which is left railroad labor on the basis at which it is being paid at present?

These are questions which can be easily answered. The field of living costs is one that has been rather completely covered during the last few years. During the years 1906 to 1914 four studies of living costs were made, and since 1917 no less than 13 other investigations of the same character have been completed. The method of making these studies has been to list the articles necessary to maintain a workingman's family, and then to find out the market price of each of these articles. These studies have taken as a base a husband, wife, and three children of dependent ages, on the assumption that the living wage must consider the family as the unit, if the race is to be perpetuated. The best of these studies probably was that made by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics during 1919 and 1920. The present cost of the decency and comfort budget for the ordinary industrial worker published by that bureau in 1920 is at least $2,200, and the average cost of seven decency and comfort budgets worked out by various public and private organizations stood at $1,970 in May, 1921, when food prices were substantially below their present level. Bear in mind that these decency and comfort budgets are not as liberal as that demanded by President Harding in the speech from which I have just quoted. Thus the Bureau of Labor Statistics says of its budget of $2,200 per year for the laborer and his family:

It needs to be emphasized that the budget level adopted in the present study is in no way intended as an ideal budget. It was intended to establish a bottom level of health and decency below which a family can not go without danger of physical and moral deterioration. This budget does not include many comforts which should be included in a proper "American standard of living." Thus, no provision is directly made for savings other than insurance, nor for vacations, nor for books and other educational purposes.

Now, turn to your table of railroad wages and take even the exaggerated figures for 1921, and you find that the only two classes of railroad labor which even approach the health and decency level are the conductors and the engineers.

All others are far below it. And mind you, this is not the level that President Harding has promised. It is a level far below that. The telegraphers, a highly skilled body of men, upon whose accuracy and faithfulness and skill and alertness the operation and the movement of the trains must depend, are short by over $400 annually of the decency and comfort level of living. The trackmen, upon whose labor the maintenance of the entire railroad system of the country is dependent, now receive only $900 a year. They are thus $1,300 below the amount which has been fixed as the minimum level upon which a family can be maintained in health and decency. I wish to call your attention to the fact that it was to this class of labor that President Harding referred specifically when he stated on May 24:

We must see that the wage earner is placed in an economically sound position. His lowest wage must be enough for comfort, enough to make his house a home, enough to insure that the struggle for existence shall not crowd out the things truly worth living for.

This clear-cut enunciation by the President has been entirely ignored by the Railroad Labor Board in fixing the wages of railroad employees. Refusing to recognize that the track laborers, like almost every other class of railroad employees, were already below the level at which a decent living could be maintained, this board or arbitrators, in fixing the new wage scale to take effect as of July 1, 1921, ordered a drastic cut, averaging 12½ per cent, in the wages of all employees. Not only did they ignore the maxim of the President by reducing the general level of railroad wages, but they went still further and imposed the heaviest cuts upon those classes of employees who were already lowest paid and who were, therefore, least able to bear the burdens. They reduced the wages of the more highly paid employees 8 per cent, but they cut the wages of the trackmen and other low-paid laborers 16 per cent. This is, in my opinion, one of the most cruel and indefensible acts ever perpetrated by a governmental institution. So far as I can discover these low-paid laborers were selected for slaughter by the Railroad Labor Board because it was believed that in the existing condition of unemployment these men were least able to offer effective resistance.

Think of it, Senators! Here we have the largest single class of railroad employees, numbering more than 300,000 men who, in rain and snow, under the broiling sun of midsummer, and in the icy blasts of winter, perform heavy and disagreeable labor. By the decision of a Government board these men have had their wages reduced to a point where they are now able to earn only $900 a year. This is equal to only $3 a day, or $18 a week. In terms of the purchasing power of money in 1900, the $900 a year which these men now have an opportunity to earn is equal to only $341. In other words, in terms of the actual buying power of money, these men are reduced to the level of $1 a day. Every mature man knows that it has not been possible, at least in the Northern and Western States, to hire men for $1 a day since the famine period of the nineties.

But this is only a foretaste of what the railroads hope to do to labor, if they are able to bend the Railroad Labor Board to their will, or, failing that, to evade the provisions of the transportation act by turning over their maintenance work and a large part of their operation to subcontractors. If they are able to do either of these things, they hope and expect to reduce the wages of trackmen to an actual rate of $1.50 for a 10-hour day, which will be equivalent, in the purchasing power of 1900, to only 59 cents.

This may seem to be a sensational charge, but let me read you from the Wall Street Journal of January 12, 1922:

The carriers have announced their intention, subject to conferences with their employees and the rulings of the Railroad Labor Board, to reduce the wages of men in the train service 10 per cent from the present scale and wages of all other employees to the levels paid for similar labor in the various markets for such labor.

A few of the carriers are already effecting some of these savings, and it is interesting to consider what one of them—the St. Louis-San Francisco—is accomplishing in this way by letting maintenance and even some operating work on contract.

In a free labor market labor, if employed at all, will be employed at the market, and private contractors, were the carriers thus permitted to hire labor at the market, would have no advantage over the railroads. * * * The St. Louis-San Francisco was engaged in 1921 in re-laying with heavier steel a good deal of light rail in Alabama, Mississippi, Oklahoma, and Texas. If the company had undertaken the work on its own account, it would have had to pay the track laborers the board's scale of 38 cents an hour. At these wages it is estimated that the labor cost of the steel laying would have been $550 a mile. The contract cost of this work was actually $350 a mile, a saving of $200, or about 36 per cent.

But this is only part of the case against the Labor Board. The contractors have to make a profit. The track workers employed by them received $1.50 a day for 10 hours, or 15 cents an hour. * * *

What Frisco achieved could have been accomplished by other roads, and was accomplished by a few, as the result of contract work. The difference between what was and what might have been is a deficit to the fixation of wages and working conditions by Government.

The inevitable conclusion from this article is that the railroads hope and expect that they will be able, if they succeed in their purposes, to force labor to accept employment at a dollar and a half for a 10-hour day. In terms of actual buying power this $1.50 would be worth only what 85 cents would buy in 1913 and what 59 cents would buy in 1900. This would be less than Chinese coolies were paid in the days when the Pacific railroads were permitted to import them freely and to exploit them unmercifully.

I do not believe that the railroads can by any possibility succeed in forcing the wages of American labor down to any such level. But I take a much stronger position on this subject than simply warning against drastic wage reductions. I assert that under existing conditions any further reductions in railroad wages are unjustified, and if made will produce economic disaster.

WHAT HAS CAUSED THE DEPRESSION?

Merchants and manufacturers are wondering to-day where their markets have gone. Farmers are in despair because they are unable to sell their crops. Why is this? It is in large part because the men who do the Nation's work in factories, on railroads, or in mines, either through wage cuts or through unemployment, have been deprived of the purchasing power with which to buy the food, clothing, and other necessities of life in normal quantities.

You may not realize it, gentlemen, but these despised industrial workers, whose toil and sweat drives the wheels of the railroad, the factory, and the mine, together with their families, constitute more than half the population of the country and consume an ever greater proportion of the Nation's staple products—its corn, its wheat, and its cotton. They use little wool and less silk and consume little or none of the products of the luxury trades, but they are the great market for the things the farmer produces.

All the millionaires in the United States could stop eating and cease to wear clothes and the markets for wheat, corn, and cotton, susceptible as they are to the slightest influence, would not notice the difference. But let the fifty-five millions who make up the families of America's workers be forced by wage cuts or unemployment to curtail their purchases at the grocery and clothing stores, and the inevitable result is a depression, if not a panic, in every market for staple products in the United States, and even the markets in Liverpool will feel the shock.

When the workers are well paid and steadily employed, there is prosperity and a good market, not only for merchants but for farmers and manufacturers as well. When half the workers are on the streets seeking employment, and the other half are being paid wages insufficient to maintain a decent standard of living, there is commercial and agricultural stagnation and depression, which all the unemployment conferences and agricultural conferences in the world can not relieve or even appreciably alleviate.

This is the great economic truth which every statesman must realize. It is so self-evident that a child in grammar school can understand it. And yet it is ignored and violated every day by those who are now in control of the destinies of this Nation.

The masters of American finance and business devoted the year 1920 to "deflating" the farmers, using as their agency the Federal reserve system, the most powerful and ruthless financial instrument ever constructed by human ingenuity. Through their machinations the producers of corn, cotton, and wheat have been ruined, and despair fills the countryside in every agricultural district.

The year 1921 has been devoted by these same masters of business and credit to the infernal, but not less congenial, task of "deflating" labor and destroying their unions, which alone stand between them and serfdom. In this they have, thank God, not yet fully succeeded. Labor, unlike the farmers, was not so vulnerable to the weapon of concentrated credit control by which the agricultural producers were forced to throw their crops on the market at an enormous sacrifice. Labor has been crushed by the slower but not less formidable processes of unemployment and wage cutting. So to-day five or six millions of toilers in the United States are out of work and their families are hungry, largely to the end that their spirit may be crushed and a new generation of serfs may be bred. The United States Supreme Court and the lower courts are depriving the workers of their weapons of defense one by one and seeking to bind them with chains, so that their masters may with impunity scourge them into submission.

This alliance of the Federal courts and the vested interests for the conquest of labor may succeed. I pray that it may not, but I sometimes fear that it may. No such powerful combination has ever been arrayed together for an evil purpose in the history of this country. In comparison with it the slave power, with its representatives sitting arrogantly in the Senate and House and with its spokesman as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court delivering the Dred Scott decision, pales into insignificance by the record that is being made by the Federal courts in our own time.

This effort to crush labor and reduce the free-born American workers to the condition of Russian serfs may succeed, although I still have such faith in the courage and the integrity of the American people that I believe they will finally achieve a glorious victory as overwhelming as that which crushed the slave power in 1865. But, in any event, success can be achieved by these sinister forces only after a period of strife and chaos which is too horrible to contemplate, and their success, however and whenever accomplished, will mark the downfall of the American Republic.

I thank Senators for their very patient attention and attendance during the delivery of this address.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading was resumed at line 10, page 24.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 16, to insert:

The Public Buildings Commission (the commission in charge of the State, War, and Navy Departments Buildings, to wit, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy) is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, so far as they may be able to at prices deemed by them to be reasonable and fair, otherwise by condemnation in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress, approved August 30, 1890, providing for a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office, the following squares of land for public purposes, to wit, the whole of squares known as numbers east of 87; east of 88; 124; 125; 145; 146; and 147, in the city of Washington, D. C., as officially recorded in the office of the surveyor, District of Columbia. The commission is further authorized to reduce the area to be acquired where by reason of improvements constructed, or unreasonable prices asked, or for other reasons in their judgment the public interests may require: Provided, That if acquired by purchase, the cost of the squares, including expenses incident thereto, shall not exceed the sum of $1,500,000, which sum is hereby authorized and the same is hereby appropriated: Provided further, That the squares authorized to be acquired herein shall be under the control of the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Departments Buildings.

Mr. WARREN. I move an amendment to the committee amendment. On page 28, line 17, I move to strike out the words "the Public Buildings Commission" and insert in lieu the word "the."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. There is another amendment to the committee amendment on the same page which I offer. On line 20, page 28, I move to strike out the parenthesis after the word "Navy" and insert in lieu thereof a comma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 25, to strike out "$300,000" and to insert "$375,000," so as to read:

For salaries and expenses of the United States Tariff Commission, including purchase and exchange of labor-saving devices, the purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, and periodicals as may be necessary, as authorized under Title VII of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, $375,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 19, in the appropriation for the United States Shipping Board, to strike out the following paragraph:

No part of the moneys appropriated or made available by this act shall be used or expended for the purchase, acquirement, repair, or reconditioning of any vessel, commodity, article, or thing which, at the time of the proposed purchase, acquirement, repair, or reconditioning, can be manufactured, produced, repaired, or reconditioned in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States for a sum less than it can be purchased, acquired, repaired, or reconditioned otherwise: Provided, That this limitation shall only apply to vessels while in the harbors of the United States, and all expenditures in connection with such work are to be considered in estimating the cost.

Mr. WARREN. That amendment was laid aside the other day because several Senators are interested in a particular item, so I ask that it may be passed over temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Emergency shipping fund," on page 32, line 1, after the word "ships," at the end of the line, to insert: "and (d) $55,000,000 from moneys collected from mortgages, leases, accounts, and bills receivable other than those arising from current operations, and from moneys collected from the sale of ships, plants, material, securities, and other assets, prior to July 1, 1923, less such portion of said $55,000,000 which shall have been collected during the fiscal year 1922 under the provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1921," so as to make the proviso to the emergency shipping appropriation fund read:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for the payment of claims other than those resulting from the current maintenance and operation of vessels; (c) the amount received during the fiscal year 1923 from the operation of ships; and (d) $55,000,000 from moneys collected from mortgages, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 11, after the figures "1921," to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That no part of the sums hereinbefore appropriated shall be used to pay a greater sum than 5 per cent as commissions for the placing of advertising matter contracted for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 23, after the word "representatives," to insert "or arising out of any legal obligations on the part of said board or corporation," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the payment of claims, damage charges and miscellaneous adjustments, authorized under the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, $50,000,000, of which $30,000,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That no claim shall be paid out of the amount appropriated herein unless the Shipping Board shall find that such claim grew out of an agreement, express or implied, entered into with United States Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation or their legal representatives or arising out of any legal obligations on the part of said board or corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 5, before the word "newspapers," to strike out "bulletins," so as to make the paragraph read:

No part of the funds appropriated or made available in this act for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be expended for the preparation, printing, publication, or distribution of any newspapers, magazines, journals, or other periodicals, or for services in connection therewith, not including, however, the preparation and printing of documents and reports authorized and required to be issued by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, to strike out lines 16 to 20 in the following words: "Not more than six officers or employees of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid an annual salary or compensation in excess of $11,000. But no compensation or salary shall exceed $25,000," and in lieu thereof to insert: "Not more than 13 officers or employees, including 7 attorneys, of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid an annual salary or compensation in excess of $11,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 3, after the word "employees," to insert "and all auditing of every nature requiring the services of outside auditors shall be furnished through the Bureau of Efficiency."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the United States Veterans' Bureau, on page 35, line 23, after the word "vehicles," to insert "including not exceeding 10 passenger-carrying vehicles at a gross cost not exceeding $7,500."

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the amendment be rejected, as I have an amendment to offer covering it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. I now send to the desk an amendment to come in at this point, which I ask may be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 35, line 23, after the word "investigation," insert the words "passenger carrying and other," so as to read "passenger carrying and other motor vehicles."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I send to the desk another amendment to come in at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 36, line 1, after the word "same," insert:

and not to exceed 10 passenger-carrying vehicles at a total cost of not exceeding $7,500 may be purchased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 4, to strike out "$25,815,942" and to insert "$34,970,974.65," so as to read:

For carrying out the provisions of an act entitled "An act to establish a Veterans' Bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau and to further amend and modify the war risk insurance act approved August 9, 1921," including salaries and expenses of the central office at Washington, D. C., and regional offices and suboffices, and including salaries, stationery and minor office supplies, furniture, equipment and supplies, printing and binding, rentals and alterations, heat, light, and water, miscellaneous expenses, including telephones, telegrams, freight, express, law books, books of reference, periodicals, ambulance service, towel service, laundry service, repairs to equipment, storage, ice, taxi service, car fare, stamps and box rent, traveling and subsistence, salaries and expenses of employees engaged in field investigation, passenger-carrying and other motor vehicles, including purchase, maintenance, repairs, and operation of same, and not to exceed 10 passenger-carrying vehicles at a total cost of $7,500 may be purchased, salaries and operating expenses of the Arlington Building and annex, including repairs and mechanical equipment, fuel, electric current, ice, ash removal, and miscellaneous items, $34,970,974.65.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Veterans' Bureau," on page 36, line 16, to strike out "$160,000,000" and to insert "$145,000,000 and not exceeding $15,000,000 of any unexpended balance for this purpose," so as to read:

Compensation: For military and naval compensation for death or disability, $145,000,000 and not exceeding $15,000,000 of any unexpended balance for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 21, to strike out "$127,000,000" and to insert "$146,409,188.80," so as to read:

Vocational rehabilitation: For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended, $146,409,188.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 24, after the word "cantonment," to insert "acquired for use as a training center, except Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of the foregoing sum shall be used for the establishment, maintenance, or operation of training schools at any Army camp or cantonment acquired for use as a training center, except Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 39, to strike out the additional proviso in the following words:

Provided further, That no part of the foregoing appropriation shall be expended for construction work except necessary minor repairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill is completed. The first amendment passed over is on page 5.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. CARAWAY rose.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] desire to speak on the amendment upon page 5?

Mr. CARAWAY. I was going to suggest that it be passed over temporarily, in order that we may consider the amendment which, I understand, the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to present.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. On page 30, where the committee proposes to strike out from line 20 on that page to and including line 6, on page 31, in lieu of the words inserted by the House I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 30, lines 20 to 25, and page 31, lines 1 to 6, in lieu of the words proposed by the committee to be stricken out insert:

No part of the moneys appropriated or made available by this act shall be used or expended for the repair or reconditioning of any vessel owned or controlled by the Government, if the expense of such repair or reconditioning is in excess of $5,000, or if the cost of said repair or reconditioning requires that estimates should be made, until an opportunity has been given to the Government navy yards to estimate upon the cost of such repair or reconditioning if performed by said navy yards; Provided, That this limitation shall only apply to vessels while in the harbors of the United States, and all expenditures in connection with such work are to be considered in estimating the cost; And provided further, That the provisions of this clause shall take effect upon the passage of the act.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not think the amendment should be agreed to. In the first place, I do not think there ought to be any limitation upon the matter of appropriation for the care of this shipping. It is really a private business, a private concern carried on by an agency of the Government. It will be carried on just as economically as possible, and it can not be carried on economically if Congress limits the discretion of those whom we have placed in authority and in charge of the work. I do not think there should be any limitation at all.

However, taking the amendment as suggested, I doubt if it really carries out in language what the Senator intended, and I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the language of the amendment, which reads:

No part of the moneys appropriated or made available by this act shall be used or expended for the repair or reconditioning of any vessel owned or controlled by the Government of the United States if the expense of such repair or reconditioning is in excess of $5,000.

Then it continues with the word "or." I take it that that part of it is complete, although that probably was not the intention. It then reads:

Or if the cost of said repair or reconditioning requires that estimates should be made, until an opportunity has been given to the Government navy yards to estimate upon the cost of such repair or reconditioning.

I think the phrase "until an opportunity has been given" does not relate to the first part at all.

Mr. LODGE. It was intended to do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought it was. The word "and" instead of the word "or" would probably cure that.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that change.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But this requires, if the expense is $5,000 or more, that the matter shall be submitted to the navy yards of the United States; in other words, every navy yard in the United States would be called upon to submit estimates upon the proposition. The expense of making those estimates in the various navy yards of the Government would far exceed the cost of repairs in many instances, and it seems to me that all this should prevent the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I have no objection to making the amount larger. I want to put in some limit, so as not to require them to go to the yards for trivial repairs. That is the reason why I added the phraseology about the estimates. If the Senator thinks it more desirable to make the limitation larger, as much as $50,000, I have no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there is any amendment to be adopted, I think it should read that the nearest navy yard should be required to give an estimate, without requiring estimates from all the navy yards of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I agree to that. I think that is very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the Senator understands I do not think we ought to adopt any limitation.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that the Senator is arguing the general question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am suggesting this in case the provision is adopted.

Mr. LODGE. It is my intention, if the amendment is rejected, to endeavor to have an amendment made which will require all these items above $100,000 to be submitted to Congress.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That, of course, would be very unwise. We can not carry on a business in competition with private interests in that way at all. I know the Senator does not desire to hamper the business in that way. These Government vessels are engaged in private business and commercial business. That is all they are engaged in.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but—

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not yield to the Senator just now. Government ships are entirely different. They are doing an entirely different kind of work; they are carrying on an entirely different sort of business; but these ships are being run or attempted to be run by the Shipping Board of the Government of the United States in commercial business in competition with the world's ships. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. If it is not Government business, then the sooner we cease making appropriations to carry on the Shipping Board the better. We had better have that door opened.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We are simply making the necessary appropriations in order to enable us to get out of this business as soon as we can, with as much profit as possible.

Mr. LODGE. I have supported the Senator in that, as he knows.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know the Senator has.

Mr. LODGE. I have not fought it; but it is Government work, paid for by the Government, of course, and it would not last 24 hours if the Government was not behind it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Technically, of course, it is. The ships are owned by the Government until they are disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But they are not engaged in Government business like a battleship is.

Mr. LODGE. That is quite true, but they are Government ships on Government work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, certainly; they are Government ships and it is Government work.

As I said, the navy yard is called upon to make an estimate. The Senator knows that better than I do, because he is upon the Committee on Naval Affairs. Nevertheless, we should not lose sight of the fact that if an estimate is submitted and the work is given to a navy yard, then we start on the work, and if it costs twice as much as the estimate we have to pay that money or else abandon the work. That is all there is to it. If an estimate is made of $500,000 and the actual cost is $1,000,000, we have to appropriate the other $500,000 or else lose the first $500,000 that has been expended. But if we allow the conditioning of these vessels to be made by contract with private parties we know when the contract is let what the cost is going to be. If it is carried on in a businesslike way, ample security is required to insure compliance with the contract so the Government knows exactly what the work is going to cost, knows the time within which it is to be done, and the time may be a very essential element in a contract of this kind.

The hearings disclose a letter from the Secretary of the Navy with reference to this proposition. It is found on page 36 of the Senate committee hearings. A telegram was sent from the editor of the New York American to the Secretary of the Navy with reference to the matter which is really involved here, namely, the reconditioning of the Leviathan. The Secretary wrote this letter. It is dated November 8, 1921, a couple of months ago, and reads:

GENTLEMEN: I have at hand your telegram of November 5, 1921, in which you make inquiry in regard to the reconditioning of the Leviathan by the Navy.

In April, 1920, the Shipping Board first requested bids upon reconditioning the Leviathan. At that time the status of the work in certain navy yards, notably in the Boston Navy Yard, was such that it appeared advantageous for the department to cause that yard to submit an estimate for doing this work.

The reconditioning of the Leviathan was not undertaken as a result of the bids received at that time.

Recently the Shipping Board again decided to secure bids for reconditioning the Leviathan under modified specifications, with the idea of ascertaining whether the work can now be done at a cost which will be within the means available to the Shipping Board.

I ask the attention of Senators to this statement:

A bid by a private firm is a guaranty of the performance of the work at a price named and within a time stipulated.

A bid by a navy yard is the estimated cost of the work. If work is awarded a navy yard after an estimate, the actual cost of the work is charged, whether same be greater than or less than the estimated cost. Estimates ordinarily run fairly close, say within about 10 per cent, but in a big reconditioning job, where the actual amount of work necessary can only be revealed after opening up work and uncovering all defects, it is difficult to make an estimate that will fall within 10 per cent of the actual cost.

The letter continues, on page 38 of the hearing, after certain interruptions:

Furthermore, the stipulated time for the performance of work for other departments of the Government must always be subject to the condition that urgent naval work shall take precedence, even if such precedence causes failure to perform the other Government departments' work within the time stipulated.

That is a very important element. I hope the Senate will give that consideration. Note what the Secretary says:

Furthermore, the stipulated time for the performance of work for other departments of the Government must always be subject to the condition that urgent naval work shall take precedence, even if such precedence causes failure to perform the other Government departments' work within the time stipulated.

In other words, if a contract should be let at the Boston Navy Yard for the reconditioning of the Leviathan, the reconditioning to be done within a certain period of time, and urgent naval work should come in, the work on the Leviathan would be put aside and the reconditioning possibly could not be carried on.

What is desired with reference to the Leviathan? On page 38—

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me? I think there ought to be a quorum here, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will not suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum. Of course, we will want a quorum present when the President addresses the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I realize that the President will shortly address the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the President will be here at half past 3 o'clock, and it is now nearly that hour. So I make the suggestion there is no quorum present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Cummins	Harris	Lenroot
Borah	Curtis	Heflin	Lodge
Brandeggee	Dillingham	Hitchcock	McCormick
Broussard	Ernst	Jones, N. Mex.	McCumber
Bursum	Fernald	Jones, Wash.	McLean
Cameron	Fletcher	Kellogg	McNary
Capper	Frelinghuysen	Kendrick	Myers
Caraway	Gerry	Keyes	Nelson
Colt	Hale	King	Newberry
Culbertson	Harreld	Ladd	Norris

Oddie	Ransdell	Stanley	Watson, Ga.
Overman	Sheppard	Sterling	Watson, Ind.
Page	Shortridge	Sutherland	Weller
Pepper	Simmons	Swanson	Williams
Phipps	Smoot	Wadsworth
Poinexter	Spencer	Walsh, Mont.
Pomerene	Stanfield	Warren

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—SUBMISSION OF TREATIES.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business in open executive session.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Vice President appoint a committee of two Senators to escort the President of the United States into the Senate Chamber.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. LODGE and Mr. SIMMONS, who retired and immediately reentered the Chamber, escorting the President of the United States, who was accompanied by his secretary, Mr. George B. Christian, Jr., and members of his Cabinet.

The President was greeted with prolonged applause, and, standing at the Secretary's desk, he spoke as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS TO THE SENATE.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE: I have come to make report to you of the conclusions of what has been termed the Washington Conference on the Limitation of Armament, and to lay before you the series of treaties which the United States and the other powers participating in the conference have negotiated and signed, and have announced to the world. Apart from the very great satisfaction in reporting to the Senate, it is a privilege as well as a duty to ask that advice and consent which the Constitution requires to make these covenants effective.

Accompanying the treaties I bring to you the complete minutes of both plenary sessions and committee meetings, and a copy of the official report made to me by the American delegation to the conference. Both the complete minutes and the official report of the American delegation are new accompaniments to the executive report of a treaty or treaties, but they are fitting testimonials to that open and simpler diplomacy for which the world has asked, and the practice of which contributed largely to the success of the conference so recently adjourned. I trust they will facilitate that ample and helpful understanding which is desirable in the Senate, and reflect that understanding which was the keynote of the conference itself. The whole transaction is quite out of the ordinary. I am not thinking of the achievement, which I hope the Senate will come to appraise highly, as I do and as the world seems to do. [Applause.] I am not thinking of the commendable processes by which agreements were wrought, though this was a conference wholly of free nations, exercising every national right and authority, in which every agreement was stamped with unanimity. Indeed, it was a conference of friends, proceeding in deliberation and sympathy, appraising their friendly and peaceful relations and resolved to maintain them, and give to the world new assurances of peace and actual relief from the burdens of excessive and competitive armament. But the out-of-the-ordinary phases which I have in mind are that the Senate—indeed, the Congress—has already advised in favor of one, and inferentially of two, of the treaties laid before you to-day, and the naval pact negotiated and signed is in accordance with your expressed wish. It calls a halt in the competitive construction of capital ships in the great navies of the world, and affords the first actual relief from naval burdens which peoples have been able to acclaim since steam and steel combined to add to naval strength in warfare.

But though the treaty recommended by the Congress marks the beginning of a naval holiday and that limitation of naval armament which accords with a world aspiration, the particular justification of this progressive and highly gratifying step was the settlement of the international problems of the Pacific, attended by new understandings in place of menacing disagreements, and established sureties instead of uncertainties which easily might lead to conflict. Much as it was desirable to lift the burdens of naval armament and strike at the menace of competitive construction and consequent expenditure, the Executive branch of the Government, which must be watchful for the Nation's safety, was unwilling to covenant a reduction of armament until there could be plighted new guaranties of peace, until there could be removed the probable menaces of conflict. Therefore, all the treaties submitted for your approval have such important relationship, one to another, that, though not interdependent, they are the covenants of harmony, of assurance, of conviction, of conscience, and of unanimity. These we have believed to be essential to perfect the fulfillment which the Congress had in mind.

As a simple matter of fact, all of the agreements, except those dealing directly with the limitation of armament, take the place of various multipower treaties, arrangements, or understandings, formal or informal, expressed or implied, relating to matters in the Pacific Ocean, in which all the powers signatory were essentially, if not equally, concerned. The new agreements serve to put an end to contradictions, to remove ambiguities, and establish clear understandings.

No matter what mental reservations may have existed, or what doubts may have prevailed, because here was an experiment new in many phases, all of the powers came to the conference knowing it was to deal with very practical situations affecting their international relations. There was mutual interest, quite apart from the greater achievement for world peace, and a way to common understanding was found to be practical and speedily arranged. If it has developed a new world school of diplomacy, let it be so called. It revealed the ends aimed at in the very beginning, and pointed the way to their attainment. The powers in conference took the world of the Pacific as they found it in fact. They dealt with actualities by voluntary and unanimous agreement, and have added to mankind's assurances and hopefully advanced international peace.

It is worth while saying that the powers in this conference sought no concert to dispossess any power of its rights or property. All the signatories have given up certain rights which they had, as their contribution to concord and peace, but at no sacrifice of national pride, with no regret or resentment to later flame in conflict. Some relinquished certain rights or prerogatives which they had asserted, notably in the settlement of the Shantung controversy, dealt with in a covenant quite apart from the group herewith submitted. But every concession was a willing one, without pressure or constraint. The conference record is quite unparalleled, not alone because there was the maximum of good feeling and neighborliness throughout the session but common rejoicing in the results; and the separations in departure were marked by genuine cordiality, good will, and new hopes.

It is not necessary to remind you that the conference work was not directed against any power or group of powers. There were no punishments to inflict, no rewards to bestow. Mutual consideration, and the common welfare, and the desire for world peace impelled. The conclusions reached and the covenants written neither require nor contemplate compulsive measures against any power in the world, signatory or non-signatory. The offerings are freewill; the conscience is that of world opinion; the observance is a matter of national honor.

These treaties leave no power despoiled. The delegates of every power participating adjourned with every right and every authority with which they came, except that which was willingly and gladly given up to further the common welfare. I can assure you the nine powers have been brought more closely together, they are stancher neighbors and friends, they have clearer and better estimates of one another, they have seen suspicion challenged and selfishness made to retreat, they have keener and more sympathetic understandings, and they are more strongly willed for right and justice in international relations than ever before. I believe, with all my heart, the powers in conference have combined to make the world safer and better and more hopeful place in which to live. [Applause.]

It was a helpful thing to have the conference reveal how common our human aspirations are and how easy it is, when the task is properly approached, to reconcile our national aspirations. There are mutual and essential interests affecting the welfare and peace of all nations, and they can not be promoted by force. They can be revealed and magnified in that understanding which, it is now proven, the conference of peace promotes, and the same understanding makes compulsion and despoilment hateful in the eyes of mankind.

The treaties submitted, seven in number, are—

The covenant of limitation to naval armament between our Republic, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan.

The treaty between the same powers in relation to the use of submarines and noxious gases in warfare.

The treaty between the United States, the British Empire, France, and Japan relating to their insular possessions and their insular dominions in the Pacific.

A declaration accompanying the four-power treaty reserving American rights in mandated territory.

An agreement supplementary to the four-power treaty defining the application of the term "insular possession and insular dominions" as relating to Japan.

A treaty between the nine powers in the conference relating to principles and policies to be followed in matters concerning China.

A treaty between the nine powers relating to Chinese customs tariff.

I invite your prompt approval of all of them. It is quite impossible to readjust our naval program until the naval treaty has your sanction, even though you urged its negotiation. It is not possible to make the readjustment in full confidence until the whole program has commended itself to your approval.

I am not unmindful, nor was the conference, of the sentiment in this Chamber against Old World entanglements. Those who made the treaties have left no doubt about their true import. Every expression in the conference has emphasized the purpose to be served and the obligations assumed. Therefore, I can bring you every assurance that nothing in any of these treaties commits the United States, or any other power, to any kind of an alliance, entanglement, or involvement. [Applause.] It does not require us or any power to surrender a worth-while tradition. It has been said, if this be true, these are mere meaningless treaties, and therefore valueless. Let us accept no such doctrine of despair as that. If nations may not establish by mutual understanding the rules and principles which are to govern their relationship; if a sovereign and solemn plight of faith by leading nations of the earth is valueless; if nations may not trust one another, then, indeed, there is little on which to hang our faith in advancing civilization or the furtherance of peace. Either we must live and aspire and achieve under a free and common understanding among peoples, with mutual trust, respect, and forbearance, and exercising full sovereignty, or else brutal armed force will dominate, and the sorrows and burdens of war in this decade will be turned to the chaos and hopelessness of the next. We can no more do without international negotiations and agreements in these modern days than we could maintain orderly neighborliness at home without the prescribed rules of conduct which are more the guaranties of freedom than the restraint thereof.

The world has been hungering for a better relationship for centuries since it has attained its larger consciousness. The conception of the League of Nations was a response to a manifest world hunger. Whatever its fate, whether it achieves the great things hoped for, or comes to supersede, or to failure, the American unwillingness to be a part of it has been expressed. That unwillingness has been kept in mind, and the treaties submitted to-day have no semblance or relationship save as the wish to promote peace has been the common inspiration.

The four-power treaty contains no war commitment. It covenants the respect of each nation's rights in relation to its insular possessions. In case of controversy between the covenantee powers it is agreed to confer and seek adjustment, and if said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any outside power, these friendly powers, respecting one another, are to communicate, perhaps confer, in order to understand what action may be taken, jointly or separately, to meet a menacing situation. There is no commitment to armed force, no alliance, no written or moral obligation to join in defense, no expressed or implied commitment to arrive at any agreement except in accordance with our constitutional methods. It is easy to believe, however, that such a conference of the four powers is a moral warning that an aggressive nation, giving affront to the four great powers ready to focus world opinion on a given controversy, would be embarking on a hazardous enterprise.

Frankly, Senators, if nations may not safely agree to respect each other's rights, and may not agree to confer if one to the compact threatens trespass, or may not agree to advise if one party to the pact is threatened by an outside power, then all concerted efforts to tranquilize the world and stabilize peace must be flung to the winds. Either these treaties must have your cordial sanction, or every proclaimed desire to promote peace and prevent war becomes a hollow mockery.

We have seen the eyes of the world turned to the Pacific. With Europe prostrate and penitent, none feared the likelihood of early conflict there. But the Pacific had its menaces, and they deeply concerned us. Our territorial interests are larger there. Its waters are not strange seas to us, its farther shores not unknown to our citizens. Our earlier triumphs of commerce were there. We began treaty relationships with China full 80 years ago, in the youthful vigor of our Republic, and the sailings of our clipper ships were the romance of our merchant marine, when it successfully challenged the competition of the world. Seventy years ago Commodore Perry revealed Japan to commerce, and there followed that surpassing development of the island empire with whom our unbroken peace found a most gratifying reflex in the conference just closed.

A century ago we began planting the seeds of American friendship in Hawaii, and 70 years ago Webster told the Senate that the United States could "never consent to see these islands taken possession of by either of the great commercial powers of Europe." Whether it was destiny, or the development of propinquity, or the influence of our colonists, or faith in our institutions, Hawaii came under the flag in 1898, and rejoices to-day as a part of our Republic.

The lure of the waters, or the march of empire, or the call of commerce, or inscrutable destiny led us on, and we went to the South Seas and planted the flag in Samoa. Out of the War with Spain came our sponsorship in the Philippines and the possession of Guam; and so we are deeply concerned in the mid-Pacific, the South Seas, and the very center of the Far East. We crave peace there as we do on the Continent, and we should be remiss in performing a national duty if we did not covenant the relations which tend to guarantee it. For more than a half century we have had a part in influencing the affairs of the Pacific, and our present proposed commitments are not materially different in character, nor materially greater in extent, though fraught with vastly less danger, than our undertakings in the past.

We have convinced the on-looking and interested powers that we covet the possessions of no other power in the Far East, and we know for ourselves that we crave no further or greater governmental or territorial responsibilities there. Contemplating what is admittedly ours, and mindful of a long-time and reciprocal friendship with China, we do wish the opportunity to continue the development of our trade peacefully and on equality with other nations, to strengthen our ties of friendship, and to make sure the righteous and just relationships of peace.

Holding the possessions we do, entertaining these views, and confessing these ambitions, why should we not make reciprocal engagements to respect the territory of others and contract their respect of ours, and thus quiet apprehension and put an end to suspicion?

There has been concern. There has been apprehension of territorial greed, a most fruitful cause of war. The conference has dissipated both, and your ratification of the covenants made will stabilize a peace for the breaking of which there is not a shadow of reason or real excuse. We shall not have less than before. No one of us shall have less than before. There is no narrowed liberty, no hampered independence, no shattered sovereignty, no added obligation. We will have new assurances, new freedom from anxiety, and new manifestations of the sincerity of our own intentions; a new demonstration of that honesty which proclaims a righteous and powerful Republic.

I am ready to assume the sincerity and the dependability of the assurances of our neighbors of the Old World that they will respect our rights, just as I know we mean to respect theirs. I believe there is an inviolable national honor, and I bring to you this particular covenant in the confident belief that it is the outstanding compact of peace for the Pacific, which will justify the limitation of armament and prove a new guarantee to peace and liberty, and maintained sovereignty and free institutions.

No allusion has been made to the treaty restraining and limiting the use of the submarine, and the prohibition of noxious gases in warfare. Since we are asking the world's adherence, it is easily assumed that none in America will hold aloof.

Nor need I dwell on the nine-power treaty relating to principles and policies to be followed in the relationship of the signatory powers to China. Our traditional friendship for the ancient Empire, our continued friendship for the new Republic, our commitment of more than 20 years to the open door, and our avowed concern for Chinese integrity and unimpaired sovereignty make it easy to assume that the Senate will promptly and unanimously assent. China's own satisfaction in the restorations covenanted here has been officially expressed, quite apart from the testifying signatures.

Perhaps I may fittingly add a word which is suggested by my relationship as a former Member of the Senate. I had occasion to learn of your very proper jealousy of the Senate's part in contracting foreign relationships. Frankly, it was in my mind when I asked representatives of both the majority and minority to serve on the American delegation. It was designed to have you participate. And you were ably represented.

The Senate's concern for freedom from entanglements, for preserved traditions, for maintained independence, was never once forgotten by the American delegates. If I did not believe these treaties brought us not only new guaranties of peace but greater assurances of freedom from conflict, I would not submit them to your consideration.

Much depends on your decision. We have joined in giving to the world the spectacle of nations gathering about the conference table, amid the convictions of peace, free from all passion, to face each other in the contacts of reason, to solve menacing problems, and end disputes and clear up misunderstandings. They have agreed to confer again when desirable, and turn the revealing light of world opinion on any menace to peace among them. Your Government encouraged and has signed the compacts which it had much to do in fashioning. If to these understandings for peace, if to these advanced expressions of the conscience of leading powers, if to these concords to guard against conflict and lift the burdens of armament, if to all of these the Senate will not advise and consent, then it will be futile to try again. Here has been exercised every caution consistent with accomplishment. Here was a beginning on your advice, no matter when conceived, and the program was enlarged only because assurances of tranquillity were deemed the appropriate concomitants of the great experiment in arms limitation.

I alluded a moment ago to my knowledge of the viewpoint of the Senate, from personal experience. Since that experience I have come to know the viewpoint and inescapable responsibility of the Executive. To the Executive comes the closer view of world relationship and a more impressive realization of the menaces, the anxieties, and the apprehensions to be met.

We have no rivalries in our devotion to the things we call American, because that is a common consecration. None of us means to endanger, none of us would sacrifice, a cherished national inheritance. In mindfulness of this mutuality of interest, common devotion, and shared authority, I submit to the Senate that if we can not join in making effective these covenants for peace, and stamp this conference with America's approval, we shall discredit the influence of the Republic, render future efforts futile or unlikely, and write discouragement where to-day the world is ready to acclaim new hope. Because of this feeling, because I believe in the merits of these engagements, I submit them to the Senate with every confidence that you will approve. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the message of the President, the report of the American delegation, and the minutes of the conference and the committees of the conference be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the treaties, which are included in the appendix to the report of the American delegation, be also printed separately for the convenience and use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the injunction of secrecy may be removed, which is simply disposing of an old rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I would like to inquire concerning the printing of the minutes of the conference.

Mr. LODGE. I have asked that they be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not understand that they were included in the Senator's request.

Mr. LODGE. I asked to have them referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed. That was my request.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The minutes, as well as the treaties?

Mr. LODGE. I asked to have the President's message, the report of the American delegation, and the minutes of the conference and the committees of the conference—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And the treaties.

Mr. LODGE. The treaties are included in the report of the delegation, and I made a separate motion as to them. I asked to have the President's message, the report of the American delegation, the minutes of the conference and the committees of the conference referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed. I then asked that the appendix to the report of the delegation, which contains the treaties alone, be printed separately as well as with the report of the delegation.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator ask that they be printed for the use of the committee or as a public document?

Mr. LODGE. I intended to ask that they be printed as a public document, of course. I ask that order now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. LODGE. I suppose there will be a sufficient demand later to make it necessary for the Committee on Printing or the Committee on Foreign Relations to ask for a large number to be printed. Already I have had requests from the House for that purpose, but I thought to-day it was sufficient to have the order entered to print them all as Senate documents. I ought to state that the minutes of the plenary conference and the minutes of all the meetings of the committees of the conference will make a very large document.

Mr. SMOOT. May I suggest to the Senator that he ask now that additional copies to the cost of $500 be printed, because they can be printed so much more cheaply now than if we print the first 1,674 copies and then make a reprint. I am quite sure the Senate will need even more than $500 worth of them, but we can only order $500 worth without a concurrent resolution, so I would like to have the Senator make the request now.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; I make the request suggested by the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes its legislative session.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I was reading from a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, especially where he states that in the performance of work given to a navy yard, any private work in the yard must be subordinate to the Government's work, and if any work must be delayed in its execution it, of course, would be the private work. So that if, under the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Navy, the navy yard should undertake the work to be done in a specified time, and if Navy work came in which would extend the private work over that time, that would have to be done. In other words, there is no assurance when a job is given to a navy yard that it will be finished within the time stipulated, and this is very pertinent with reference to a matter that is now pending with the Shipping Board. Mr. Lasker said:

For instance, the Leviathan, unless she is ready by March of 1923, would lose the spring trade of 1923, which runs into enormous sums.

In other words, if the Leviathan is to be reconditioned, it ought to be done and ready for the spring business of 1923. If that is not done, the Government in the operation of that ship would lose a great deal more money than if the vessel were ready to take advantage of that trade. This is a very large job, and if given to some navy yard the probabilities are that the Government work would prevent the carrying on of that work as expeditiously as it ought to be carried on.

I want to read further from the letter of the Secretary of the Navy. He says:

As the total cost of reconditioning the Leviathan will probably run somewhere between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000—

I hope Senators will give attention to this—

It will be seen that an estimate submitted by a navy yard would not give the Shipping Board the exact information which they desire as to cost and time of performance of this work. The necessity for economy is so great that the authorities of the Shipping Board do not feel that they could take the chance of overrunning the estimated cost by possibly $500,000 or $600,000. They must have a guaranteed total expenditure.

Mr. President, that the navy yards can not give. The Secretary continues:

In addition to the above uncertainties which surround the submission of estimates by a navy yard and their acceptance by the Shipping Board, the department finds—the department finds that at the present time the status of work at navy yards is such that it would not be advantageous to undertake the reconditioning of the Leviathan at a navy yard.

This is, the Navy Department finds—

Mr. President, that letter comes from the Secretary of the Navy himself, who states that under the conditions in the navy yards on the 8th of November, which is the date of the letter, "it would not be advantageous to undertake the reconditioning of the Leviathan at a navy yard." The letter continues:

The above facts are known to the Shipping Board as well as to the Navy Department, and have been developed after the most considerable consultation on the part of all concerned.

I hope that the above information will give you an insight into the existing conditions. The relations between the Shipping Board and the Navy Department are entirely harmonious, and each of these branches of the Government is considering not only its own interests but is cooperating with the other, to the end that the best interests of the whole country may be served in arriving at important decisions such as the one here discussed.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that bids have already been called for for the reconditioning of this vessel. I hold in my hand the specifications for that work [exhibiting] embracing over a thousand pages. If we are going to require the submission of bids or estimates on the part of the navy yards, they must go all through these specifications and consider them item by item. It will take them—I was going to say months, but I do not know how long it will take them to do it. It certainly will take them several weeks with a very large force, and it will be very expensive.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. There was so much confusion in the Chamber when the Senator began to speak that I was unable to hear all he said. I wish to ask him, first, whether what he has stated would not be true in the case of any private concern which desired to bid on this work? Would they not have to examine these specifications just the same?

Mr. JONES of Washington. But that has already been done; the bids have already been submitted.

Mr. NORRIS. But estimates have not been submitted by the navy yards.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I think not on the last occasion when bids were called for; but the navy yards submitted estimates once before; they did that last year.

Mr. NORRIS. If those estimates were complete, then we have their bid or their estimate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; not on these particular specifications.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the Senator to say they had been submitted to the navy yards.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They were in the first instance submitted to the navy yards.

Mr. NORRIS. If they were not submitted to the navy yards, I do not quite understand why the Senator should blame the navy yards.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not blaming the navy yards.

Mr. NORRIS. If I understand the Senator, he is using that as an argument why the committee amendment should be adopted, to show that it ought to be adopted, and that the navy yards ought not now to be allowed to submit estimates because it would involve delay. Is not that the Senator's argument?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is one reason. But I am not blaming the navy yards; they were not responsible, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. If it is not their fault, then I can not understand why the Senator should use that even as an argument for the striking out of this language.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have just read to the Senate from the statement here in the testimony that if the Leviathan is to be reconditioned it ought to be accomplished by the spring of 1923, and if these specifications, and all that sort of thing, must be gone over by the navy yards the chances are that it will delay the work and it can not be accomplished by that time.

Furthermore, independent of that, if a contract of such magnitude is to be let to a navy yard the probabilities are very great that the work would not be completed within that time, even if the navy yard agreed to do it, because if any Government business comes in the contract work must be subordinated to it and must be postponed. In other words, the probabilities are that it would not be accomplished by that time by a navy yard.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, that is a risk which must be taken in the case of a private bidder as well. It often happens that a piece of work is not completed in contract time by a private concern. I do not myself know why we should assume that a navy yard would be any less expert than would be a private institution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator that from a private contractor the Government requires a bond to guarantee the completion of the contract and to save the Government if it is not complied with. It is true that the private contractor may not fulfill his contract; but if the officials of the Government will use their business judgment, as I am satisfied they will, and employ practical business methods—

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will ask the Senator to wait for a moment, if he please.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I shall not again interrupt him.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not intend to be discourteous, but I had not completed the sentence.

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator paused.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If they use business methods—as I assume they will do—then they will take a bond from the contractors to insure that they will comply with their contract; but, of course, no bond is furnished by navy yards and we have to rely upon their ability to complete the work on time.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator from Washington does not use that as an argument why we should not utilize our own property in our own navy yards, does he?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was only using that as an argument why, in view of what it is desired to accomplish, we should not incur the delay of a month.

Mr. NORRIS. I may be mistaken in my comprehension of the matter, but it seems to me that what the Senator is saying amounts to this, that in the case of the Leviathan we ought to strike out the provision granting authority for the reconditioning of the vessel in a navy yard, because—at least that is one reason—plans and specifications have been submitted to private corporations so that they may bid without delay.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have already bid on the work.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; but if we submit the proposal to a navy yard they will have to take the time in order to look it over; therefore we should take away from the navy yards the opportunity to do the work.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Washington means to create any misunderstanding.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly not.

Mr. LODGE. In 1920 the Todd Shipbuilding Co. submitted a bid for reconditioning the Leviathan of $10,740,000, while the Boston Navy Yard bid $8,938,000. That was for a complete reconditioning, furnishing equipment, painting, and everything concerning the ship, outfitted for use. This year bids have been asked from three private yards, but the Government has refused to allow the Boston Navy Yard to bid.

Mr. NORRIS. To my mind the Government can not be excused for taking such a course. Even if it should result in some delay, as we have our navy yards, if they are equipped to do this work, and can make a bid on it, and can do it cheaper or as cheaply—I would go even further than that; but that far I think I can safely go—if they can do it as cheaply as a private yard could we ought, if for no other reason than to maintain our own yards, to give it to them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator that I think this is the reason why the bids were not called for from the navy yards. I quoted a few moments ago from a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, dated November 8, in which he had this to say:

In addition to the above uncertainties which surround the submission of estimates by a navy yard and their acceptance by the Shipping Board—

This statement is from the Secretary of the Navy, and not from the Shipping Board—

the department finds that at the present time the status of work at navy yards is such that it would not be advantageous to undertake the reconditioning of the Leviathan at a navy yard.

I have no doubt that these questions were gone over with the Shipping Board; in fact, the Secretary of the Navy says:

The above facts are known to the Shipping Board as well as to the Navy Department, and have been developed after the most considerable consultation on the part of all concerned.

That is all that I know about it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator let me interrupt him there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. If in this instance, or in any other, a navy yard is not equipped to do the work and does not want to submit bids, that is an entirely different proposition. It seems to me, however, that it ought to have the opportunity of doing so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I take it this is the reason why the navy yards were not given the opportunity to submit estimates under the last specifications, as they were given such opportunity under the first specifications. I take it from the statement of the Secretary that in consultation with the Shipping Board he told them it would not be advantageous to have the navy yards submit bids.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if it is not the position of the Shipping Board that all existing bids expire on February 15, and the board is satisfied that unless the bidders can be held to the bids they have already submitted it can not ever again get bids so low as those it now has?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I was just coming to that point. I ask the attention of Senators to this statement by Mr. Lasker. Senator OVERMAN asked:

How do you know what it is going to cost, or do you know?

Mr. LASKER. Yes, sir; we do. The contract will be given February 15.

Senator OVERMAN. To the lowest bidder?

Mr. LASKER. To the lowest bidder; and it will cost, all told, $8,200,000.

I hold in my hand a letter from John Wanamaker, of New York, furnishing contractors, addressed to J. W. Powell, president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, Munitions Building, Washington, D. C. The letter explains itself, and I want to read it to the Senate:

DEAR SIR: We beg leave to address you concerning our proposal for supplying the steward's equipment for the S. S. Leviathan. Our prices are guaranteed according to the proposal until February 15, 1922.

I take it that that item is included in the bid of $8,200,000, and that this firm is what might be called a subcontractor supplying steward's equipment under the principal bid.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. That bid amounts to over a half million dollars, but, as a matter of fact, Wanamaker is not the lowest bidder. The amount involved, however, over $500,000, is under one specification.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He is not the lowest bidder for that particular work, but I think his proposal is a part of the lowest bid for doing all of the work. Then the letter continues:

Our prices are guaranteed according to the terms of the proposal until February 15, 1922.

The market has taken an upward turn since December 15, 1921. Wool to-day is 35 per cent higher, linen 20 per cent. This, however, does not affect our prices until February 15. We have obtained the necessary guaranties to protect us until the date mentioned, but the guaranty which we obtained will cease on February 15.

As we are the lowest formal bidder, we are intensely interested to know as to when you expect to arrive at a decision to proceed with the work. We would like to know a few days previous to the 15th instant, so as to be able to cover ourselves in the market.

Anticipating an early reply, we are,

Yours, very truly,

JOHN WANAMAKER, New York,
By E. C. MORRIS, Contract Bureau.

Mr. President, that shows the urgency of the matter. I think we have the situation now fully before the Senate. From the letter of the Secretary of the Navy I infer that he conferred with the Shipping Board when it was contemplated to ask for new bids on the revised specifications; that the Navy Department pointed out their views that it would not be advantageous to have the Navy undertake this work, and, therefore, bids were not called for from the navy yards. Bids have been called for from private contractors; they have been received and the lowest bidder has been accepted, so far as acceptance goes, and the contract is to be let by February 15. One of the subcontractors who was to furnish to the principal contractors certain supplies says that he can not guarantee his bid after February 15, and unless action is taken by that time the chances are that all the bids will be off, and instead of a bid of $8,200,000 we will probably have a larger bid if it is desired to carry on the work.

Mr. President, it seems to me that under these conditions we ought not to hamper the Shipping Board. Let me say a word in the nature of a general statement. I am not going to take much more time.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator another question there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming that all the Senator says is correct—and, of course, I am not doubting what he says at all—if it is necessary to make an exception of this particular case for the reason that the Senator has given, that the matter must not be delayed beyond the 15th of February, we could very easily meet that by adding a proviso stating in effect that this particular provision shall not apply in a case where bids had already been received.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course that could be done; but I just want to say, in a general statement with reference to the situation, that while these ships that the Shipping Board has as Government property they are being used in a commercial way. They are being used in competition with the ships of all the world. The business ought to be carried on just as economically and just as efficiently as it is possible to carry it on. It is absolutely necessary to do that in order to maintain our standing in competition with the nations of the world and the other shipping of the world. It is difficult enough for our private shipowners to maintain their position. I think the great majority of the sentiment on this floor is that it is more expensive to carry on Government operation; that Government operation is carried on with less efficiency than private operation; and so this shipping being engaged in this commercial business we should place just as few restrictions upon the Government agency that is handling it as we feel that we can possibly get along with.

Mr. President, we have given to the Shipping Board a tremendous task. Without in any way criticizing the past administration or wishing that what I shall say shall be taken in that sense—because I try to make due allowance for the conditions that confronted the administration when this great shipping fleet was developed and the primary purpose for which it was developed—I want to say that the present Shipping Board took over a chaotic mass of shipping, with a chaotic condition with reference to accounts, information with reference to its handling, and all that sort of thing, that is simply indescribable. They are doing their best to get it upon a business basis. The Commerce Committee have had members of the Shipping Board before them several nights, and we have had them tell us what they are doing, what the conditions were that faced them, and what they have been able to accomplish in the time they have been in office. I want to say that I have been amazed at the accomplishments that they present to us, considering the conditions that confronted them at the time they went in. In my judgment they are doing a great work, and it is being done by the whole board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation working together, trying to get business principles applied and business policies used in the endeavor to bring up the American merchant marine and get this great business of the Government in such shape that it can be gotten into private hands in a way entirely consistent with the welfare of the country, they believing that that is what Congress desires.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would it interrupt the Senator if he should give us, in a few moments, an outline of the accomplishments of the Shipping Board during the period to which he refers?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that would take a long time. Four hundred pages of testimony, I think, were taken before the House committee. I have here a summary of this work, prepared, I think, by the Shipping Board and submitted to the Appropriations Committee. Here is a statement that is a very striking one to me as to the character of this business. I think, if the Senator would like to have it, that it would be interesting to the Senator to read just a page here:

The activities of the United States Shipping Board and its agencies have been as wide in scope as the commerce of the whole world. It contracted for the purchase of ships under various types of purchase contracts. In the performance of these contracts it became a co-worker in the building of ships. It undertook the duties and responsibilities of a banker and became a party to the financing of the shipbuilding program. It became a general contractor and assisted in providing greater shipbuilding facilities. It became a manufacturer and undertook to increase the output of ship equipment. It became a lumber merchant and acquired timber forests. It became an insurance company and sold protection against insurable losses. It entered transportation fields and built and operated street railways. It built and operated hotels for housing workmen; it built homes for the families of workmen, and in so doing created townships with paving, water, gas, sewers, moving-picture theaters, hospitals, and all the necessities and conveniences of municipal life.

The relation of the Shipping Board to the maritime needs of the country led naturally into wider activities. It constructed and operated fuel-oil stations the world over. It organized shipping agencies in the larger ports of the world. It became associated in the creation of an American shipping survey and registry. It contracted with foreign nations for cargo space. It organized a recruiting service to man the ships and instruct American manhood in the art of seaman-ship. It maintained warehouses, and provided the ships with necessary stores and supplies. It controlled the dry docks and ship-repair yards of the country. It established an organization for the repair and upkeep of ships, and later it had the duty of holding and preserving the laid-up or idle ships.

With the coming of the armistice—

Mr. President, this describes the activities of the Shipping Board before the armistice, while we were in war, trying to build up this as a war machine—

With the coming of the armistice new duties were thrust upon the Shipping Board. It became one of the biggest merchants in the history of the country. It had available for disposal an immense amount of property, including ships, tugs, shipyards, land, buildings, equipment, homes, hotels, street railways, electric transmission lines, timber forests, machinery, a warehouse full of marine engines, ship stores, and materials and supplies of almost every conceivable character and description.

There, to my mind, is a vivid description of the various activities of this board.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, can the Senator think of anything that it did not do?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know of anything that it did not do.

Mr. NORRIS. I have wondered if the adoption of the eighteenth amendment interfered with its activities at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are some people who contend so. I am not looking into that question, however.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I may say, if the Senator will permit me, that what it did do it did not do well, so that it did not do that well.

Mr. NORRIS. It had too much to do. You could not expect it to do it well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How could we expect an enterprise so vast as that, so far-reaching, to be carried on without loss and without inefficiency and without disorganization, and so on, especially when it was largely done during the war? And let us not forget, Mr. President, when we are talking about the Shipping Board, that the Congress of the United States required it to do this.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think perhaps the Senator misunderstood me, or else I misunderstood him.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am coming now to what I understood the Senator to ask.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator to speak in great praise of the achievements of the Shipping Board since its present constitution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is what I was inquiring about.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I knew that, and I am coming right to that now, briefly.

When the present Shipping Board came in, here is one statement that it makes:

Voyage accounting and auditing was a thorn in the side. All sorts of disputes arose between the managing agents and the Fleet Corporation. The fundamental cause of the accounting chaos was the failure to clean up matters. By June 30, 1921, the discrepancy between the Fleet Corporation controlled accounts and the managing agents' accounts was $47,000,000.

They state that drastic measures have been applied; and while they do not contend that their accounts are as yet perfect and complete, they do make the showing that they have these operators' accounts in practically correct form, practically complete shape; that they have them practically all adjusted in that respect.

Here is another statement that Mr. Lasker makes. He says that on August 15, 1921, he said to the Senate Committee on Appropriations:

If by the 1st of December we have not cut the employees 30 per cent or more I shall be disappointed.

This is what he says to the committee:

The number of employees as of June 15, 1921, was 8,324. The pay roll of December 31, 1921, shows a total of 5,035, after allowing for those to be separated after expiration of accrued leave and accomplishment of other changes already ordered.

This is equivalent to a 39.5 per cent reduction, or 9.5 per cent more than the ratio mentioned by the chairman on August 15, 1921, and a saving of $4,942,319 in annual salaries of 3,289 employees, who were dropped.

Approximately one-half of the saving is in the comptroller's department. June 15, 1921, the personnel there consisted of 3,086, with annual salaries of $5,787,035. On December 31, 1921, the number had been reduced to 1,535, with annual salaries of $3,138,802, a reduction of $2,648,231.

Here is a very striking example of what they have done, and I invite the attention of the Senate to it. We have, of course, a great many of our ships laid up. There is no business for them. They can not be run economically. A good many ships were laid up when the present board took charge, and of course they had to be watched and looked after. Here is one concrete example of what they have done:

In July, 1921, there were 719 steel vessels laid up with 4,577 employees, with an average annual cost per vessel for wages and incidental expense of $12,233.16.

That is per vessel. Mark you, that is what it was costing on an average in July, 1921, to maintain a laid-up vessel, to look after it and care for it.

Now, there are 1,029 vessels laid up, total employees reduced to 3,421, average annual expense $5,013.12.

Instead of $12,233.

Based on the number of steel vessels laid up as of this date, this shows an annual reduction of approximately seven and one-half million dollars. The reduction in number of employees amounted to 25 per cent.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. KING. I recall reading that testimony; but it occurred to me as I read it that it was unfair in the deductions or implications which the writer or witness intended should be drawn from that statement. It must be borne in mind that some of the ships that were tied up—to use that expression—in July, 1921, had been tied up but a short time, and they were being brought into the docks and tied up from time to time, and no policy had been adopted then as to what should be done with them. That is to say, some of the Shipping Board expected an immediate revival in business, so that the ships would be again conditioned or put into commission for service; so they kept them in more or less of a condition so that they could be speedily put on the water again.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And they are being kept in that condition now.

Mr. KING. But it became apparent later, and is apparent now, that they would probably be tied up for an indefinite period, so a policy was adopted—and it could be adopted when it was known that they would be tied up for some time—of caring for a larger number in a more economical way, and those facts ought to be taken into account.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not saying they are not taken into account. I am just simply giving the evidence. I shall not take the time this afternoon to go fully into this question. We will discuss the whole shipping matter a little later, and I do not want to embark on that subject in connection with this bill.

As I said a while ago, I do not intend to criticize the preceding board in any way, shape, or form, because I am looking to the future. I think we have to look to the future. I believe, Mr. President, that you may point out wherein this board has had better advantages than the other, or that certain conditions appeared to be different, and so on. Grant it all. I make no criticism, and I have no controversy about it; but I am convinced that the present Shipping Board is doing its utmost to do whatever is for the best interest of the Government and the best interests of the American shipping, and I am satisfied that the chairman of that board, Mr. Lasker, and the members of the board, and the members of the Emergency Fleet Corporation are exercising possibly not the best possible judgment, but as good judgment as would be exercised by anybody. They are doing their best in this great work. I have been actually amazed at the wonderful comprehension which Mr. Lasker has acquired with reference to the details and intricacies of this great business within the last six months. I simply want Congress to give these men a chance, to have confidence in them. If we have not confidence in them, let us get rid of them; but as long as we keep them, let us have confidence in their integrity, confidence in their ability, confidence in their patriotism, and confidence in their determination to make a success out of this if they can.

I am convinced of it myself, and I do not know of any man who could have been gotten for this tremendous job who would have done in six months what Mr. Lasker has done as chairman of the board, with the aid of the other members of the board.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not infer that any Senator who is opposed to the committee amendment is inclined for that reason to find fault with the Shipping Board. I do not understand that that has anything to do with the question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; not at all; I am not arguing on the amendment at all.

Mr. NORRIS. On the question the Senator has raised, I would like to ask if these vessels which are tied up are fully equipped, ready to go to sea and carry passengers and freight?

Mr. JONES of Washington. A great many of them are. They would need some reconditioning, of course, but they are trying to keep these ships in good condition.

Mr. NORRIS. Why are they spending eight or ten million dollars then to repair one ship if they already have ships which are in repair and ready to be used, but which are tied up?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have no ship like the Leviathan.

Mr. NORRIS. None so big?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Nothing like it.

Mr. NORRIS. Which would do the same work?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; I suppose it is the one ship, really, in its class.

Mr. NORRIS. They expect to be able to utilize that ship?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; they think they can utilize it to very great advantage in the North Atlantic, in crossing the Atlantic.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would like to suggest, if the Senator will permit, that while we have a great many cargo ships, we are very short of combined cargo and passenger ships, which the Leviathan is. She is principally a passenger-carrying ship, but she carries a good deal of cargo. We do need really for a well-balanced merchant marine, if I understand it correctly, quite a number of ships which will carry passengers and a certain quantity of cargo.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me a moment, I think it is perfectly well known to everybody who is at all familiar with ocean travel that the most unprofitable ships are those ships of enormous tonnage, like the Vaterland—now the Leviathan—the Olympic, the Aquitania, and ships of that kind. They are extremely expensive to run, they are luxury ships, and they are not profitable freight carriers. They are building an entirely different type of ship now. They are going back very largely to ships of lesser tonnage, because the others are so enormously expensive. I dare say that Mr. Lasker thinks this will be a profitable ship, but that is not the general experience. Certainly for freight, no one would think of building such a ship.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say, in this connection, that we often speak about how the British have built up their merchant marine, and how we have failed to accomplish what we probably should have accomplished in that direction. The very best illustration of the reason why we have failed and why Great Britain has built up her merchant marine lies in these two great ships, the Imperator, taken by the British, and the Leviathan, taken by the United States. The Imperator was put in condition, and has been making money "hand over fist" for months, and the Leviathan is tied up at a dock at a dead expense to the Government of thousands and thousands of dollars. That is just the difference between the British merchant marine enterprise and the American. We take our ship and tie it up at a dock, and at great expense keep it there. The British put theirs into service, and earn money on her. There is no question but what the Leviathan can earn a tremendous profit. We need just such a ship to carry passengers. The profits are made in the carrying of passengers.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as far as the passenger traffic is concerned, the Americans, as I understand it, supply most of the money that is made in that service, and the difficulty has been that Americans who go abroad are so inclined to travel in English ships that they do not patronize ships flying the American flag.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is because we have never given them the service.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Lasker says that if we would fix this vessel up, they would get the traffic; that Americans would take passage on her.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand they are going to do so, but there are a good many American ships now on the ocean in the passenger-carrying business. I read an article last night, which I believe was an interview with some man connected with the Shipping Board, perhaps the chairman of it, in regard to an advertising plan he has in mind for the purpose of calling the attention of the American people to the fact that in going across the Atlantic, as they do by the thousands, they ought to patronize American ships, and that they have the ships. But he said that if all the Americans who went abroad, estimating the travel in the coming year according to the travel in past years, would travel on American ships, they would not be able to carry all of the Americans who went abroad, and they could make money "hand over fist" if the people would only travel in American ships instead of foreign ships.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My information is that Americans are traveling more and more on American ships.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope so, too; and my information is also that the George Washington is making money in the carrying of passengers.

Mr. LENOX. I would like also to call attention to the fact that the Leviathan is now costing us $700,000 a year merely to take care of her.

Mr. LODGE. That is an example of the excellent management of the Shipping Board. That ship has been lying there ever since the troops came back and nothing has been done to her.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Shipping Board, either this one or the one before the present board, is not entirely to blame. It was proposed that the Leviathan be sold unconditionally, and a bid was made for her, I think, of nearly $4,000,000. Congress held that up by resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. That was a bid under which the ship might have gone out from under the American flag.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it had to go under the American flag. I take blame to myself with reference to that. I am inclined to think we made a mistake. I joined in reporting favorably the resolution to withhold action upon it, and I am inclined to think we made a mistake.

Mr. NORRIS. I remember the occasion now, since the Senator speaks of it, and I voted for the resolution, or if I did not, I was in favor of it, and I am still in favor of it. That was a long time ago. Have they not had sufficient time to equip the ship and get it going?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The present Shipping Board is trying to do it; but it has only been in office about six months. The other Shipping Board did not; it did not have the money.

Mr. NORRIS. How much time has elapsed since that resolution was passed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think about two years.

Mr. NORRIS. It ought to have been equipped in two years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We would have had to provide the money.

Mr. FLETCHER. They did not have the money, and we did not have any Shipping Board about half the time.

Mr. NORRIS. They had money with which to work on the other ships, did they not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; not extensively. They kept them somewhat in repair out of receipts from operation.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to say to the Senator from Nebraska that what there was of the Shipping Board could never get the approval of the committee of either House to go ahead with the reconditioning, owing largely to the way the financial operations of the Shipping Board were then being conducted.

Mr. RANDELL. I would like to add just this statement to the debate about the Leviathan: It was a very expensive ship in its original cost. I do not remember exactly, but it cost something like $25,000,000 or $30,000,000. It is an asset on our hands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It did not cost that originally, but Mr. Ferguson, testifying before our committee when that matter was being considered, said it would cost from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 to replace the Leviathan at this time.

Mr. RANDELL. Very well; put it that way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That was two years ago.

Mr. LODGE. It did not cost anything like that sum when it was built.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it did not.

Mr. RANDELL. But it would cost that to replace it.

Mr. LODGE. I think it probably would.

Mr. RANDELL. It is a dead asset on our hands. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] just stated that it is costing about $700,000 a year. I do not remember that that is exactly correct.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is a liability in the shape in which it is now.

Mr. RANDELL. It is a tremendous liability right now. It can be repaired and made practically a new ship, and a very valuable asset, at a cost of $8,200,000. As I read the testimony of Mr. Lasker and others, it will certainly pay a good dividend on a $15,000,000 valuation, if we spend $8,200,000 on it. It will then become a paying proposition, something of which we, as Americans, would be proud, something which would help us to build up that merchant marine we all talk so much about, something which would balance the merchant marine; something which we have not now, for we have not a ship like that to come in competition with the great ships of England.

With a dead asset, costing us a tremendous amount to care for, would it not be good business to spend $8,200,000 and make a profitable asset on a valuation of $15,000,000? It seems to me there can be no question about that. We must either do that, Senators, or we ought to take this hulk out in the ocean and sink it. One or the other ought to be done.

Mr. LODGE. I am not opposing the reconditioning of the Leviathan, but I want it reconditioned at the lowest price.

Mr. RANDELL. We will discuss that phase of it later.

Mr. LENROOT. I made the statement that it was costing $700,000 a year to care for the Leviathan, and I wish to be entirely accurate about that. It is costing us $44,000 a month for care. The ship is using a pier for which we could receive $18,000 a month if the Leviathan were not there. Therefore it is costing us $62,000 a month, or a little over $700,000 a year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I could cite other changes this board has made, but I shall not take the time to do it, as I hope we will be able to get this bill through to-day. I know the Senator from Massachusetts wants this vessel reconditioned, and the only question in my mind is whether or not we should hamper the Shipping Board in using its best judgment as to how it should be done. I have no doubt, as I said before, that it conferred with the Navy Department, and the Navy Department said it would not be advantageous to do this in the navy yard. Therefore they called for bids. The bids have been received. The contract can be let by the 15th of the month. If it is not let, then the chances are it will cost more to do what everybody seems to think ought to be done.

Mr. President, I do not believe that we ought to put any restrictions upon the Shipping Board, especially in this respect.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator resumes his seat may I ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator has been discussing the amendment before us from one angle only, as I have understood his statement. Will the Senator give us his views as to the wisdom of embarking upon a policy which will inevitably lead to the continuation of Government plants, shipping plants, navy yards, that we do not need, merely for the purpose of coming into competition with private plants that are engaged in the construction, reconditioning, and repair of ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not wish to go into that question. I reported a bill to the Senate which was passed and is now a law, in which we declared it to be the policy to have an American merchant marine ultimately, privately owned and privately operated. I am stronger now in my belief in that policy than I was even at that time. But we are confronted with a situation that we can not get away from. We have the ships and we can not sell them now. What the Shipping Board is trying to do is to create conditions under which these ships can be sold, and under which they can be sold at an advantage to the Government, and build up an American merchant marine.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me—

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am coming now to what the Senator asked. I would strain a point in the building of battleships probably, and real naval ships; I would favor their building or repair in navy yards, because I realize the importance of maintaining navy yards to some extent, although if we ratify the treaties probably not nearly to the extent we will need hereafter; but, generally, I am in favor of having the work done in private yards where it really is of a private character.

While, as the Senator from Massachusetts said, these are technically Government ships, yet they are ships we have to get into private ownership, and when they are in private ownership we shall want to have private shipyards in the country. While I am not making that as an argument in this case for having these vessels repaired in private yards, I would rather see it done on that account. But the main stand that I take here is that the less we interfere with the business discretion of the Shipping Board in the handling of the great property that they now have in their charge the more likely they are to succeed. That broad proposition governs my action in this case.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is now after 5 o'clock and I have something I desire to say about this question. I think I can bring it clearly before the Senate that my purpose, at least, is to do the work more economically than the Shipping Board is even willing to try to do it. I shall want some little time to go over the facts. Therefore, preferring not to go on to-night, I am going to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. There were two reservations made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which he informs me he does not wish to bring up, one on the purchase of certain lands and another one on the Bureau of Efficiency. So those may stand as agreed to.

Mr. KING. Let it be understood that the one with respect to the Bureau of Efficiency and the other with reference to the purchase of certain lands may stand as agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. They were agreed to, and the Senator gave notice that he might wish to move to reconsider.

Mr. KING. I withdraw that notice.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of the members of the Civil Service Commission, which was passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was passed over.

Mr. KING. I should like to have the item relating to the Bureau of Aeronautics go over until to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 11, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 10, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, again Thou hast opened for us the gates of day. Where our strength ends Thou dost begin, and where our hope fades Thou dost come. Blessed be Thy holy name! We are grateful that we still have a place in the heart of God and a refuge in His house of defense. In all our ways lead us out and on and up. Amid the currents and the denials of life help us always to put good things to noble uses and cast aside all things else. As we live with the arms of God about us, O may His moral law be within. We would have our work be full of wisdom for our country and have it bring every enlargement of life to our citizenship everywhere. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and seven Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CRAMTON. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CRAMTON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 10329, the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to come to an agreement as to the limit of general debate. I will ask my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], how much time he thinks will be needed on his side?

Mr. CARTER. I have demands for a little more than two hours on this side, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman think that could be reduced to an hour and a half?

Mr. CARTER. I do not think we could get along with less than two hours. At first I thought we could get along with an hour and a half but since then I have had additional requests for time, and I am sure it will take two hours.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate upon the bill be limited to four hours, two hours to be under the control of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and two hours under my control.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to four hours, half the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Oklahoma. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will ask the Chair to notify me when I have used 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the pending bill makes appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. The matter carried in this bill has been carried in other bills heretofore. The pending bill includes all of the items that have heretofore been in the Indian appropriation bill, all of the items that have been in the pension appropriation bill, a number of important items from the sundry civil bill, and others from the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. This bill carries the full provision to be made by the Government for all the activities of the Department of the Interior for the year 1923. Because of the range of these important activities the bill becomes one of very great importance and of chief interest to Members from the West, because it includes the Indian Service, the Reclamation Service, the national parks, and general questions relating to the public lands. The subcommittee, recognizing that fact, have endeavored to make Members interested in these problems of immediate western concern and also of great national importance feel free to come in with the committee and assist in every way in the hearings.

We have been especially glad to have the cordial good wishes and cooperation of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs; the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands; and the gentleman from Nebraska [Judge KINKAID], chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

For these purposes the appropriations for 1922 were $315,195,149.67. The estimates sent to Congress for the same purpose for 1923 were $299,377,032, the reduction between the current law and the estimates being chiefly due to the reduction of the appropriation for pensions, due to the continued death of Civil War veterans and their widows; and the reduction in the items for reclamation fund work, due to the fact that that appropriation is drawn from the reclamation fund, and it is anticipated will contain less money than was anticipated a year ago. Your committee have reduced these estimates from $299,377,032 to the extent of $3,754,920, leaving a bill of $295,622,112.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am going to ask to be interrupted as little as possible until I finish my statement, but, of course, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. I do not want to interfere with the development of the gentleman's statement, but I understood that a large appropriation was to be made for the Reclamation Service, in view of the unemployed.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit and wait until I come to that subject—and in the meantime I am going to ask that I be permitted to go ahead with my statement and take up the details under the 5-minute rule. So I will defer answering the gentleman at present.

In making these reductions the committee would like the House to understand that these reductions are not made through a theory that the department has been extravagant or unreasonable in requests. Men like Secretary Fall and Assistant Secretary Finney, heads of the department; Dr. Bain, Bureau of Mines; Dr. George Otis Smith, of the Geological Survey; Mr. Burke, our own former colleague, of the Indian Service; Mr. Mather, that enthusiast of the National Park Service; Director Davis, of the Reclamation Service; Dr. Tigert, of the Bureau of Education; and the other men at the heads of the various bureaus and establishments impressed the committee highly by their zeal, intelligence, and efficient conduct of their bureaus. But your committee have recognized the need for economy that is now supreme and that the present time is not only a period for economy, of necessity for the fullest economy, but it must include wherever possible retrenchment as well. And many things that are a proper activity to be carried in ordinary times must now be suspended and deferred.

The Interior Department is the department that in ordinary times we hope to see expanded and developed.

I have in mind in this statement not to discuss generally the details of the bill, leaving them until we come under the 5-minute rule. Inasmuch as this is the first time since the establishment of this department 70 years ago that it is all provided for in one bill, it seems fitting that I should discuss in a general way for the House the services and activities of this great department.

It is interesting to note that in the report of the Committee on Agriculture of this House, February 12, 1849, recommending the new "Home Department," it was stated:

The general fact remains unaffected that war and preparations for war have been practically regarded as the chief duty and end of this Government, while the arts of peace and production, whereby nations are subsisted, civilization advanced, and happiness secured, have been esteemed unworthy the attention, or foreign to the objects, of this Government. It seems to us that this should not always continue, but that we should, as a wise people, reorganize the Government so far as to fulfill these duties also, which are suggested by the nature, aspirations, and wants of our race as physical, moral, and intellectual beings; that it should do something toward protecting the people against those internal enemies, ignorance, destitution, and vice, as well as against those foreign foes who may invade or who it is apprehended may assail us.

The department then was established and given supervision of the Land Office, the Patent Office, of Indian Affairs, and of Pensions, as well as certain officers of the courts, the Census, and the Commissioner of Public Buildings. From time to time other branches have been added, until it is now, perhaps, the greatest department in the Government so far as the development of our resources and the promotion of the welfare of our people are concerned.

It is now housed primarily in a splendid department building that has 16 acres of floors, 25 miles of water and soil pipes, 10 miles of heating pipes, 100 miles of wire. It has here and in the field in all something like 22,000 employees. It is well to note that it is one department of the Government that did not become inflated during the war. Its number of employees is probably less to-day than before the war or during the war.

The Interior Department primarily administers a tremendous national estate, lands and forests, coal and oil, oil shale, phosphate, potash, water power, and so forth, which Secretary Fall, in his annual report, in an interesting statement, estimates will bring eventually $12,000,000,000 to the Government. That is, he estimates that it will bring to the Treasury of the United States ultimately $12,000,000,000, although if the actual value of the mines, and so forth, from which the Government will ultimately secure only royalties, is considered, then the value of this great national estate would be $150,000,000,000.

Prominent in that is our great area, the public lands, which has been from time to time reduced, but which contained on June 30, 1921, 189,729,492 acres of land unappropriated and unreserved. In addition to that in Alaska there are 378,165,760 acres, making a total acreage of 567,895,252 acres.

The following statement of the area of public domain and public-land business for the year 1921 will be of interest in this connection:

June 30, 1921.
Area unappropriated and unreserved (exclusive of Alaska)	Acres.
-----	189,729,492
Reservations and withdrawals (public-land States only):
National forests	154,487,792
National monuments	399,942
National parks	5,463,444
Indian reservations	71,244,591
Carey Act withdrawals	1,471,341
	<hr/>
	1233,067,110
	422,796,602

¹ Do not include reclamation withdrawals, no figures for which are available. Other withdrawals, such as coal (39,875,414 acres), phosphate (2,724,340 acres), etc., aggregating 49,291,168 acres, are omitted from the total reservations and withdrawals for 1921 for the reason that the greater part of such withdrawals have been covered by entries for the surface title.

Fiscal year 1921.

Area passed to patent	Acres.
10,117,810
Receipts:
Public lands	$10,453,969.72
Indian lands	$903,371.93
Naval petroleum reserves	$3,118,511.07
Expenditures	$3,149,024.05
Number of employees in land service (General Land Office and field)	1,256

This great domain is immediately under the General Land Office, first established in 1812. As early as May 18, 1796, under an act of Congress of that date, these activities commenced. That act authorized a surveyor general and a survey of certain lands northwest of the Ohio River and above the mouth of the Kentucky River, and also provided for the sale of public lands at Cincinnati and Pittsburgh. The first land offices were established at Cincinnati, Chillicothe, Marietta, and Steubenville. Ohio is now one of the few States other than the original 13—which retained all their own lands—which have no Federal public lands to-day. As the consideration of the bill progresses and the question arises with respect to the abolishment of some existing land offices, it will be well to remember that these offices from time to time have been created or abolished as the need has been apparent.

The Indians, who are the wards of the Nation, required attention from our Government in the very earliest days. The act of August 7, 1789 (1 Stat., 149), required the Secretary of War to—perform and execute such duties * * * in relation to Indian affairs.

And the act of July 9, 1832, authorized a Commissioner of Indian Affairs to—have the direction and management of all Indian affairs and of all matters arising out of Indian relations.

There are to-day in this country, it is stated, a total of 312,381 Indians, of whom about 165,000 are full bloods. Of those Indians not only is there the care of the adults but there is the education of the children. There are 90,448 Indian children of school age, of whom 83,633 are eligible for school attendance, and of that total 62,761 are in school. The capacity of the Indian schools is 64,016, but there remain about 20,000 Indian children not in schools, in part because of lack of school capacity, but in large degree also through lack of success in getting them into schools. Certain nomadic tribes in the Southwest as well as a few of the Seminoles in Florida and others greatly complicate that problem.

The property of the Indians is estimated by the Indian Service as amounting to something over $1,000,000,000. The responsibility for the administration of that estate is largely in the Indian Office.

Your committee would not do justice to very conscientious officials of the Government if I failed to say here that while all of the estimates from the Interior Department came before our committee on a very moderate and reasonable basis, without any inflation or extravagance, still we must say that a former Member of this House, Hon. Charles H. Burke, who for a long time was chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in this House and who is now the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, came before the committee with really the cleanest slate of any branch in the department. [Applause.]

This will be apparent to anyone who studies the estimates for that office and who realizes that in the recent past in the bills presented by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], when he was chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and in charge of the Indian appropriation bill, and by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], when chairman of that committee and in charge of the bill, as well as by the late Mr. Elston, of California, last year in charge of the bill, the totals have been greatly reduced to bedrock. Still Commissioner Burke took seriously the desire of the administration for economy, and gentlemen will find that the Indian Bureau estimates were well pared down before they ever got to the Budget office or to Congress, being well below the current appropriation. I feel that when an officer of the Government treats Congress fairly, meets us in good faith in a program that we are trying to carry out, he is entitled to the confidence and appreciation of the Congress. [Applause.]

The total appropriations in the bill for the Indian Bureau amount to $12,295,722. Of this amount $2,433,370 comes from tribal appropriations, from the funds of the Indians, and $9,862,352 from the Federal Treasury, of which $1,730,707 is reimbursable—that is, supposed to come back sometime to the Treasury.

The Bureau of Pensions carries on a great activity of the Government. It has, of course, the larger portion of the money carried in this bill, being for the payment of pensions, $252,000,000. It is a long time since the Civil War, and the greater number of those cared for are Civil War veterans and their widows. It is interesting to note that last year—1921—the expenditures so long after the Civil War amounted to $258,715,842, which is apparently the peak to be paid for pensions. That is the most that has ever been paid, and it is the expectation that in 1922 the amount will be less than in 1921, and in 1923 it will be still less.

The following table giving information concerning pensions will be found to be of interest:

Amount paid to pensioners, 1790 to 1921, inclusive.

Largest number of Civil War widows on the roll was in 1912—304,373

These heroes of the great Civil War crisis are now but a quarter of a million and passing in numbers of pathetic magnitude. The cost of the administration of the Bureau of Pensions, I think, will compare quite favorably with other bureaus doing similar work. For 1921 the number of claims passed upon amounted to 91,515, and they were disposed of at an average cost of $17.25 per claim. The disbursements for pensions cost ten and a quarter cents per hundred dollars.

On June 30, 1921, there were 99,100 applications pending, 47,000 more than a year previously. This great gain was due very largely to the two acts passed in 1920—the act of May 1 and the act of June 5. The first provided a minimum of $50 for Civil War veterans, but an increase of $72 in the event that the veteran should be incapacitated to an extent requiring regular care and attendance of another person. The minimum age of these Civil War veterans is about 73, and it is to be expected that great numbers of them are making applications to be given the $72 rate.

The second, the act of June 5, 1920, for Spanish-American War veterans, also has brought in an immense flood of claims, about 2,500 a month.

Some progress has been made under the present administration. There were 99,000 claims pending the 1st of July, and on the 1st of December about 94,000, while to-day it is about 93,000. The normal condition, with the work current, would mean not over 35,000 to 50,000 cases pending.

Some time that bureau would catch up with its work with its present force. But so many of these applications for pensions are men or women of 75, 80, and 85, veterans of the Civil War or their widows, that delay manifestly means often death gets to them before the pension which the Government ought to give them. In addition the delay is distressing even among Spanish-American claims. Many of those claimants are more or less helpless and destitute and in need, and at the present time a Spanish-American War claim, filed last April, gets to-day its first consideration by the bureau, and that is only the beginning. The application is looked over and the needed evidence is called for, and then must ensue another wait of months, and then again. The bureau and Secretary Fall have appealed for a temporary force to bring that work up current. Commissioner Gardner said in his annual report:

There is, however, a limit to patience, and when several months elapse between the filing of claims and the first calls for the proof necessary to establish title to pension, and several months more between the receipt of the proof called for and its consideration, patience gives place to dissatisfaction. The bureau is dealing with claimants of advanced age, or who are suffering from service disabilities, or who are orphans in dire distress, especially widows and minor children. These claimants are in every section of our country and elicit general sympathy in their localities because of their claims upon the Government obligated, as the martyred Lincoln aptly expressed it, "to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan."

When the public sees cases of dire distress or physical helplessness unrelieved by reason of long delay in considering claims for pension, when they witness soldiers and widows, especially of the Civil War, dying before being granted the relief provided for them by the laws of a generous Government, the bureau becomes the subject of severe criticism, which in turn reflects upon those charged with the administration of the affairs of the Government.

It would be a great relief to the bureau if the work of adjudicating claims was current. It would disarm criticism, eliminate dissatisfaction, obviate the hundreds of complaint letters coming to the bureau every week, to answer which consumes time that should be devoted to the work of adjudication of claims and adds to the cost of the pension system for services thus diverted from the regular work. In other words, to be in arrears in work increases the cost of and interferes with and retards the regular operations of the bureau. The work of the Pension Bureau should be made current, to do which will necessitate a temporary addition to our force. Once it is current our present permanent force of employees can keep it current. Congress alone can remedy the conditions as they exist in the bureau at the present time.

Your committee have very carefully investigated the question and recommend $306,800 for a temporary clerical force for one year to bring the work up current.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Very briefly, that I may not take time that others should have.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Does the gentleman think a year would be sufficient to bring that work up? I want to state—

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will pardon me. I do not want to take up too much time in discussion of this, but it has been the conviction of the committee, fortified by special investigation, that it can be done in a year and that it should be done.

The retirement law is also administered by the bureau, and the following data will be of interest in that connection:

Claims disposed of	33,913
Cost of adjudication	$51,023.52
Cost per claim disposed of	$1.505
Disbursed for annuities, etc.	$2,913,547.34
Cost of payment of annuities, etc.	$17,440
Cost for each $100 disbursed	$0.598

Up to June 30, 1921, 7,367 original claims for annuity and 33,500 claims for refund had been filed. Of this number 338 claims for annuity and 6,779 claims for refund were pending on July 1, 1921.

The Treasury Department reports that for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, $12,513,636.69 had been transferred to the "Civil service retirement and disability fund," as provided in section 8 of the act, and that the fund had been increased through the receipt of interest and profits on that portion of the fund which was available for investment and from miscellaneous sources by $72,752.68, making a total of $12,586,389.37.

The total disbursements for the fiscal year on account of annuities, refunds, and allowances were $2,913,547.34, leaving a surplus in the fund for the year of $9,672,842.03.

The Bureau of Education has a work which comes very close to the aspirations of a nation such as ours, where we base our hope of successful democracy upon real development of education among our people. That bureau, established in 1867, has grown and developed its activities and is worthy to-day of much further development. It is first a clearing house for information concerning education, educational agencies, and forms of education. It is, second, the administrative office for the Federal aid to the land-grant colleges. Since 1890, $53,002,000 have been disbursed in that work, including for 1922, $2,500,000.

A third branch of its work, to which I specially call your attention, because you may not be as familiar with it as with other activities of the bureau. That is the work of the bureau for natives of Alaska. The work is of vast extent and is carried on under peculiar difficulties. If Alaska were superimposed on the United States its northernmost capes would be on the boundary between the United States and Canada, its southeasternmost extremity would touch the Atlantic coast at the State of Georgia, the Aleutian Islands would skirt the Mexican border, and the westernmost of its islands would lie on California. The 67 villages in which the bureau's work is located would fall in 21 different States. The Territory has been divided into six school districts, each under the immediate supervision and direction of a district superintendent; one of these supervision districts contains fully 100,000 square miles. The work is carried on for the benefit of adults as well as for children. In the Alaskan native community the school is the center of all activity—social, industrial, and civic—says this Bulletin No. 35. Each schoolhouse is a social center for the accomplishment of practical ends. Many of the buildings contain, in addition to the recitation room, an industrial room, kitchen, quarters for the teacher, and a laundry and baths for the use of the native community. There are cooperative enterprises, financed by native capital and conducted by the natives themselves. I call attention, for instance, to the Hydaburg colony, which, only a generation removed from savagery, under the guidance of the bureau, have turned the dense forest into a thriving, well laid out, electrically lighted, self-governing town, with several miles of planked streets, a modern dock and float landing, a sawmill, a cannery building, church, cooperative store, shingle mill, and lumber yard.

Again at Noorvik. On this tract, within the Arctic Circle, the colonists, under the leadership of the teachers, have built a village, with well laid out streets, neat single family houses, gardens, a mercantile company, a sawmill, an electric-light plant, and a radio station, which keeps them in touch with the outside world. Remember this is within the Arctic Circle.

Now, as to the Reclamation Service. As you are all aware, this is a comparatively recent development in our governmental activities. In the time we have carried it on we have expended $131,038,387, derived from the following sources:

Total receipts, sales of public lands	$103,094,467
Bond loan	20,000,000
Proceeds of oil-leasing act	4,617,665
Proceeds of potassium royalties	12,725
Rio Grande Dam appropriation	1,000,000
Judgments, Court of Claims	450,118
Increase of compensation funds	1,863,512

Of that amount we have actually expended on construction work on reclamation projects $128,528,622. That is a revolving fund. It is added to from time to time by funds derived from the sale of public lands, from oil royalties, and so forth, from the public lands and it is used in building reclamation projects. Then the cost of those projects are in time to come to go back to the fund, repaid to the Government by the people who get the benefit of the project, and used again for other projects. I tell you, the results must be seen to be fully appreciated. The people of the West appreciate it, and those in the East who come in contact with it can not help but appreciate it. It has been my privilege to visit some 20 of those projects. It is nothing short of miraculous. You go over a waste area decorated only by sagebrush and apparently of soil so barren that no matter how much water was put upon it it never could produce anything, and find adjacent similar land under irrigation, perhaps the water brought by immense engineering works from reservoirs hundreds of miles away, and there you see the finest kind of agricultural development.

To go over such an area, to visit a city of 10,000 or 15,000 people, and know that within 10 or 15 years that site where the city now stands was only a desert waste, and to find in that city the very highest type of American civilization, with splendid school buildings and every other community activity, was very gratifying.

I asked from the Reclamation Service some figures, and they have given facts which you will find in the hearings with reference to the Minidoka project in Idaho; figures that were prepared in January, 1920. In 1904, 16 years before, the land was an uninhabited sagebrush desert, with no town, no farm, no railroads, no facilities of any kind, and all that it has to-day is the result of the construction of the irrigation work, at a cost of $5,800,000. Of this amount over $1,000,000 was repaid at the end of 1919, and more since.

Now, that one project, created at an expenditure of $5,800,000, which is to come back into the Treasury, has created value in the way of farm land and improvements to the extent of $30,373,000. There is an assessed valuation of that project of $14,570,000. The crops produced in 1919 amounted in value to $5,924,000—more than the entire cost of the project. As to shipments, there were 6,900 carloads of shipments of hay, potatoes, beets, cattle, wheat, sugar, sheep, flour, and other products.

Now, as to the purchase of manufactures: During my tour I remember one evening, after a day spent in going over a project, I believe in the State of Oregon, and, being from the State of Michigan, as I went down the street of that town, a town built by reason of the development of an irrigation project, I was interested to note that along that street, on both sides of it, were hundreds of automobiles, that never would have been bought except for the project, and most of those automobiles came from the State of Michigan, very properly; and so I feel that the State of Michigan has an immediate selfish interest in the development of those splendid new home regions found in the West.

On this Minidoka project in Idaho the wholesale purchase of manufactures in 1919 amounted to $7,139,000, as follows:

Dry goods, clothing, shoes	$1,293,000
Lumber	1,060,000
Automobiles, trucks, etc.	1,040,000
Groceries	814,000
Hardware	589,000
Coal, feed, flour, and bags	486,000
Farm implements	434,000
Machinery and supplies	375,000
Electrical supplies	279,000
Jewelry and miscellaneous instruments	249,000
Drugs and sundries	172,000
Cigars, etc.	124,000
Furniture	121,000
Other merchandise	103,000

Total for one year..... 7,139,000

Then as to the war activities of this project. There were from it over 1,000 men in the Army and 4,100 Red Cross members. In addition they took in Liberty loans, Red Cross subscriptions, and other subscriptions for war activities, $2,014,000 from that project. And let me remind you as to these projects that they provide for the maintenance of a home and a family on a small area of land, 40 or 60 acres in many cases, and that nearly always the man who owns the land cultivates it, to my mind the ideal development for this America of ours. [Applause.] In addition to that development of the country it is estimated that these projects increased the population of towns adjacent, so that they may support not only their own population but in towns and cities adjacent there has been an increase in population, as the table in the hearings (p. 613) will show, from 76,807 in 1900 to 310,844 in 1920 in certain cities and towns.

In the pending bill I should say that we have made a reduction of $1,500,000 below the estimates this year submitted for reclamation work. The reason is this: Those appropriations are taken from the money in the reclamation fund, and no more can be used than is in the fund, whether appropriated or not.

In the last year or two we have been overestimating the amount in the reclamation fund, and hence we have been appropriating several million dollars more for the Reclamation Service than there would be available in the fund. That resulted in expensive changes of plans in the Reclamation Service and turned rejoicing to grief in western communities when they had to go without those projects that were appropriated for and which they thought would be built. So this year we asked Director Davis to submit a revised estimate on a conservative basis of how much money would be in that fund, and by reason of his estimate, with a reduction of $1,500,000, our appropriations were cut in the same way.

The Geological Survey is a great service, which has been remarkably well administered under Dr. George Otis Smith. It is a service which joins in an effective and very necessary way with every activity in connection with the national domain, and has other important work. For instance, recently from Dr. Smith, in response to an inquiry, I learned that they have developed in connection with that service a potash field in Texas which is going to be of great value to this Nation.

Dr. Smith says concerning it:

At four points in western Texas wells drilled in search for oil have penetrated great thicknesses of ordinary salt which show potash at different horizons. In each of these wells one or more beds from 5 to 15 feet thick have been traversed in which a potash content of 10 per cent is strongly indicated. Core drilling is, of course, necessary to prove the exact thickness and composition of these beds, but I feel that I am conservative in expressing my belief that over an area of at least 200 square miles there is spread a bed of potash salts thick enough for underground mining just as the salt beds of the same age are mined in Kansas.

To sum up, it is evident that these western Texas deposits, containing as they do considerable amounts of water soluble potash salts suitable for direct use in agriculture, hold promise of supplying a large demand in the near-by States, irrespective of the possible competition with imported potash salts in the Atlantic seaboard region, and assure the United States of protection against a serious potash shortage in the event of war.

In the pending bill your committee has made some reductions in the estimates for the Geological Survey, not because of any lack of confidence in the survey or any lack of appreciation of their work but because we have felt that some of its activities which must be done sometime are some of the things that now can wait.

The Bureau of Mines, which is able to show such a direct relation between the work it has been carrying on for the safety of the miners and the reduction in the loss of life, has demonstrated in many lines its value. The accompanying table shows this connection with coal mining:

Year.	Number of major disasters at coal mines.	Number killed by major disasters.	Average number killed by each major disaster.	Percentage of total number killed by all causes.
1911	15	413	28	15.5
1912	13	254	20	10.5
1913	8	464	58	16.7
1914	11	316	29	12.9
1915	11	262	24	11.5
1916	11	154	14	6.9
1917	9	262	29	9.7
1918	4	54	14	2.1
1919	9	201	22	8.7
1920	8	61	8	2.7

Many of their activities throughout the West have resulted in great economies in the development of our oil wells and the conservation of the product. In many other lines important work is being done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will have to take five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The Patent Office has been much before Congress of late. Its work began in 1790. It is interesting to note that Thomas Jefferson was the first man in charge of it as Secretary of State. In his time there were only three patents issued in the first year, and in three years only about 60. It has had various vicissitudes, but it has wonderfully developed and has had a great part in the development of this country. It probably, on basic inventions, has passed more patents than all the other countries put together. The basic patents issued by the Patent Office since 1836 include the telegraph, vulcanization of rubber, the sewing machine, the harvester, the telephone, the incandescent electric light, the phonograph, the moving-picture devices, the typewriter, the airplane, high-speed steel, the linotype, the air brake, and the automatic car coupler. These give us some idea both of the great industrial development in a short period of time in this Nation and the problems of the Patent Office. It receives now 110,000 applications a year, issues 40,000 patents, registers 12,000 trade-marks, and its accumulated surplus to date of receipts over expenditures in the Treasury is $8,000,000. In the pending bill your committee have not granted the additional clerks and increased salaries asked for by reason of the fact that a separate bill for the relief of the Patent Office has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate.

Then there are our national parks. Their development has been under the leadership of Mr. Stephen T. Mather, an idealist and an enthusiast, who, in my judgment, has done as much as any man in the Government to inspire the men under him, the rangers in the parks and the men in the bureau here, to have zeal for their work. He has been accomplishing tremendous things in improving the parks, in increasing the facilities for your comfort when you visit them, and in interesting the people of the Nation in them. I think none of the cuts that were made in the pending bill hurt my feelings or strained my conscience more than those which were made in the appropriations for the Park Service; but we adopted the policy of providing for the continuance of the present activities, and in so far as we thought possible have postponed new developments.

There are other activities in the Department of the Interior. I will not take your time now to enumerate them. There is St. Elizabeths Hospital, with its population of 4,000 unfortunate, who are cared for there under the leadership of that great specialist, Dr. White.

There is Howard University, where we take care of those who in a sense are also our wards, the colored race, in an educational way.

There is the Freedmen's Hospital. There are the Territories, particularly Alaska, with that great engineering enterprise, the Alaska Railroad, now nearing completion.

These, my friends, are some of the activities of this great department of the Government.

It would not be fair to those who most deserve credit if, in concluding these remarks, I failed to express to you the indebtedness which I personally feel to my associates on the subcommittee. I am in a sense an easterner, a tenderfoot, trying to pass upon western problems; but I have been fortunate enough to have with me men like the gentleman from Idaho [Mr.

FRENCH] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], both of whom are experts and men of the finest judgment; also the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who probably does not know any more than I do—and that is very little—about these problems, but who is so able and has had such a long experience in committee work that his cooperation is very valuable indeed. Then there was our colleague, Mr. Elston, one of the dearest friends I have had in Congress since I have been a Member, whose tragic death, just as we were beginning the hearings, saddened the committee throughout its labors.

I thank you for your kind consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] I will control the time on this side, and I will ask to be recognized for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] was generous but was mistaken in saying that I know as much about the activities that are provided for in this bill as he does. I think by his statement he has demonstrated that he has a very clear conception of the problems which are met by the appropriations in this bill. I have seldom known a more faithful worker than the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has proved himself to be in the consideration of this bill, and he is to be congratulated upon the result of his efforts.

I am not going to refer to the details of the bill. There are only two or three items as to which there is any difference between members of the committee, and those items will be discussed when the bill is considered under the 5-minute rule. I desire to speak of the financial situation that now confronts the Congress and the country.

The press tells us that the Ways and Means Committee has about decided to levy additional taxes amounting to $350,000,000 a year in order to pay the soldiers' bonus. I contend that it is the duty of the Congress, instead of levying additional taxes upon the people, to pay the soldiers' bonus out of the savings which have been effected by the Bureau of Budget, according to the statement of the President. The people are asking for less taxation, not more taxation. Last week the President of the United States announced to the country that he was speaking with the authority of the Bureau of the Budget in saying that in less than six months of this fiscal year the administration had reduced the appropriations Congress made for the current year directly by the sum of $32,000,000 and indirectly by the sum of $104,000,000. That makes a saving out of the funds that you appropriated for this fiscal year of $136,000,000 in less than six months. We have no reason to believe that with the condition of the country as it is and the demand for economy as pressing as it is, the administration will be any less energetic during the next six months. Therefore it is evident that by June 30 they will have saved out of the funds appropriated for this year an amount equal to the amount saved in the first six months, which will make a total saving of $272,000,000.

Now, within the last 48 hours the Secretary of the Navy announces that he has suspended work on all naval armament to be scrapped as a result of the conference. If the people are to be given the benefit of the action of the Arms Conference, the millions of dollars that will be saved by the Navy between now and the end of the fiscal year on June 30 ought to be credited to the account of the taxpayers, and if you will only give them $78,000,000 in addition to the $272,000,000 which Director Dawes and the President indicated they could save, then you will have $350,000,000 on the 1st of July with which to pay the bonus to the soldiers of the World War. And yet you do not intend to pay the bonus until January 1, 1923. Why, you could take your savings effected by the President and Director Dawes, and the savings you claim in the Navy Department, invest them at interest until January 1, 1923, when you want to pay the first installment of the bonus, and you would have more than enough to pay the bonus to the soldiers. Instead of that you are working day after day planning to levy a tax on gasoline when all the State legislatures are engaged in doing the same thing, planning to levy a tax on bank checks, planning to levy a tax on real estate transactions, and a stamp tax upon many documents, when at the same time you are announcing in the daily press of the country that you are saving millions of dollars, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations announced in the Sunday papers that the saving was great. The headline in the Washington Post reads, "Sees surplus in 1923." If that be so, I ask you to defend your action in levying a tax upon bank checks, gasoline, and real estate transactions in the face of a declared surplus by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The people of the country are not in favor of paying more taxes to add to the surplus created by your economy.

There is another headline in the Washington Post, "MADDER says Congress's policy will net $100,000,000." By executive order the President has created a chief coordinator. A chief coordinator is now in demand. I want him to coordinate the statement of the President, Budget Director Dawes, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I am unable to learn just exactly how much is saved, and wish they would agree.

Every morning I take up the newspaper and my heart is gladdened and my appetite quickened by the good news that millions are being saved. I rejoice at it, and I ask now that you let the taxpayer share the pleasure and have some benefit from the saving we are effecting in the newspapers instead of levying new taxes to pay the bonus to soldiers.

But let me again refer to the statement by the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The headline in the Post says, "Three hundred and fifty-seven million dollars cut in Budget." That made me feel good. The soldiers' bonus only calls for the payment of $350,000,000 on January 1, 1923. If the cut in the Budget is $357,000,000, your difficulties are at an end. You have a surplus of $7,000,000, and the $357,000,000 can lie idle in the Treasury until January 1, 1923, when you can pay it to the soldiers and avoid this levying of taxes on gasoline, bank checks, and real-estate transactions.

Of course, my fear is that some day or other there will come a rude awakening, and as a matter of fact there will be no surplus, but instead of a surplus we will have to enact a deficiency bill. I express this fear because I have to tell you that while we have created a surplus in the Washington Post and a saving of $136,000,000 down at the meeting of the department heads in the Pan American Building last week, at which the President presided, the Appropriations Committee will this week begin hearings on a deficiency bill, for which the estimates total $180,000,000, and you will be called upon in a few days to reconcile the alleged saving of $136,000,000 with an actual deficit of $180,000,000, requested by the President and Budget Director from the Appropriations Committee.

That is high finance, and it causes me to make some reference to the Budget Bureau. I favored the creation of the Bureau of the Budget, and I had great hopes for its success. I still hope, but my hopes have been somewhat shattered. I turn to page 9 of the report of the Bureau of the Budget, and I ask you to look at it, and there you will find that this bureau, which daily saves millions of dollars in the newspapers, sent to Congress for consideration at this session total estimates of appropriation of $3,801,659,53, and in the column next to it is a statement of appropriations made for 1922, and that amounts to only $3,771,900,514.01. So that this economical Bureau of the Budget for the year 1923, four years after the close of the war, asks you to appropriate $29,213,145 more than you appropriated last year. And then, not content with that, they have submitted supplemental estimates since they filed their estimates in December amounting to $80,083,220, making a total of $109,296,365 that they have asked you to appropriate over and above what your appropriations were for this fiscal year.

If that is the way the Budget Bureau is to function, then the sooner it is dispensed with the more benefit will come to the taxpayers. I rejoice that to date the Committee on Appropriations in the bills reported to this House has reduced by $64,000,000 the estimates submitted by the Budget Bureau, which was to save money for the taxpayers and prevent a willfully extravagant Congress from raiding the Treasury. An idea of how this bureau has functioned would be secured if the gentleman in charge of this bill would advise the House with reference to one little item in this bill. One official of the Government said that on two occasions he told a representative of the Bureau of the Budget that he could reduce a particular estimate, but notwithstanding that he acquiesced in the reduction and asked for it, the official of the Bureau of the Budget, in his generosity or carelessness, failed to reduce the estimate. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is authority for the statement, and I know that it will not be questioned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman be willing to give the case?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], a member of the subcommittee, is as well acquainted with it as I am. I refer to Dr. Smith, of the Geological Survey. He did not make the statement to me, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] so stated in the full meeting of the Committee on Appropriations the other day.

Mr. MANN. I am merely asking for information so that the Director of the Budget may have it and find out why.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have given it to him as the gentleman from Michigan gave it to us. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has been interested in this Budget Bureau, that my belief is that we have wasted six months in the development of the organization of the Bureau of the Budget. It was never intended that the principal function of the Bureau of the Budget should be that which has engaged most of its attention during the last six months. There never was a time when the Chief Executive could not call in the various heads of departments and demand that they keep their expenditures within the appropriations and even reduce them, and as the head of the department has the power to remove the chiefs of the various bureaus if they fail to comply, his insistence would be effective. The Bureau of the Budget apparently has directed its activity to restricting authorized expenditures. I have no doubt they have done some good work along that line, but that is not its only function. I have yet to learn of any activity by the Comptroller General, from which officer the Congress expected so much. And in the preparation of the estimates no organization has been developed. Whoever heard of resorting to the policy that has been followed—for instance, calling in business men, excellent men in their respective businesses, but having no knowledge of government at all, to prepare these estimates and then return to their homes and render no aid to Congress. In one instance the president of an elevator company was called in—one of the best business men in the country, it is said. He was sent into one of the departments and spent some days in investigations in order to pass upon the relative value of the various activities of that department in preparing estimates to be submitted to Congress. How could he possibly go to the bottom of it? How could he know the relative value of the activities? It is not possible at all, and the only system that they could have pursued in order to secure any results would have been to take the appropriations made by the Congress, select some man familiar with the work of a department, make him an employee of the Budget Bureau, and then send him into that department to study its activities, and after he prepares the estimate and submits it have him then go before the congressional committee and sit there and defend his estimates and help the congressional committee.

Yet up to this time in no one instance that I know of have we had the representative of the Bureau of the Budget to sit with the subcommittee to defend the estimates submitted by the Bureau of the Budget or to help them in framing them, and so far as the practical work is concerned it has consisted in submitting the estimates, which have been reduced $64,000,000. For instance, in this bill the gentleman from Michigan has had to delve into every item in this appropriation bill just as he would have had to do two years ago, before the creation of the Budget Bureau, and we never have seen the representative of the Bureau of the Budget since the first day we met.

My idea has been that if under the new direction of Gen. Lord the Budget Bureau will select a capable man and send him into a department to make a study of its activities; then have him prepare the estimate and come before Congress and sit daily with the Committee on Appropriations to defend the estimates of the bureau, something can be accomplished, but it can not be done in the way in which it has been conducted for the past six months. This time has been thrown away, because the gentlemen who made these estimates have in many instances gone back to their business, and now we will have to start all over with a new organization. By this time we should have had a permanent organization.

I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. FRENCH. You all know how it feels when you have had a beautiful speech prepared and then two brilliant and able speakers have preceded you and cut into the subject that you had planned to discuss. At any rate, I congratulate my colleagues on the committee, Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. BYRNES, upon their comprehensive statements. I do not mean to say that I would have made the same remarks made by my predecessor, my distinguished and delightful friend from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], or that I would draw the conclusions that he has drawn. On the other hand, much that he said about the bill is what I had in mind.

Before proceeding with the bill itself, let me refer to just one or two things stated by my distinguished colleague [Mr. BYRNES] immediately before he took his seat. He condemned the Budget system in its operations during the first six months because in contrasting the estimates submitted to Congress by the Budget he finds they are approximately $110,000,000 above the last appropriation bill covering the same items referred to by the Budget, passed in the last Congress. Did the distinguished gentleman himself realize what an arraignment he thus makes of his own administration which submitted the last estimates to the Congress before the estimate submitted by the Budget, the estimates one year ago, when the Congress scaled down the estimates $1,500,000,000 in round numbers below the amounts asked for by the administration? [Applause on Republican side.] If what my friend has said is an arraignment of the Budget system, what must it be of the administration of his own party that was succeeded by the present administration under which the Budget system is functioning?

I am not going at length to defend the Budget system. I have not the slightest doubt that it will justify itself; indeed, that it has already justified itself. It has made it possible for the administration to coordinate as never before the different departments of Government, to call attention to and to eliminate duplication of work, to estimate in a systematic way the expenditures for which the Government is willing to stand. It had about six months in which to do its first work. It has already justified itself during those six months by submitting estimates for the next fiscal year lower by $1,500,000,000 than were submitted one year ago by the Democratic administration, and I have not the slightest doubt that it will continue to justify itself during the years that are to come.

Gentlemen, there is always something heroic in appearance, at least, when in reporting an appropriation bill one can point to a cut of $10,000,000 in one item, $100,000,000 in another, and so on down the line. I remember last year, when we considered the Navy bill, we had before us estimates of approximately $700,000,000 for the running of the Navy for the present fiscal year. We were able to come before the Congress and report a bill having scaled down the estimates in round numbers approximately $300,000,000, or, in other words, more than the amount we are asking for in the present Interior Department measure. We can not do that in this bill. This bill pertains to what the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee has so aptly called the home department of the Government. It is, if you please, a sort of kitchen of the Government. You can economize in your family circle by abandoning one of your two automobiles, you can economize by not building an addition to your home or by omitting to make a trip to Europe that you had hoped to make, but when it comes to the handling of the living expenses of the home you can not cut those expenses much below what the superintendent of the household tells you is absolutely necessary. We have then before us to-day the home department of the Government—the Department of the Interior. This department was established about 70 years ago, on March 3, 1849. At the time it was established it was said on the floors of the Congress that up until then it had cost $700,000,000 for the administration of the Government of the United States since Washington was first inaugurated. We were told that up to that time it had cost about $1,000,000 of the $700,000,000 to provide for the agencies of Government that had distinctively to do with peace; the encouragement of arts and sciences, education, agriculture, facilitation of commerce, and just such things as this bill to-day pertains. We were told that at the time the Interior Department was created it was costing this Government approximately $12,000,000 to $14,000,000 annually to maintain the War and the Navy Departments. From that beginning until now the Department of the Interior has continued to do a tremendous work, a most important work, and for a small amount of money.

Another thing that you must bear in mind is this: The bill carries $295,622,112, but of that amount the sum of $253,987,720 is for pensions of the veterans of the Civil, Spanish-American, and Indian Wars, and soldiers of the Regular Army; in other words, for war purposes or purposes resulting from war.

For purposes apart from war and its consequences the bill carries a little more than $40,000,000.

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the representatives of the Interior Department who appeared before our committee upon their evident frankness and sincerity in presenting their cases. Of course, with the estimate, they showed by arguments the importance of the particular work which they brought before the committee and sometimes emphasized matters beyond reason. But let me tell you that a man is not worth his salt who does not exaggerate the work in which he is engaged and unconsciously magnify it more than the rest of the people on the outside think that it deserves. That is the case of those who appeared before us as they urged the respective agencies of their great department. But I want to tell you that, uniformly, they were frank. They laid their cards on the table and left us to determine whether the work that they were carrying forward was a worthy work.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. FRENCH. Briefly.

Mr. LAZARO. There was an article in the press recently on this home department and the work of Secretary Fall. Will the gentleman tell us something relating to the public-lands money and that relating to these oil leases?

Mr. FRENCH. I will in a moment. I will come to that in a little bit if the gentleman will bear with me. I was just speaking a word of approval about the frankness and candor on the part of the representatives of the Interior Department. As a Member of Congress I have had membership on various committees. We have had witnesses of all kinds urging claims, appropriations of one kind and another, and sometimes you know just as well as I do that when a witness sits across the table from you you feel that just before he came there he had knelt down in his home on his knees and had made a prayer something like this, "Dear Lord, help me to say nothing to the committee this day that will hurt my case." That is what you have to meet. You must use a corkscrew to pull evidence from such a witness. In shaping this bill the committee members were face to face with men who were willing to lay their cards on the table, willing to justify their case, willing to explain fully the work they were carrying forward.

I am not going to refer here at length to our national assets. I would like to do it. It is a very splendid story, but the chairman has outlined the subject. Our public domain has been given over to home building for the most part, and this great work was accomplished through the Department of the Interior. Yet to-day we have public lands, exclusive of Alaska, that aggregate 200,000,000 acres. Besides that we have 154,000,000 acres in forest reserves. The Interior Department has to do in whole or in part with all this acreage.

The monetary value of this estate is estimated at $12,000,000,000—land, mineral wealth, forests, water power—a vast estate.

Then there is Alaska, with her untold wealth. There are our national parks, with their marvelous scenic beauty and natural wonders.

Within the United States and Alaska are more than 340,000 Indians, whose property aggregates more than $1,256,000,000, and, in whole or in part, these Indians and their property must have the attention of our Government.

The Interior Department has to do with all these matters, and handles them through such agencies as the General Land Office, the Geological Survey, Reclamation Service, Bureau of Mines, Indian Bureau, National Park Service—all of them great and vital bureaus of the Government. Then, under the Department of the Interior is that most important yet starved Bureau of Education. There is the Patent Office, there is the Bureau of Pensions, and then there are other great agencies for service, such as St. Elizabeths Hospital, Freedman's Hospital, Howard University, Columbia Institute for the Deaf, and probably I should also add certain matters connected with Hawaii and with the building of the Government railroad in Alaska.

The gentleman from Louisiana has suggested I refer to receipts of public lands and how they are handled. In a general way most of the receipts of the public lands to-day go into the reclamation fund. We have certain receipts from forest lands and forest reserves that will be considered in another bill. Let me say that a percentage of such receipts go to the counties of the States where the forests are located to take the place of taxes that would accrue to the States were the forest to pass to private ownership.

Again, under the coal, gas, and oil law, to which the gentleman from Louisiana referred, the law provides that 10 per cent of all money received from sales, bonuses, royalties, and penalties, excepting those from Alaska, shall go into the Treasury of the United States. The law provided further that 70 per cent of the receipts accrued when the act was passed and 52½ per cent of future receipts should be turned into the national reclamation fund, and that the future 37½ per cent should be paid over to the State when collected for public road and public school or other public educational purposes.

Thus for the most part the income from the public domain of the country goes into the reclamation fund, which fund is a revolving fund. Last year approximately $14,000,000 was received by the Federal Government and turned over for reclamation use. The Reclamation Service was created only about 20 years ago. Since this time it has received approximately $123,000,000, and this money is being expended for the purpose of reclaiming land under a system by which it will be paid back during a period of 20 years by those receiving the benefit of reclamation. Was there any other phase that the gentleman from Louisiana wanted to inquire about?

Mr. LAZARO. I wanted the gentleman to discuss the coal and oil leasing act.

Mr. FRENCH. My time is very limited, and I wonder whether that subject would not be handled better when we get to the items under the five-minute rule? We are receiving. I am glad to say, quite handsome royalties under the gas, oil, and coal leasing bill.

In the short time I have left let me refer in a sort of rambling way to a few activities. There is the Bureau of Mines, one of the newest Federal agencies, and I want to tell you of some of its activities. That bureau was created about 11 years ago. It is a most fascinating study just to look at the page in the hearings that we had, to show, for instance, the saving of life that has been brought about largely through the activities of that one particular bureau. The bureau was created chiefly for the purpose of promoting safety among the mine workers of the country. Its activities have the hearty support of the miners as well as the support of the mine operators. The chairman called your attention in brief to the great saving of life that has been made during the last 11 years. You will find that the percentage of loss of life in the different mining activities of the country begins like a thick wedge about 11 years ago and that it continues to draw down to a thin wedge last year.

In 1911 there were 15 major mine disasters, and in 1920 there were 8; in 1911 there were 413 killed in these disasters, and in 1920 only 61 were killed. The total killed in 1911 was 3,539; the total killed in 1920 was 2,809, or a saving of 730 human lives. Thus the wedge is growing thinner. We expended last year approximately $1,400,000 upon this bureau. If you will apply your arithmetic, you will find that the cost of saving of human life, if all the money spent for the bureau were for this purpose, amounts to $2,000 per individual. What is a human life worth? Surely, it is worth more than that, and if all the money we are appropriating for that one bureau could be utilized exclusively for the purpose of promoting safety in the mines of this country, there would be abundant justification for the maintenance of the work.

But that is only one of the functions of the bureau. In carrying it forward we educate the miners and train them. Cars that you are familiar with, operated by the bureau, go over the country visiting the various mining sections, instructing the miners how to handle their work in safety, how to avoid and detect gases, how to restore men who have been overcome, and, in other words, how in general to conduct themselves so as to avoid the accidents and the perils that necessarily are incident to the carrying forward of mining operations.

But important as that is, that is only one of the agencies of the Bureau of Mines. One of the most important agencies of the Bureau of Mines is the carrying forward of scientific work of tremendous value to the country. Let me refer to just one or two illustrations that you may have in mind what I mean.

A few weeks ago you heard the address by my distinguished colleague from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] upon helium. It was the day that a balloon carried by helium floated over the city of Washington. Perhaps you are not aware of the fact that much or most of the scientific work that was done to make possible the use of the gas helium, which is not an explosive, which is not inflammable, which means greater safety for aviation, was carried forward in the Bureau of Mines.

Let me give you another illustration: About a dozen years ago, as you would travel through mining sections of the West, where especially copper and lead ore were being produced, you would see the smelters with their tall chimneys from which the smoke of a light color was going quietly forth. You would look over the hills and the mountains and you would see what looked like a region that you would expect would surround a volcano. What was it? The vegetation was being killed by gases that were being emitted from the chimneys.

More than that, metals were being wasted. The Bureau of Mines began to consider whether or not from the various economic standpoints something could be done. Whenever lead and copper ores together were in such quantities that the lead represented less than 25 per cent of the mass of lead and copper, it was impossible to extract that lead from the lead and copper mass and to save it. In other words, as you would melt down the ore in the great smelter, the lead would become vapor. It would volatilize at a lower temperature than would the copper, and it would pass away in vapor with other gases through the great chimney, to work destruction upon the vegetation of the surrounding country.

Now, Dr. Cottrell, within the Bureau of Mines, went to work on that problem and spent some years in wrestling with it. He devised a process by which, through screens and certain electrical appliances in the top of the chimney, the lead fumes were condensed, solidified, and recovered, and there was saved that which prior to 10 years ago was an absolute waste.

Is it worth while, then, to carry on an agency by which there can be saved 500 pounds out of every 2,000 pounds of ores mined when it is found in mass with lead and copper?

Now, that is merely one of the activities of this great department. The chairman referred to the national parks. I, too, am favorably impressed with the national parks. Here is a service that is somewhat unique. Many of the services of this Government take from the Treasury money without giving back in dollars and cents to the Federal Treasury any return. Here is a service that, during the time especially that it has been presided over by Mr. Mather, has come to be practically self-sustaining, so far as the maintenance of the different parks may be concerned, and the addition that we are calling for in this bill above the receipts of the various national parks for the most part can be taken to mean an investment by the Federal Government in the building of roads and other equipment to make the parks more accessible to the public.

In other words, here is a service that to-day is turning back annually approximately 40 per cent of the expenditures in its behalf, the other 60 per cent going into roads and other Government improvements; and with the increase of the facilities for the various parks throughout the country a still greater sum will be turned back to the Government.

As I told you, the Interior Department is an old department. It has been combed again and again from the standpoint of trying to save money. We are not going to be able to scale down the appropriations here as you could scale them down, for instance, in the naval bill of a year ago; but, on the other hand, by reason of the age of the department it has suffered something of deterioration that ought not to have been. Take, for instance, the Patent Office. That office to-day is housed in a building that is not adequate for efficient, businesslike work. Yet you are calling upon the department there to render service. We have had our attention called, for instance, to the filing system, the file cases for hundreds of thousands of different patent devices. Something like 60 young men are there constantly engaged in going to the files and bringing out cases in the carrying forward of a daily work that means revenue to the Government. Here are inadequate files and an antiquated filing system by reason of it, and with that system the office is required to-day to use 60 men to do the work that 30 men could do if we would provide up-to-date appliances.

There are other departments which need all the encouragement and serious attention of the legislative committees of this Congress.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. ARENTZ. I know the gentleman does not care to make a statement that is not correct and I should like to say just a word on the Cottrell process to clear it up. In all smelting operations certain minerals are volatilized—gold, silver, lead, copper, bismuth, and other metals. The fumes that come from these smelting operations carry these volatilized metals. These fumes are passed through high-tension electric currents and the fumes are dissipated. That, in a few words, is what the gentleman, as I know, meant to say.

Mr. FRENCH. I am very glad the gentleman, who is a mining engineer, has said in splendid scientific language what I tried to say in the poor language of a layman. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman from Michigan wish me to yield some time now?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, since this bill carries the appropriations for the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian field service, I take this occasion to make some observations in regard to the Indian problem. That problem, to my mind, is principally one of salvage—to make the best we can out of the lives of the Indians who remain in the United States to-day—and its ultimate solution must be sought in developing among them an independent and self-sustaining citizenship.

The oldest and the easiest way to solve the Indian problem was to kill the Indian, a very simple and a very satisfactory solution, so far as the white people were concerned. That was the method adopted by my ancestors in New England and by yours in other parts of America. Later the policy was changed to one of driving the Indians out of parts of the country that white settlers desired. Thousands of Indians who originally lived in Georgia and Alabama, in Ohio and Kentucky, in Michigan and Illinois, and other sections of the eastern United States were moved west of the Mississippi River. As civilization and settlement passed on to the West, the reservation system was adopted, and the Indians were gathered together on tracts of land taken out of the public domain and set aside for their use.

It would be both vain and useless to consume time condemning or praising our ancestors for what they did to or for the Indians. What they did, they did, and the results lie before us. One side of the picture does not give us warrant to boast that justice and fair dealing have characterized the treatment that the people who first inhabited this country have received from the American Government.

The other side of the picture is much brighter. It shows tens of thousands of men, women, and children of Indian blood who in every way are so much in advance of their own grandfathers that their progress can only be characterized as astounding. In the same community there will be found men who have fought, killed, and scalped their enemies dwelling with their children and grandchildren, who live, act, and dress as their white neighbors do. Old warriors who, with painted faces and the tactics of barbarians, fought the United States soldiers can be seen daily carrying their children's children to public schools in wagons.

I can remember as a small boy a tribe of Indians living near where I was born who went about clad in little more than a breechclout—naked, good-natured, friendly savages. To-day most of the members of the Pima tribe can speak English, have fairly comfortable homes, a number of them own automobiles, and practically all of them make as good use of the land that they have and the water supplied to them for irrigation as their white neighbors—a marvelous change within the last 40 years.

Millions of acres which but a few years ago were prairies ranged by buffalo hunters to-day are fertile farms cultivated by the sons and grandsons of these same Indians. Thousands of Indian children are attending schools maintained for them by the Government. Indian medicine men have been displaced in most tribes by white doctors with hospitals to which Indian patients are taken. Where once there was war between the red and white men, to-day there is more than peace—there is being successfully established the friendly communion of neighborliness.

Indians are bank presidents, judges, public officials, lawyers, teachers, doctors, actors, storekeepers, manufacturers, clerks, salesmen, trained nurses, artists, authors; in short, they are successfully making their way in all the commercial and professional branches. The real blanket Indians are the old full-bloods, too set in their ways to change. In another generation or two they will have become but a memory if a proper policy of education is pursued.

The march of progress has entirely wiped out of existence a number of tribes, but has carried forward other tribes on the road of civilization. The white men, first the conquerors and then guardians of the Indians, took to them whisky and rum, the greatest curses ever brought to a primitive people. They introduced diseases which carried away thousands of natives, but they have also given to the Indians schoolhouses, hospitals, modern farm machinery, better cattle, and many creature comforts of which the original Americans were totally ignorant. The balance is therefore not wholly against the white man, as many would have us believe.

The American public, as a whole, knows but little of Indians and its interest in them is less than its knowledge of them. To most white men and women the American Indian falls into two classes; Indians who are dissolute paupers and beggars, the recipients of Government rations and money which at once goes for drink, and Indians who are wealthy beyond dreams of avarice through their possession of oil fields, cattle, or timber. About all the average person knows of Indians is that they are something or other which the Government, in some way or other, is trying to do something or other for.

I should hesitate to risk asking the Members of this House the question, "What do you really know about the American Indians?" I should not like to disclose their lack of knowledge about the Government's wards which can be sensed by anyone at all familiar with Indians, who reads the debates in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on bills affecting the red men of our country. This kind of ignorance is responsible for much of the criticism, even abuse, which comes from many good people who think Uncle Sam is mistreating, enslaving, debasing, pauperizing, and otherwise wronging his Indian nephews and nieces. It also is at the bottom of many of the complaints from well-meaning people who think the Government is doing altogether too much for the Indians.

The Government departments having to do with Indians publish but little about them. The Bureau of Ethnology has issued an excellent series of bulletins, many of them beautifully illustrated, but they are technical in their nature. The trouble with the ethnologist is that he wants to keep the Indian in his old state; he is interested in describing the ancient tribal customs and is not concerned about modern conditions.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs issues an annual report containing a vast amount of information about the Indians as they are to-day and of the Government's relations with them and of its activities in their behalf. But it is a Government report—concise, statistical, and formal.

Many writers have published books and articles about the Indians, some of them intensely interesting and most valuable in an educational way. But nowhere can there be found a comprehensive presentation of the conditions, welfare, progress, and modern life of the American Indians. No one has brought together in a readable, easily understandable form all the data touching the present-day Indians and their affairs.

I have no intention of attempting such a task, but I have gathered some information which may serve to shed a little light upon this question. I can presume to speak upon it after 10 years' service on the Committee of Indian Affairs and also on account of the personal contact that I have had with the Indians of my State, where they comprise a material element in our population, there being more than 40,000 of them in Arizona, more full-blood Indians than in any other State in the Union.

THE INDIAN SERVICE.

Living in communities or scattered over wide areas in 24 States are thousands of men, women, and children who are wards of the Government. They are American Indians who by an act of Congress have been placed in charge of the Secretary of the Interior. By authority of law he delegates the administration of his guardianship activities to a commissioner who is the executive head of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. This branch of Government service is divided into two coordinating departments—the Indian Office in Washington and the Indian Field Service, which is composed of about 130 units known as agencies, reservations, nonreservation schools, hospitals, sanitariums for tubercular patients, and warehouses.

In the Indian Office in Washington are divisions or sections which have to do with the education, health, agriculture, industries, finances, irrigation projects, welfare, probate matters, forests, lands, and live stock of the Indians and their legal and social relations with their white neighbors. There is scarcely an activity of human endeavor that does not come within the scope of everyday work and administration of the Indian Bureau. It is a unique department of the Government; there is nothing else like it.

The Indian Service began under the War Department in 1789, and was later transferred to the Department of the Interior. Any Commissioner of Indian Affairs has my sympathy. He has a most perplexing and unappreciated job. He stands in the relation of father to the biggest family in the world, for he has direct, almost personal, supervision over the affairs of more than 200,000 men, women, and children who are spread over 24 States, who are members of more than 100 different tribes, whose habitations range from the Everglades of Florida to the mountains of Montana, from the northern timber belt to the deserts in the Southwest, from the rich prairies of the Middle West to the highly developed irrigation areas of the Pacific coast. Every reservation and every Indian on a reservation presents a problem.

Each day in the routine of his work the Commissioner of Indian Affairs must be something of an executive, an administrator, a business man, a school-teacher, a doctor, a lawyer, a banker, a farmer, a stock raiser, a forester, a miner, an oil man, an expert accountant, a missionary, a mentor, and a friend of man. The property of the Indians under his supervision has an aggregate value close to a billion dollars, and this property belongs to a people which is emerging from a condition of primitive barbarism. The Indians to-day represent every degree of civilization, ranging all the way from almost pagan savagery to men and women of refinement and culture.

To carry on the multitudinous activities of the Indian Service there are 5,502 employees, with a total pay roll of $4,493,041, an average salary of $817 a year. The Washington Indian Office has 256 employees, exclusive of the commissioner and assistant commissioner, with an annual pay roll of $340,750, or an average salary of $1,331. The superintendents, principals, teachers, and other employees in the school service number 2,443, with a pay roll of $1,742,498, an average salary of $713. The total personnel of the reservation and agencies number 2,394, having a pay roll of $1,796,205, making an average salary of $750 a year. The balance of the employees, including the field and investigation sections, irrigation service, allotment service, probate lawyers, experts, and warehouse force number 409, having a pay roll of $613,588, an average salary of $1,500.

It will be noted that the average salary of the employees in the entire Indian Service is but $817 a year, and this does not include the salary of the commissioner and assistant commissioner, which are but $5,000 and $3,500, respectively. I am reliably informed that the pay of the Indian Service employees averages lower than the pay of employees in any other Government department.

A proper salary reclassification bill, when finally enacted into law, should materially improve this situation, which admittedly needs improvement.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the Lehlbach reclassification bill does not contemplate taking care of those outside of the District of Columbia. The largest number of employees in the Indian Service are out of the District of Columbia. Something should be done for the men and women in this service.

Mr. HAYDEN. That bill lays down the principle of equal pay for equal service.

Mr. ARENTZ. If that should be consummated, it would be a good thing.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What does the gentleman mean by equal service, equal pay? How would you apply the principle?

Mr. HAYDEN. If one person be employed as a teacher under the Bureau of Education in Alaska, for example, doing a certain grade of work, and another person were doing the same work in the Indian Service in Arizona, I should say that the same pay should be given for the same service.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Take three concrete cases. Here is an appointment clerk receiving $4,500 a year for handling a roll of 19,000 people. Here is another appointment clerk handling a roll of 67,000 people and another one handling a roll of 1,500 people. Like service, like pay. How are you going to distribute the salaries?

Mr. HAYDEN. The very statement of the case which the gentleman from Nebraska has made indicates that one of those men is doing much more work than either of the others.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I should like to carry that on in connection with the customs service, where you have, for instance, 50 people employed as liquidating clerks, some of them younger, some of them older, some of them inexperienced, relatively, some of them well trained. They are all liquidating clerks. Like service, like pay. Will you make the younger, the inexperienced, equal in salary with the man who is older and who has experience?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly I should not.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. How would the gentleman apply the rule?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman again states a case that answers itself. But to return to my subject. Complaint has been frequently made about not only the inefficiency but the narrowmindedness of Indian Service employees. But why should any broad-gauge, energetic, and efficient man or woman stay in a service where the pay is so poor and the opportunities for advancement so limited? The only reason that there are not more drones and incompetents is that a considerable number, after entering upon this work and realizing its importance, have become imbued with a sincere desire to be helpful to the Indians. The earnestness of some of them even makes them fanatical, so that they honestly believe that in every dispute the Indian is always right and the white man always wrong, regardless of the merits of the controversy. It is only to this missionary spirit, however, that I can attribute the continued presence in the Indian Service of men and women of my acquaintance who I am sure could readily obtain a larger material reward for their time and efforts in other occupations.

THE INDIAN POPULATION.

The number of Indians in the United States is not exactly known. The United States census for 1920 gives a total of 242,959 as the Indian population in the United States, exclusive of Alaska; the 1910 census gave a population of 265,683, which would indicate a decrease of 22,724 Indians. But this decrease, as explained by the Census Bureau, is due to the fact that in the 1920 census the enumerators did not include as Indians a number of persons of Indian blood who were so much more white than Indian that they were enumerated as white people.

The 1921 annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows a total Indian population of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, as of June 30, 1921, of 340,838. This total includes 2,582 white persons who married into the Five Civil-lized Tribes—the Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Chickasaws, and Choctaws—of Oklahoma and 23,405 freedmen who are the descendants of the Negro slaves brought into Indian Territory by the five tribes when they were removed from their eastern and southern homes.

Eliminating the intermarried white and freedmen, the report of the Indian Commissioner would indicate that there are 314,850 Indians in the United States. Of this number, 23,735 are persons of Indian blood who are not under the supervision of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, leaving a total of 291,116 as representing the men, women, and children of Indian blood who are on tribal rolls or are under the supervision and care of the United States Indian Service.

An analysis of the statistics carried in the 1921 annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows that of the 291,116 Indians who are under the supervision, in varying degrees, of the Government 165,031 are full bloods, 46,181 are mixed bloods with a larger proportion of Indian blood in their veins, and 79,904 are of one-half or less Indian blood.

There is an apparent difference of 48,157 between the 1920 United States census and the 1921 report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as respects Indian population in the United States. The greater part of this difference comes in Oklahoma. The census population of the Oklahoma Indians is given as 55,949. The Bureau of Indian Affairs figures are 93,494, showing a difference of 37,545. A large part of this difference is accounted for in the explanation given by the Census Bureau and the further fact that the population figure of the Five Tribes, as shown in the commissioner's report, is not a census total but is the original net enrollment which must be maintained as a basis for determining land ownership and heirship.

There is also a difference of 10,530 between the Indian Service and the census figures in Arizona, which I think can be explained by the fact that the census enumerators were so poorly paid in 1920 that they could not afford to travel long distances over the reservations and make an accurate enumeration, with the result that a large number of Indians in my State were not counted.

The following table gives the figures of Indian population in the different States:

In 22 States all of the Indians are on reservations, or are attached to reservations, or are scattered Indians who are under the care of an agent. In 2 States part of the Indians are under Federal supervision and part are not, and in 24 States and the District of Columbia there are no reservations or agencies. This general statement must be modified by another statement to the effect that in the 22 States referred to there are many Indians who, having received patents in fee to their allotments, are full citizens and no longer are under Federal supervision. Many of them, however, having an interest in undivided tribal property, or being heirs of deceased tribesmen, are under the so-called supervision of the Indian Bureau, which in their cases is acting as trustee or administrator of an estate.

At the close of each fiscal year the agents and superintendents of the Indian field service report to the Washington office the number of Indians who are on the rolls of agencies or reservations; of Indians who live off reservations but are, in some degree, under the care and supervision of agents and of others who, in some respect, are related to the Government in its administration of Indian affairs.

The simple fact that an Indian may be carried on a tribal roll does not necessarily imply that he or she is a Government ward and under Federal supervision. Thousands of Indians who have become full citizens by receiving patents in fee to their property and all their funds, Indians who are free as any Member of this Congress, have their names on tribal rolls.

This apparent anomaly is easily explained by the fiduciary functions of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which, besides being an administrative bureau, is a large probate institution with tens of thousands of clients. It also is a big title and trust organization, acting as trustee and agent for tens of thousands of men, women, and children who happen to have Indian blood in their veins.

The tribal roll is the basis, the beginning, of title to Indian property; it is the official record to which heirs must go to prove heirship; it is necessary to keep up the tribal rolls for the determination of heirs, the disposition of probated property, and for the sale and lease of millions of acres of Indian-owned land. So long as there is tribal property in the form of land or money, or both, so long will tribal rolls be maintained, for every member of the tribe or the heir of a member has an interest in tribal property, even though he or she is a full-fledged citizen and the unrestricted owner of an allotment with a patent in fee for the allotted land.

INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

An Indian reservation can be described as a tract of land set apart for the exclusive occupancy and use of Indians. This was the case in the beginning, but as white settlers moved into the Indian country reservations were opened for settlement. That is, the surplus tribal lands were sold, the proceeds deposited to the credit of the tribe in the United States Treasury, and held for disposition in the discretion of Congress. Such reservations are known as diminished reservations.

Some reservations were instituted through treaties; others by agreements ratified by Congress which had the effect of treaties; others were formed by Executive order of the President; and still others by purchase authorized by Congress. Practically all the Indian reservations in Arizona were created by Executive orders setting apart areas of the public domain for the use of the Indians.

There are over 200 tracts of land in the United States which fall within the reservation class. Some are tiny California rancherias of but few acres each, for a dozen or less families; others cover areas of millions of acres, such as the Navajo Reservation in northeastern Arizona and northwestern New Mexico, with an area exceeding 8,000,000 acres, which is larger than some States in the Union.

Considerably less than a hundred reservations have resident superintendents, whose business is to look after the affairs of the Indians on their several reserves. The 31 mission reservations, or rancherias, for example, are grouped into two jurisdictions, each with an agent. In New Mexico the 19 pueblos are divided into two groups, each with its agent. None of the New York reserves have a resident superintendent, but are under the rather theoretical supervision of an agent. There are some reservations which are such in name only, such as the Cherokee, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole reserves in Oklahoma, for they have been allotted, most of the allotments have been sold, and it is impossible in passing through them to distinguish Indian from white land.

A typical Indian reservation is in charge of a superintendent, who is a pocket edition of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in that he is face to face with almost all of the perplexing problems which confront the commissioner. His is a many-sided job.

In the first place, he is held strictly accountable to the Government for all Government property, such as the agency and school plants, tools, implements, material, supplies, and cash. He also is accountable for all Indian property and money held in trust by him for the Indians. He is responsible to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the maintenance of law and order on the reservation. He is a special disbursing officer, and under bond, the premium of which he has to pay out of his meager salary.

The superintendent of an Indian reservation rests on no bed of roses. On one side of him is the Government, with its demand of 100 per cent accountability; on the other side are a score or more of employees living in an isolated community whose very isolation tends to develop petty jealousies and factional cliques; hundreds of Indians each with his problem, demand, complaint, and request. He is subjected to frequent inspections and check-ups and at any time he is apt to have charges preferred against him by disgruntled employees, dissatisfied Indians, or white men who assert that they have not been treated fairly by him. These charges, if of sufficient importance, are investigated by the Indian Office and action taken when necessary.

If there is a boarding school on the reservation the superintendent has the task of feeding, clothing, doctoring, amusing, and educating a hundred or more young Indians fresh from the soil, many of whom, perhaps, can not speak English. He may have a hospital to look after, a large agency farm and herd, a Government sawmill, flour mill, machine shop, and other industrial plants.

If his Indians are allotted he must attend to leasing their allotments, if they are not farmed by the allottees. He sells their lands and must attend to the estates of deceased Indians. If the tribe owns timber lands whose timber is sold he must see to it that the white lumberman pays for the timber he cuts. This requires a close inspection of logging operations to see that every log is measured, that the trees are cut according to the contract and the regulations. If there are irrigable lands under ditch he must be an irrigation engineer as well.

And with all these duties he is required to encourage the Indians to farm their lands, raise live stock, cut hay, make gardens, prepare for the winter, to send their children to school, to improve their living conditions, and, in short, to get ready to take their places as full-fledged citizens when the time arrives for that consummation of the Government's purpose.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will it disturb my friend if I ask him a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly not.

Mr. HUDSPETH. In recent years they have been purchasing cattle for the Indians on these reservations; has that been a success?

Mr. HAYDEN. It might be called a financial success so far as the operation itself is concerned. The Indian Service has taken over from the persons who leased the grazing land on the reservations their grazing rights and supplied tribal herds. But no more meat has been produced on the range than before. The herds are usually managed by some white man employed to supervise the business. The profits have been deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians. The tribe receives this profit instead of the money formerly obtained by leasing the grazing land.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then the Indian does not handle the cattle, neither in building up the herd or in grading them.

Mr. HAYDEN. Usually all the work has been done under the supervision of a white man. I can not see that the Indian has been greatly benefited by that policy. At one time as much as $600,000 was annually appropriated to furnish tribal herds to the Indians, but that amount was gradually reduced until now practically no money is expended for that purpose.

Of course it is better to spend money in buying live stock for the Indians, even if the cattle are not turned over to the individual Indians but remain the property of the tribe, than it is to issue rations to them. In some cases the increase from the tribal herds has been issued in lieu of rations.

I might say with respect to the establishment of the ration system that there was a good reason for it. President Grant during his administration sent out a commission composed of a number of Army officers to make a study of the Indian problem. They went over the various reservations, and on concluding their work figured up the cost of the maintenance of the Military Establishment in the Indian country and divided that amount by the number of Indians killed. It was discovered that over a period of years it had cost more than a million dollars to kill an Indian. The commission determined as a matter of business that it was better to feed the Indian than to kill him. That was the reason for the establishment of the ration system. I realize that it has pauperized many Indians and made them dependent on the Government, but its original adoption was a saving to the Government in dollars and cents.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my friend from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. Would the gentleman tell us something about the educational system under this bureau? Is it practical? Has it accomplished anything?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am glad to answer the gentleman's questions.

Perhaps there is no better illustration of the inescapable complexities and unavoidable difficulties constantly confronting the Government in its efforts to help the Indian people along the road to self-sustaining citizenship than is furnished by the Indian Service school system. The Indian day schools, reservation boarding schools, and nonreservation boarding schools last year had a total enrollment of 23,847 pupils. A large proportion of these Indian school children could not speak English when they entered school. They came from homes where the parents knew little, if any, English.

A large number of these non-English-speaking pupils were young men and women 18 to 20 years old, who sat in classes with little children under 9 years of age. Most of this class of older pupils were in the day schools, of which there are 167, but many of them, because of unavoidable circumstances, were taken into the reservation boarding schools where, it is supposed, only children who have gone through the day schools can enter.

In the large nonreservation schools the children of tribes which are traditional enemies to each other are brought together. In these nonreservation schools the entire Indian problem of the Government is localized. In one such school, for instance, will be found children from 30 to 40 tribes differing widely in their racial characteristics, their home environments, their tribal customs, their prejudices and traditions, in aptitude and intelligence, and in their capacity for education.

The Indian day schools are scattered over reservations taking the place, in their communities, of public schools. Some of them are so remote from any white center of population that practically they are isolated for months of the year. The day-school teachers are not only teachers but they also act as sub-agents, looking after the health and general welfare of the Indian families in their neighborhood.

I have always believed that these little Indian day schools, outposts on the frontier of civilization, are the most potent agencies the Government has to help the Indians emerge from their condition of ignorance and superstition and give them a start on the road of progress. These underpaid, isolated, and almost forgotten day-school teachers never have received the recognition by the Government which is their due. I am informed that the Indian Service has the utmost difficulty in securing men and women to fill these modest but all-important positions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I notice the committee has appropriated or reported in this bill an appropriation of $44,000 for an Indian school in Mississippi and for a number of things in connection therewith. It provides the position of a doctor and a matron. How are those employees selected?

Mr. HAYDEN. Through civil service. There is practically nobody in the Indian Service who does not have a civil service status, except the commissioner and the assistant commissioner.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Now, in selecting the matron, what qualifications does she have to possess?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not familiar with the regulations of the Civil Service Commission governing such positions, but there are certain qualifications specified in an examination which they must take.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Does the matron have to take the civil service examination?

Mr. HAYDEN. Every such position is under civil service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The doctor also?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. May I ask you do these people have to reside on the reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. They may take an examination in any part of the United States, and being appointed, are sent for service wherever the Indian Bureau directs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. They are required to remain on the reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. And actually do. But I was speaking of the Indian day schools. The American people first became educated in the "little log schoolhouse" where the children attended, but lived at home. When they returned from school at night they told their fathers and mothers what they had been doing, and the whole family became interested in education. In most cases I think that it is a mistake to take young Indian children away from the reservations to school. By a hothouse process great improvement is apparently made in the nonreservation Indian boarding schools, but when the pupils return home they often go back to the blanket.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Gladly.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I am in thorough accord with the attitude of the gentleman from Arizona in reference to boarding schools being on the reservation. Will the gentleman kindly indicate what progress has been made in the plan to abandon these institutions which are scattered all over the country—as, for instance, those at Hampton, Va., and Carlisle, Pa.—and centralizing these activities in schools on the Indian reservations?

Mr. HAYDEN. No money is now being appropriated for Hampton Institute, and about three years ago the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., was abolished. Some of the other nonreservation boarding schools have been closed, one or two of the smaller ones.

I am sure that the gentleman will find that the Indian Bureau is now of the opinion that greater stress should be placed upon the Indian day schools wherever they can be established. Where additional boarding schools are necessary, they should be located on the reservations as near as possible to the fathers and mothers of the Indian children. It would be poor economy, however, to at this time abandon a number of the large nonreservation boarding schools which, although not properly located, nevertheless represent an investment of many hundreds of thousands of dollars, which can be utilized with some measure of success in educating the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman any statistics to show how many of these Indians exercise the right of citizenship and vote?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no information as to that. None of them vote in Arizona, but in a great many of the States where their property has been given to them in severalty the Indians exercise all the rights of citizenship.

Mr. WALSH. Then most of the competent Indians exercise the right of suffrage?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is true.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman state in reference to the grades, how high they go in the grades?

Mr. HAYDEN. Instruction in the ordinary day school on an Indian reservation extends to what is equivalent to about the sixth grade in the public schools. The Indian boarding schools in many cases educate small children through all the grades.

But the nonreservation boarding school is usually an industrial school where half the time is devoted to instruction in farming and learning trades. Great stress is being placed upon the industrial features, which is entirely proper.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What is being done with reference to the future of these Indian boys and girls who have been graduated from the schools and colleges?

Mr. HAYDEN. It works out in this way: When the first generation of children have been taken away from the reservation and sent to a nonreservation boarding school and they go home and find that their fathers and mothers were never contented when they were gone, out of respect for their parents they are liable to lapse back into the tribal ways and customs. I talked with an Indian day-school teacher on the Navajo Reservation two years ago, who told me about 60 Navajo children that were sent to his school. Most of them came in like a lot of little wild burros, gathered together by the Indian police. They did not want to be there and had no idea of what it was all about. Among them were three children whose parents had been to an Indian school in their time, and he said that those three children by their conduct stood out above all the others. He said that their fathers and mothers had told them what the school was for and what they were expected to do, so they came willingly. He believed that it would take at least another generation to teach the fathers and mothers, forcibly in a degree in the first instance, to understand what education means. They tell their children, who are of the second generation, about it and the problem will be practically solved in the third generation. That will end the complaint that on the face of things a large amount of money has been expended on Indian schools with little apparent benefit, because in many instances the pupils go back to the old tribal ways on the Indian reservations.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Does the gentleman know whether it is still the policy of the Indian Bureau to send Indian police to capture the children and to carry them perhaps a thousand miles to some Indian institution?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Indian Service, so far as I know, has rarely adopted the policy of using force in securing pupils for these schools. Much persuasion is ordinarily used, accompanied by a small measure of force. That is the only way to get the Indian children into the schools.

Mr. LAZARO. What do they teach the Indian pupils at these boarding schools? Do they teach them manual arts?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. The appropriations for reservation and nonreservation boarding schools are made on a basis of $225 per pupil a year where the attendance exceeds 200, and $250 where it is below 200. This per capita is appropriated to cover the entire expense of educating, lodging, and boarding a pupil for one school year. When the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration in the House last year, a Member inquired how it was possible to lodge, feed, clothe, educate, and care for a child for one year for $225. The answer to that is that the children in a Government boarding school practically work their way through the school. As an illustration of this I will cite one of the largest nonreservation schools which last year had an average enrollment of over 800 Indian boys and girls, and in which, as in all nonreservation schools, industrial and domestic training is an essential part of the educational work. The girls are taught the domestic sciences, poultry raising, gardening, and nursing. Boys are taught all the mechanical arts, agriculture, dairying, raising live stock, and fruit growing.

The girls make practically all of their own clothing. A sewing teacher and two assistants, the only paid employees in the sewing room, with the help of the girls, not only make dresses, aprons, and other articles of female clothing, but towels, pillow cases, and bedspreads for an institution which has more than 800 pupils. The tailor and one assistant, with the help of the boys in his class, not only do all the mending, but make clothing, cut down suits for larger boys to fit the smaller boys, and in general do all the work which a tailoring establishment does. In the shoe and harness shop one instructor, with the detail of Indian boys, keeps in repair the shoes of all of the children and the harness for the working animals.

The hospital has one paid nurse; the student nurses provide the assistance necessary for the care of the sick. The entire laundry work for this establishment is done by Indian girls, under the supervision of one laundress and an assistant. The dormitories have one matron for each building, who merely supervises the work and teaches the students. The boys and girls take care of their rooms and dormitories, doing all the cleaning, bedmaking, and scrubbing.

The steam and electrical plant is in charge of an engineer and two assistants, the only paid employees. These men teach steam and electrical engineering, and with the boys detailed to that department operate the entire plant, the ice-making machinery, look after the water and sewer systems, making all repairs, and do much new construction.

The carpenter shop has one carpenter and an assistant, who, with the boys detailed to the carpenter shop, keep in repair all the buildings of this institution. During the last 10 years the improvements that have been made by the boys in its industrial departments could not be duplicated with outside labor for $10,000 a year, according to the report of the superintendent. About a year ago the boys of the industrial department built a gymnasium, with an actual cost to the Government of $8,000. It is estimated that if this gymnasium had been built under contract it would have cost at least $30,000.

In addition to this the boys in all of the nonreservation schools are putting into practice what they have learned of farming, dairying, stock raising, and gardening so successfully that the products of school farms, gardens, dairies, and herds go a long way toward supplying these large schools, each with its hundreds of students, with all their vegetables, milk, butter, eggs, poultry, fruit, and meat. It is this that enables the superintendents of the schools to pull through on the per capita payment provided by Congress.

The children in the boarding schools are in their academic classrooms for about half of the day. Long before they go to their classes they have swept and cleaned the dormitories, halls, porches, and grounds; have made up their beds, have helped the cooks in the kitchen prepare the breakfast, and have washed the dishes afterwards, and many of them in the cold months have arisen before daylight to milk the cows and care for the horses, pigs, cattle, and poultry. The Indian students in the Government schools have no sinecure. Almost every minute of their day is occupied with useful work, recitation, and study. I know of no educational institution for white children where the day's program is more closely adhered to.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Do they carry the scholastic instruction of the pupils beyond the sixth grade?

Mr. HAYDEN. The curriculum in these schools is adapted to the needs of the Indians and the parallel with the public school system can not be closely drawn in regard to grading the pupils.

If it is an industrial school, at least half of the time is devoted to teaching the pupils to do something with the hands, which, I think, is of more importance than mere book learning. They ought to learn how to speak the English language and read and write sufficiently well to engage in business. When that much is accomplished, I think that under the present circumstances we should be satisfied, considering the fact that when they first come to the schools most of the Indian children know nothing whatever of the English language.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Do the majority of the Indian pupils that go to nonreservation schools return to the blanket condition afterwards?

Mr. HAYDEN. The statement can be safely made that up to this time the majority of them, after having been to school and having gone back to the reservation, could not be distinguished from those who have not been to school. From their appearance one could not tell whether they had been to school or not. But it does not depend on the kind of hat an Indian wears or the style of blanket he uses. If he has been to school, he has ideas in his head, and as the father of a family he impresses these ideas upon his children by teaching them the value of education. Through that process we can ultimately hope to make good citizens out of most of the Indians.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Is it the gentleman's experience and observation that it is inadvisable to have them attend nonreservation schools?

Mr. HAYDEN. My experience has been that while the instruction received at the day schools sometimes does not appear on its face as of the best, yet more lasting results are actually obtained. Boarding schools, if established, should be located as near as possible to the homes of the Indian children rather than to send them far away from their relatives and friends. It is necessary, however, to utilize the facilities that the Government has provided. For instance, there are now on the Navajo Indian Reservation, in Arizona, over 5,000 children for whom no schools exist. They are growing up in ignorance of the English language and civilized ways of living. They should be forced, if necessary, to attend school. That is the only avenue of progress for them, and the nonreservation boarding schools should be utilized to the fullest extent in their education.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. How far, or to what grade, is it compulsory? How far is the compulsory part of it actually carried?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs gathers up the Indian children as best he can. In my State he would have authority under the compulsory school law to force the Indian children into schools. I do not see why the same laws should not apply to the Indian as to the white children with respect to compulsory education.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman is so familiar with the subject that I wish to ask him a question for information. What is the effect of civilization upon the health of the Indians in general?

Mr. HAYDEN. A civilized man realizes that he can not live down in the dirt; that there must be fairly sanitary conditions surrounding his cooking and about his home. When Indians who have been used to sleeping out of doors and to having the whole world to roam over are crowded together and forced to do things apparently in the white man's way the resulting congestion has often led to the spread of diseases that have caused a great many Indians to lose their lives. The Indian medical service has improved greatly in the last few years, particularly along the lines of sanitation. I am sure that the statistics will bear me out in saying that the Indians are not decreasing in numbers as they formerly were.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my good friend from New York.

Mr. KINDRED. I have had the privilege of seeing a great deal of the Indians in the gentleman's district. I was very much interested in the question asked by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO] as to the influence of civilization, generally speaking, on the Indians as well as upon the black races. I believe it is conceded that there has been a rapid development of tuberculosis among the Indians and also among the Negro race since what we call civilization has partly embraced them.

I want to ask the gentleman another question, on a subject which I was interested in a few years ago. That is in the school conditions which the gentleman has so well described in his own State. Is there much interference with the Indians going to school, caused by eye diseases?

Mr. HAYDEN. There has been much difficulty on account of trachoma among the Indian tribes all over the United States. Mr. KINDRED. That is what I particularly referred to.

Mr. HAYDEN. But the Indian medical service is doing all that it can to eradicate that disease, and I understand with considerable success.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In connection with what the gentleman stated a moment ago, the last report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows that the number of births among the Indians last year was greater than the number of deaths, showing that they are not now decreasing.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am sure that is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman 20 minutes more.

Mr. HAYDEN. When some legislation relating to the Indian Service was under discussion last year the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] made some observations relative to the Indian Bureau which I thought at the time were based upon misinformation, but it may be interesting to him to know that his remarks met with a measure of approval from a very good friend of mine in Arizona. I want to read an extract from a letter which he has written to me, not only for that reason but because I am sure that what he says will be read with interest, and I hope with profit, by those in the Indian Service who are broadminded enough to realize that there is a white man's side to the Indian question and that justice can not be done if they continually insist that the Indian shall always have the advantage of every situation. My friend says:

I was much interested in the House debate of August 4 on the Indian appropriation bill. Personally, I am much in accord with Representative KELLY. I am firmly of the belief, judging from the experience and knowledge I have of Indian agents and other officials, that the great aim of the Indian Service is to perpetuate itself. I also agree with you that isolated instances of overzealousness or bureaucratic tyranny do not prove any case.

You point out in your speech the need for road building on the reservations. That need is actual. Our eastern cousins, who imagine the red man to be a statue of bronze, should attempt to drive an automobile through some of our Indian reservations. I think their Indian idealism would drop from them like a winter's cloak. The reservations include practically 90 per cent of the trout streams in Arizona. The best camping in the State is to be found within their confines. It is the vacation ground, par excellence, of the people of the State. Yet we see agency superintendents exercise power that keeps every white man from "lighting" there, except to fill his radiator or his gas tank.

I am reliably informed by old-time white settlers on and near the reservations that the Indians will deliberately set fire to the forest to get work in putting it out. Moreover, it sounds quite unreasonable that the Indian reservations should be closed when the adjoining Forest Service lands are left open. States laws relating to game and fish prevail upon the forest reserves. Not so upon the reservation. Here the word of the superintendent is the word of God. He is the dictator—the court of last resort—for the Indian. He is the incarnation of the worst of bureaucracy. He is a product of that system. That it affects the people of Arizona so harshly is what hurts. Poor Lo, as you know, is the favored son of Arizona. He has practically a strangle hold on much of its best land, and a white man can be kept off at the whim of a superintendent.

Really, Carl, the Indian reservations in Arizona are little principalities, occupying space in the State to the detriment of most of the people, and owing allegiance to all intents and purposes to a gentleman who sits in Washington and whose one great desire is to see the work perpetuated ad infinitum.

As the State grows in population the ever-increasing problem, or one of them, will be the Indian reservations. The rights of the people of the State should be protected on these reservations. The Indian has rights, of course, but sentimentalists in the East, apparently, would approve of a course that forced the white man into Sonora and the placing of the good acres of the Salt River Valley at the disposal of the poor Apache.

What I have just read is typical of many complaints that I have received relative to the administration of Indian affairs. They come from men who represent the civilizing spirit of America and to whom the lack of progress among Indians is an abomination. When they see great natural resources, which if utilized at all are not fully used, tied up by the reservation system their every instinct calls out for development. To hold these lands back, awaiting the time when the Indians may make a higher use of them, is undoubtedly wasteful and a great burden upon the States wherein the reservations are located.

Take the State of Arizona, for example. It is true that we have had a greater proportionate increase in population than any other State during the past decade, but after all it can not be expected that taxation will be light when all the elaborate machinery of a modern State government must be maintained and paid for by only a little over 300,000 white people. We have unlimited faith in the future, but when it is realized that title to over one-half of the entire area of the State is in the Federal Government, of which over 20,000,000 acres are held for the benefit of Indians, one can readily understand, as my friend has indicated, how this question of the untaxed lands under Federal control is of vital importance.

That is why the citizens of my State greeted with unanimous approval the announcement that Congress has at last provided that no more Indian reservations can be created by Executive order and why they look askance at any proposal, however pleasingly presented, to establish additional Federal reserves of any character. If the friends of the Indians insist that the present reservations shall be maintained they at least owe it, in all fairness, to the white people of the West who are bearing the burden of State building to aid us at all times in obtaining assistance from Congress for road construction, irrigation projects, and every other form of development in the Indian country.

So long as a considerable number of those connected with the Indian Service maintain a policy of doing little or nothing in cooperation with the white people of the States where these reservations are located, when by their actions they indicate that they believe that the Indians should be isolated and that they will be contaminated by contact with white people who reside near the reservations, then expressions of the kind that I have read may be expected to be repeatedly made by good citizens who feel outraged whenever they come in touch with the representatives of such a bureaucracy.

OBSTRUCTIVE CRITICISM.

There is another and totally different variety of criticism to which the Indian Bureau is subjected that is both unjust and obstructive and with which I have no patience because I doubt the honesty and good motives of those who indulge in it. Perhaps what they say and do is unworthy of attention, but unless these harmful activities are openly discussed anyone seeking light on the Indian problem is sure to be misled and confused. I shall not attempt to cover the whole field, because if serious heed were given to all of the various theories and preachments offered for directing the affairs of the Indians legislation would be often suspended and administration would function with difficulty.

It must not be overlooked that some of the best people in the world are trying by individual and organized effort to improve the condition of the Indians. There are many associations, both religious and secular, that are actuated by the highest motives for Indian welfare, whose activities are essentially in harmony with the general aims of good administration and whose suggestions and criticism are offered from time to time with sincere and helpful purpose. These forces are worthy of real appreciation, because they represent men and women of deep sympathies, of hopeful vision, and of practical judgment. These are social factors in our great country whose influence rings true.

On the other hand, we find the spurious, the imitators, the pseudo-reformers masked behind pretentious federations and cooperative associations, which are usually controlled by some one-man functionary, who as chief grand counselor or attorney in fact for all the Indians he can hoodwink into his following, promotes his ulterior designs under the guise of philanthropy. This type of Indian friend and advisor is instanced by a certain agitator, who, after years of meddlesome scheming to gain recognition by the Indians of his State, succeeded in having about 50 of their number with himself indicted by the Federal grand jury on the charge of conspiracy to obstruct and impair the Government in the exercise of its proper functions and of conspiring to commit an offense against the United States in attempting to alienate from the Government the confidence of certain Indians. Whatever clemency is due these deluded and entrapped Indians will no doubt be accorded, and it should be equally certain that exact justice is meted out to the one who is responsible for their plight.

The too frequent misfortune of the innocent-minded Indian is the shifty trickster who "organizes" with a constitution and by-laws that seem to breathe benevolence from every syllable, and then goes to the Indians in the pose of a haloed savior with an alluring message that there is great wealth in store for them at Washington, or that millions of acres of land, or the value of it, can be recovered to them through his influence and management if they will just "sign on the dotted line," pay membership fees to his organization, and defray his expenses to the National Capital, with like expenses of a retinue of Indians to give scenic effect to his mission. Instances are of record where Indians with no money beyond their most frugal daily needs have been approached in such manner as to be impressed that they could not share in the benefits of such a great enriching scheme unless they contributed with others an annual fee for financing it, and in order to secure the fabulous returns promised have virtually taken bread from the mouths of their children and reduced their families to the verge of destitution.

Perhaps more effectively harmful to the Indians are the fulminations of persons having some literary standing, who are able to present their views and criticism in such form and temper as appeal to the dispassionate reader, and who lighten their dark descriptions with the glamour of sincerity. A sinister disturber of this stamp has recently gotten into the magazines and syndicate news with a doleful picture of conditions among the Blackfeet Indians. His allegations include charges that fee patents to land have been forced upon these Indians against their will, that by outrageous robbery a trader has acquired about 400 of such patents, that last winter no bacon was issued with Indian rations, that one family actually starved to death, that $25,000 appropriated for rations was spent in constructing an automobile road for the whites, that the Indians were unable to get wood for fuel, and that not one-tenth of their crops planted were harvested. These and other implied calamities were found to be gross exaggerations, and in some instances wholly groundless.

To spread broadcast in civilized communities and among the Indians themselves such a declaration of appalling destitution and maladministration, fabricated as it was out of exceptional instances, hearsay, distortion of fact, and fancy fed by love of the limelight and mercenary returns was not only an invitation to many self-supporting Indians to become idlers and beggars but it was a slander against the Indian Bureau and an affront to the Congress under whose authority that bureau functions. It becomes a menace not easily ignored when such clever and bold characters, while making their living by misrepresenting the true attitude of the Government toward the Indians and the real condition of the Indians themselves, are planting the seeds of a morbid sentiment among whites and of ignorant resentment among Indians.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Does not the gentleman think that some benefit might be derived on behalf of the Indians in cases where complaints are made to refer them to some one to investigate other than a person in the department interested in the result?

Mr. HAYDEN. That would be highly desirable, but Congress can not investigate every charge that is made. That is an Executive function. Under the law, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs are authorized to go outside the civil service and select inspectors of their own choosing who are their eyes and ears and whose duty it is to truthfully report the actual facts to the department. If we can not rely on the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to select competent inspectors who will make honest reports I do not know what we can do. Congress has provided ample appropriations for the inspection service to get at the actual truth about the condition of the Indians.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I was prompted to ask the first question by a concrete case where, I think, there was a just complaint against the Indian agent. They referred the complaint right back to the person himself who reported that he was 100 per cent right.

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly there are inspectors enough in the Interior Department so that it was not necessary to do that.

Among other retarding elements to both legislation and administration are a few mixed bloods who have learned some of the white man's vices and trickery with a little of his honesty and integrity. They are capable enough to be of some assistance to uneducated Indians and shrewd enough to give this aid in order to gain confidence and a following, but are unscrupulous in pushing their larger and selfish designs. It will be recalled that one of this class a few years ago submitted to a congressional committee a list of about 160 Indians who were said to have died on a northwestern reservation from lack of sufficient nourishment. It has since been proven that over 100 of these same Indians are living to-day and that only 12 died within the entire period covered by the false report.

In this vexatious group are also certain individuals who have managed to identify themselves with some missionary enterprise or lecture bureau, and whose social status is indicated more by an artful array of paint, feathers, and trappings than by any evidence of Indian blood in their veins, but who get an audience among many intelligent people and are able to denounce the Indian Bureau and the Government for maintaining it with enough platform accomplishments and grace of diction to carry some weight. These speakers sometimes secure the adoption of ready-made resolutions by civil or social welfare organizations endorsing their plausible sophistries without serious investigation. Their representations are largely based on exceptional, accidental, or unfortunate instances and not on total results or a comparison of Indian conditions by such periods of time as is necessary in estimating human progress anywhere.

And last but not least among the disturbers are a group of professional claims attorneys who have kept alive a large number of fraudulent Indian claims and year after year seek to obtain money from the Indians in payment for their alleged assistance. I am glad to say that within the past week the Committee on Indian Affairs has submitted adverse reports on two bills authorizing money to be paid out of tribal funds to lawyers of this character who had rendered no real or substantial service to the tribes, but whose activities have, in fact, been detrimental to them. I hope that this action by the committee will serve as notice to all such attorneys that Congress does not intend to give further consideration to bogus Indian claims.

In conclusion, let me say that I hold no brief for the Indian Bureau. I realize its shortcomings, the chief one of which is a lack of courage to do impartial justice where the Indians are clearly in the wrong. Too often the officials of the bureau, through fear of criticism, adopt the easy expedient of saying that they are merely the attorneys for the Indians and have no further responsibility than to protect the interests of their clients regardless of the effect upon the community in which the Indians reside. Such a policy is most unsound because it fails to recognize the fundamental fact that the Indians and their white neighbors have much in common and that only by proper cooperation can both races prosper.

The best way to attain a spirit of mutual helpfulness is to know the conditions under which those with whom we should work in harmony are compelled to labor. It is with that idea in mind that I have submitted these remarks and I hope that the facts which I have presented here will aid a little in a better understanding of the Indian problem. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, it has been a favorite pastime of the Republicans to denounce the Democrats as incompetent. I am not the champion of the Democratic Party; it is an extremely difficult task to defend the Democrats. [Laughter.] They have been more or less incompetent. The truth is that there is no such thing as a Democratic Party. Wilson attempted to nationalize the Democratic Party. He was the only great leader in modern times that they have had, the greatest leader since Thomas Jefferson. But they never stood behind Wilson. When he advocated the League of Nations they did not stand behind him. I was the only supporter he had. [Laughter.] Of course, I stood for the real thing.

A short time before the election of 1918 we had in New York a gathering of public men, among whom was a prominent English journalist, to discuss the League of Nations. I was to talk on Congress and the League of Nations. They wanted to know what Congress thought of the League of Nations. I told them to be perfectly frank Congress did not know anything about the League of Nations, did not think about it, and was probably incompetent to deal with it. [Laughter.]

The Democrats have a few organizations in the large cities, for instance, Tammany Hall in New York, which is purely a New York City organization. It is no more Democratic than it is Populist. It is Tammany Hall pure and simple. The organization will readily knife the presidential candidate if by doing so it can elect a Democratic governor. It will knife a Democratic governor to elect a city mayor. Then the Democrats have the Southern States, cursed by the race problem and with the race problem always before them to the exclusion of everything else, so that they are utterly incapable of looking beyond that and to understand the trend of modern events.

Such Democrats as we do have continue the same old talk against the trusts and about the necessity of reestablishing competition. Although we do not hear so much now about busting the trusts, they seem to believe that the solution lies in dissolving large modern industrial enterprises and breaking them up into a number of small ones. They are looking back all the time. Their wisdom is confined to Jefferson, and Jefferson is dead, but they do not seem to know it. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, we have the Republicans in power, Republicans elected not because the people wanted Republicans, but because the people did not want the Democrats. Permit me incidentally to make the observation that during a substantial part of the existence of this Republic the National Government did not have both branches of Congress and the President of the same political faith. That has helped the country immensely, as they were unable to legislate and therefore unable to do mischief.

It seems that the American people do not vote for a party; they vote against a party. They voted against the Democrats and elected the Republicans, and the Republicans have a fat majority—fat, thick, dull, so fat that there is no evidence of muscle anywhere. It is all flabbiness. You do not find any action, you do not find any definite program.

The President comes out one day against the bonus, and then he is seeking new means of taxation to pay the bonus. For more than a hundred years we have had a discussion of protection and free trade and unemployment under both. That does not prevent the Republican leaders from claiming a new discovery, that the only way of solving the problem of unemployment is by a protective tariff—something new, something never heard of before, a new evidence of the statesmanship of the Republicans.

The Republicans have been in power since March 4, 1921. The number of unemployed has been growing steadily since that time. It has assumed threatening proportions in the United States. Congress has been in session almost all of the time. No one has seriously suggested anything to grapple with the problem. Where is the Republican statesmanship, where is Republican wisdom, where is Republican intelligence? Why is not some of that intelligence which was employed in accumulating unheard-of fortunes being used to give work to willing hands? Why does no one apply himself to a solution of the problem? Is it because it is to the interest of those who shape the policies of the Republican Party to intimidate the great industrial masses of the American people by keeping them in a state of helplessness? Is it because unemployment plays into the hands of those who would like to perpetuate themselves in power?

The Democrats entertain the false hope that if there is continued unemployment they may win in the next election. That may not necessarily follow. When the masses are helpless they can be coerced to vote the way their masters want them to vote.

I appeal to the Democrats from a political standpoint—for one can not successfully appeal to them from the standpoint of statesmanship and patriotism—and I say to them that they are making a grave error in not offering some solution. What is the Democratic solution? What does a Democrat know? He goes back a century and digs up as a slogan free trade. These questions are not solved or touched by free trade. England has free trade, plenty of it, and plenty of unemployment, too.

What is your solution? Is there no solution at all? I have before me the New York World. The first column on the first page is devoted to a description of a bread line, with 1,500 in it, who are being fed every day at St. Mark's Church. That is only one place in New York—1,500 men in one bread line—and our statesmen are debating the tariff!

I do not suppose there is anyone here who seriously believes that the adoption of a high protective tariff will in any way help the industrial situation. Nobody is in a position to export or import, and almost all European countries have the same complaint that we have—their imports have increased, while their exports have diminished.

The remedy of necessity must be a radical remedy, entirely different from those heretofore employed. It is a pity that we have not on the floor 50 men who can speak in the name of the workers, who can speak in the name of organized labor. I have no quarrel with the personnel of Congress. A majority of the Members of this House are self-made men, men who have risen out of poverty through their own efforts. The conditions which have enabled them to do that no longer exist. They believe that all can help themselves in the same way. That is not true. The men who are here and who have by individual effort succeeded in rising are the chosen few.

They have a duty to perform. It is their obligation to take care of the many, to offer a remedy for the many. Your very intelligence, your very ability, your very gifts impose upon you the duty of taking up the cause of the many. I am sorry that we have not here a larger number of men who understand the interests of the masses from personal knowledge, from a knowledge of to-day. The workers have no voice here, no one represents them. I can not adequately represent them singlehanded, I am too much of a philosopher. What you need here is some fellow who would make of himself a nuisance, a disturber—not only one, but many, who would wake you up.

What remedy do you propose? To let things alone? Conditions are bound to grow worse. Crime is increasing, and our foolish judges run to the legislatures asking for heavier and more drastic penalties—a perfectly idiotic thing to anybody who has studied penology.

A century ago there were more than 100 crimes punishable by death. The number of crimes has not increased because the death penalty has been removed. The contrary is true. When you impose a severe penalty for attempted burglary or attempted larceny, when the penalty is so severe that the unfortunate offender is faced by life imprisonment, in nine cases out of ten he will kill. These severe sentences uniformly result in an increase in the crime of murder.

An increase in the penalty is no relief. Crime is on the increase. You can not stop crime by preaching to people. The natural law of existence is too strong, the law of self-preservation. Of course, it is true that the war has been a contributing cause. The war has trained people to disregard human life and to kill, but that is merely incidental. It is poverty, destitution, starvation that are principally responsible for the so-called wave of crime to-day.

Is there any remedy along the lines heretofore proposed? My answer is, no. Place 1,500 men in a bread line and you degrade them, you destroy their self-respect and annihilate them as useful citizens. What men need is an opportunity to work and to earn their bread by honest toil. When private industry can not supply work, the public agency known as the Government must undertake it. When private industry either because of selfishness or because of inability to look into the future can not conduct industry, it becomes the duty of the Government to act—the Government which represents the social element in civilized society, which is supposed to represent the collective will and conscience of the people.

The Government should extend every form of public work. But that is not enough. The scheme that was attempted in England, unemployment insurance, which under ordinary circumstances is some sort of a palliative, would not do now because there is too much unemployment. What then is to be done? We must help the workers themselves to organize and to run industries whenever the private employers fail to do so. The President in his last message, speaking of cooperative societies, advised the farmers to cooperate. The American farmer has more intelligence than the industrial worker and the farmers do cooperate. The workers should be taught to cooperate, and the Government, instead of hindering them, instead of adding the employers in the open-shop fight, instead of seeking to curtail the activities of labor organizations, should extend aid to such labor organizations and such cooperative societies that laborers will form so that they might establish and run their own industries and build homes for themselves.

There is no other way out of it. The Government must do for labor what it has done for the farmer, the well-to-do farmer so far. The Government is financing the farmer. It loans him money to help him export his product. Private industry will not help, private industry never looks ahead. It lives from day to day and from hand to mouth. It is too selfish. In those industries where there is competition everybody is for himself. In those industries where there is a monopoly, of course, the monopoly has no soul.

The Government must become the banker of the workers and help them organize industries so that they will have employment.

During the war when the Government was in need of war material it proceeded to help the manufacturers financially so that they might increase their plants. I want to know whether the same process of reasoning can not be applied in the extraordinary emergency which we are facing to-day—an emergency of millions of men in distress. I do not want to see the worker humiliated by giving him something for nothing. I want him to work for his livelihood. He can not get that opportunity to-day.

Can you Republicans and Democrats, out of your great stock of wisdom, present something tangible? I want you to prove to me that the proposition which I make is not sound. It would not do to denounce it. It will not do to say that it comes from socialists, soviets, bolsheviks, or I. W. W.'s. One of our Southern States just now is busy preventing by legislation the spread of Darwinism, of the doctrine of evolution.

But what is your remedy? Why do you not offer any suggestion? I have brought up the question of unemployment a half dozen times. I am weary of it, and I am weary of playing the part of the one disturber; but I have not heard a suggestion come from anybody except Mr. FORDNEY, who thinks that the American valuation will cure it all. On this, fortunately, there is a serious difference of opinion even on the Republican side. The distinguished Republican, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, says that he does not understand what American valuation means. What is your proposition; what is your suggestion?

Of course you are not altogether to blame. The workers are to blame, the great industrial masses. Toothpick Makers' Union 675 is primarily interested in the welfare of Toothpick Makers' Union 675 and does not care for the rest of the world. The workers do not study, do not organize, do not prepare for the future. They make no demand upon the Congress. What will you tell them when you come before them? What will you tell them as to how you have met the problem of unemployment? What will you have to say? The only thing you may perhaps say is that the Democrats have nothing better to offer. None of you have anything whatever to recommend. We must get away from the old method of thinking. There are new problems that have to be faced to-day.

Mr. SEARS. Is the gentleman taking himself seriously or is he speaking for home consumption?

Mr. LONDON. I am always speaking seriously. I want to tell the gentleman I never say anything at home that I do not say here.

Mr. SEARS. Why does not the gentleman make a suggestion?

Mr. LONDON. I have made a suggestion, and more than once. I advocate the extension of every form of public works, the elimination of child labor, if the gentleman is interested in that, the reduction of the hours of labor in proportion to the increased productivity resulting from inventions, the strengthening of labor organizations. What I have emphasized in this talk is the necessity of assisting labor unions and cooperative labor organizations by the Government loaning them money so that they could build homes and establish industries. That is my practical suggestion.

Mr. SEARS. I was wondering why it was that the gentleman, when the Democrats were in power, took so much pleasure in referring to what the Republicans would say, and now that the Republicans are in power, I was wondering why he took such pleasure in talking about what the Democrats would say. He does not put his suggestions in any concrete form. Why does he not put them into effect, instead of simply referring to Democrats?

Mr. LONDON. I do not quite get the gentleman.

Mr. SEARS. I mean, why does not the gentleman introduce a bill and pass it, to correct the evils he complains of?

Mr. LONDON. Well, I have a number of bills that are sleeping quietly in committee, without even having the benefit of a cradle to be rocked in. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEARS. Does not the gentleman know that there are a great many Members of Congress who have bills in exactly the same condition?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, I get the point now. The gentleman means to say that the Democrats, being in the minority, are not now responsible. Is that the idea?

Mr. SEARS. No. When we were in power the gentleman represented the Socialist Party.

Mr. LONDON. I represent one four hundred and thirty-fifth, so far as the number of the Members is concerned, although I admit that I represent a larger proportion than that in the matter of intelligence, but that does not count here. [Laughter.] Numerically I represent only one four hundred and thirty-fifth of the membership of the House, and it is a safe thing to assume that if the Democratic minority can not get any action, I can not. But the Democrats do not ask for anything; they do not demand anything.

Mr. SEARS. I have asked for something.

Mr. LONDON. Oh, the gentleman has asked for an appropriation of $1,500 for a post office in the village of Chippochook. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEARS. Of course, the gentleman, having come from New York, knows nothing but New York. I want to make this suggestion to the gentleman—

Mr. LONDON. I wanted to indulge in some pleasantries with the gentleman.

Mr. SEARS. Does the gentleman want my suggestion?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. Give us reasonable freight rates, so that we can ship our products to the consumers, and then devise some way by which the producer can get some portion of the profit.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Let me suggest that if you develop water transportation that will be a good answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINDRED. May I answer the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio by suggesting that we develop the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence waterway? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. These profound suggestions remind me of the Liberal Club, sometimes nicknamed "The Sanhedrim," where it was known in advance what anecdote each man would tell and what speech he would deliver. It was known in advance, no matter what the subject under discussion was, that one man would talk on mesmerism, and another on spiritualism, a third one on the single tax.

The subjects of water transportation and the St. Lawrence project are not without merit, but they are not relevant. Of course, it is desirable to eliminate the middlemen so as to save to the farmer the cost of handling his products, but if the Democratic Party will eliminate the middlemen it will lose its main support. When a Democrat gets up to speak he is proud to proclaim the fact that he is poor. He is afraid of being suspected of having succeeded financially. [Laughter.] You know what happens to middlemen. Between the hosts of the organized workers united politically and economically and with a definite program, on one hand, and the band of industrial pirates now in control of things, on the other hand, the middlemen are facing destruction.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. I know that the gentleman is a student of world conditions. Will the gentleman answer the question as to how many men, in his judgment, are unemployed in the United States and how many are unemployed in the world?

Mr. LONDON. I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that one of the saddest reflections upon our Government, upon the present administration, is that we do not even know the number of unemployed. Our Census Bureau can give you the exact number of head of cattle, but it can not tell you how many men and women are unemployed to-day, and the figures are all the way between 4,000,000 and 6,000,000. When it was necessary to pass a law restricting immigration the Secretary of Labor said 6,000,000 were unemployed; and when Secretary Hoover got scared at the magnitude of the figures he said it was 3,000,000. I do not know which one was further removed from the truth. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, the expansion of our trade and the development of our national resources is the ambition of every citizen interested in the welfare of the people. While we have made the most wonderful strides along industrial lines it must be admitted that our agricultural possibilities have not received the attention their importance deserve.

No question of greater importance confronts the people than the problem of increasing the food supply to keep pace with the increasing population. The demands upon the agricultural resources of America will not diminish, and as the years go on our constantly increasing numbers will call for an ever enlarging supply of products from the soil.

One hundred years ago Great Britain could feed her 8,000,000 population from the products of her own land; now she is at the mercy of an enemy who could blockade her coast line. To-day her 40,000,000 residents of the island would be at the mercy of an enemy that could prevent the importation of foodstuffs.

The United States is still an agricultural Nation regardless of the fact that 70 per cent of her people live in towns and cities, but with her rapid industrial expansion the demands upon her agricultural resources will also rapidly increase, and the time is not far distant when the United States will become an importer instead of an exporter of the products of the farm.

Our population in 1800 of 5,000,000 increased to 23,000,000 in 1850, to 50,000,000 in 1880, to 76,000,000 in 1900 and to 110,000,000 in 1920. In 10 years more the population will doubtless be 140,000,000, by which time the shortage of foodstuffs will be alarming unless the Government aids in reclaiming the waste lands and encourages the production of food on a larger scale than heretofore. We have in this country hundreds of millions of acres of fertile land lying idle which can be reclaimed and carved into productive farms at a comparatively low cost, if the work is undertaken on a large scale. Individual effort would be futile and private capital is not attracted to such stupendous ventures. Only by Government aid can a large, comprehensive reclamation policy be undertaken and carried to a successful conclusion.

The best possible argument in favor of the continuance and enlargement of the Government's plan to make land available for settlement is afforded by the splendid record of the United States Reclamation Service since its organization in 1902. During the 17 years the service has been in operation much has been accomplished in reclamation of the arid lands and in increasing the food supply and the national wealth.

Twenty-six projects have been undertaken in 16 different States and many of them have been completed. Nearly 2,000,000 acres of land have been placed under a permanent water supply and nearly 1,000,000 additional acres will soon be supplied with water from storage reservoirs. Forty thousand families have established homes on these lands and are happy and prosperous. Cities and towns have sprung up on these projects, and the national wealth created amounts to about $600,000,000, nearly five times the amount expended by the Government in reclamation work. The reclamation fund which is represented by the receipts from sales of public land, leases, and repayment charges is far inadequate. Nearly $50,000,000 is required to complete projects now under way and $100,000,000 to construct new projects which have been approved.

The success attending the Government policy in reclaiming the arid lands of the West can be duplicated in reclaiming the swamp lands of the South, and the millions of acres of waste lands in the Southern States can be transformed into productive farms through Government cooperation.

Many people who have not investigated the importance to the whole country of reclaiming the waste lands appear to regard the question as a local one, and that the only people benefited are those who may make homes on the land or those living in the section of the country where the land is reclaimed. As a matter of fact every section of the country is benefited by land reclamation. Every acre of waste land that is placed under cultivation creates a market for merchandise, building material, staple food products, clothing, and every other kind of manufactured article which generally come from the central and eastern sections of the country.

The adoption of a broad and comprehensive plan to reclaim the waste lands of the country would go far toward giving work to those out of employment in construction work on projects, or by reason of the need of labor on account of the increased demand for commodities manufactured in the industrial centers.

The following statistics with reference to two reclamation projects in the western country should convince the most skeptical that the benefits of the reclamation of waste lands are national in their scope and not local.

The Yakima project in Washington is a fair example of what reclamation has accomplished. This project is about 10 years old. The city of Yakima, in the center of the project, contains a population of nearly 20,000. Over 300,000 acres of the irrigated land are tributary to the city, the trade of which is dependent almost entirely upon the products of the soil, with the exception of one lumber mill.

It is important that consideration should be given to the last item in the above table, that of insurance. Practically all of the insurance companies operating in this section have their headquarters in the East, and several million dollars leave this valley each year to build up eastern industry and commerce; all of which would be impossible were it not for irrigation. As a matter of fact, all of the aggregate productive wealth of this section, now amounting to above $40,000,000 annually, with the exception of lumber as above stated, is the product of water scientifically applied to rich volcanic ash soil. The annual total lumber output does not exceed $1,500,000.

BOISE PROJECT, IDAHO.

Boise, the capital of the State, is a city of less than 25,000 people, and is near the center of this project. The origin of many commodities which the Boise merchants receive in carload lots per annum clearly demonstrates the interdependence of far separated districts in practically every State in the Union, and indicates the market developed in one city on the Boise project largely the result of reclamation.

The foregoing data is but an index of what the manufacturers of the East and South sell to the irrigationists who are engaged in intensively farming irrigated land in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast States. There are 20,000,000 acres of arid lands yet to be reclaimed.

For the past 100 years the best thought and energy of the world have been devoted to the building up of an industrial system which now seems top-heavy. It is the view of the most thoughtful minds in the world to-day that sweeping changes of far-reaching effect will have to be made in our present system in order to prevent its collapse. There are few who fail to realize the menace to our national security which results from the steadily increasing congestion of humanity in our large centers of population. Without doubt our social and economic stability could be most readily strengthened by the development of our latent land resources, converting them into living means of production. The most valuable of all our undeveloped resources is the vast acreage of now unproductive land. Its development and settlement would establish the economic independence of hundreds of thousands of our citizens, whose stability and character would be assured by their foothold on the soil.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RHODES], the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I had not expected to secure recognition during the course of this discussion, assuming that the entire time would be consumed by the committee reporting the bill under consideration, but during the remarks of my distinguished friend from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] my attention was particularly called to a matter in which I am much interested.

The gentleman from Idaho called attention to the scientific work being done by the Bureau of Mines and what that bureau has contributed to science. I wish not only to add my word of approval to what my friend from Idaho said, but I want to plead with Congress for more generous appropriations to be placed at the disposal of the Bureau of Mines in carrying forward its scientific and research work.

I can not refrain from mentioning an additional concrete case, illustrating the value of the work of the Bureau of Mines, by calling the attention of the committee to this fact: Prior to 1915 no radium had been produced in the United States, but in the year 1915 a cooperative agreement was entered into between the Bureau of Mines and the National Radium Institute. Accordingly leases were obtained upon large areas of land in Colorado, and a plant was erected at Denver for the recovery of radium, and Dr. R. B. Moore, of the Bureau of Mines, was placed in charge of the work. The enterprise was financed by Dr. Howard A. Kelly, of Johns Hopkins University, and Dr. James Douglass, an eminent surgeon of the city of New York.

This work continued for a period of five years. At the end of that time, when the books were closed and operations ceased, 8½ grams of radium had been recovered, of which the United States received 2 grams for its share of the radium thus recovered. To-day that 2½ grams of radium is the property of the United States. One-half a gram is in the possession of the Bureau of Standards. Another half a gram is in possession of the Bureau of Mines at the University of Nevada, where further experimental work is going forward in radium work and in the treatment of the complex ores peculiar to the Northwest. The Bureau of Mines loaned one-half a gram to Dr. Kelly, of Baltimore, and one-half a gram to Memorial Hospital, of New York City. These 8½ grams of radium recovered during that period of five years are worth to-day more than $1,000,000, and that part of the radium that came into the ownership of the United States was used during the war in the treatment of our soldiers, sailors, and marines who were afflicted with cancer. That same radium to-day is being used by these eminent surgeons, I am told, in the treatment of cancer in cases of poor people who are unable to procure medical treatment.

Thus, I say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this achievement of the Bureau of Mines as a contribution to medical science and to the relief of suffering humanity is of such great value and importance that I feel it my duty to make known this fact to the House. I only regret that more Members of Congress and the public at large do not know more of the wonderful work that has been accomplished by those splendid men who are so loyally devoting their talents for the public good at such small salaries here in the Bureau of Mines.

Not only is this true, Mr. Chairman, but another question was raised by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO], who interrogated the gentleman from Idaho, making inquiry as to what was being done with the royalties arising from oil and coal lands under the oil leasing act.

The Bureau of Mines at present is conducting scientific research work along lines of recovering oil from shale. That is one of the most promising endeavors that is going forward in any branch of the Government at present. The oil experts of this country are agreed that our reserves of petroleum oil are perhaps limited to 25 years. It has been determined that oil can be successfully recovered from shale, which is a very refreshing thing to know in the face of the growing demand for the use of petroleum oil and the wonderful rapidity with which the supply is being diminished. Answering the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO], I beg to state that the United States, through the operation of the recently enacted oil-leasing law, is turning into the Treasury large sums of money every month as a result of the 10 per cent royalty that the Government derives from this source. Fifty per cent of this money goes into the reclamation fund and 40 per cent goes into the public treasury of the local county, or, to be more exact, I should say into the treasury of the State in which the property is located. These two particular endeavors, carried on by the Bureau of Mines, together with the many other useful things it has accomplished, in my humble judgment, justifies more liberal appropriation for that department.

Because I am favored by such an unusually large attendance of Members on this occasion, I can not refrain from calling attention to a larger question of which this is a part that I have in my mind. The mining industry of the United States has been encouraged and promoted largely through the activity of the Bureau of Mines. I hope the day will come—in fact, I trust it is now here—when Congress will expend larger sums of money in the publication of useful documents and scientific publications in relation to the various governmental activities connected with the mining industry.

Mr. Chairman, do you realize that the mining industry in 1920 contributed twice as much tonnage to the railroads of this country as did agriculture, three times as much as animal industry, and twelve times as much as forestry? Exclusive of the value of bituminous coal, the mining products of the United States in 1920 exceeded $6,000,000,000, and yet to-day we have that great department of the Government, the Bureau of Mines, tucked away in a secondary Cabinet office about which little is said and less is known.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the Record by printing in 8-point Record type an article that I recently wrote for the Engineering and Mining Journal, published in New York City, on this subject, which appeared in the January issue of that journal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing the article in question in 8-point Record type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

WHAT CAN LEGISLATION DO FOR THE MINING INDUSTRY?

When President Harding, in his inaugural address, declared for more business in Government and less Government in business, he struck a high chord in the minds of the American people. The President evidently meant to warn Congress against the passage of such laws as impose hardships upon the individual citizen and the business world, and did not say that legislation necessary to encourage the basic industries of the country was not justified. The English common law was adopted as the basis of our jurisprudence at the foundation of this Republic, and since that time both the organic law and our Federal and State statutes have grown up by accretion, amendments to the Constitution and new statutes having been enacted from time to time to meet the varying necessities of the American people. We not only have the most wonderful Constitution ever struck off by the minds of men in a given period but we have the most humane, liberal, and just laws known to the civilized world to-day. The preeminent position occupied by the United States among the nations of the earth is not the result of chance, but is the direct result of legislation reflecting the wants and needs of a self-governing people guided by an all-wise Providence.

It is generally conceded that agriculture is the most important of the occupations of men. It is also conceded that the mining industry stands second in importance to agriculture. From the days of the ancient Egyptians down to the present time every great nation of the earth has encouraged its mining industry. It has been said that the material strength of the German Empire, under William Hohenzollern, was largely due to the development of its coal and iron mines; and that Japan's greatest weakness to-day lies in her lack of mineral resources. The United States has the greatest developed and undeveloped mineral wealth of any country on the globe. At the close of the Revolutionary War mining in the United States had not arrived at a stage where it could even be called an industry. With the advance of science and education has come the development of our mining industry. In 1920 our mine products, raw and manufactured, provided 60 per cent of all tonnage carried by class I railroads in the United States. The finished mine products for that year alone amounted to a greater tonnage than all other manufactured products combined. Excluding the shipment of bituminous coal, the mining industry in 1920, in raw materials, provided twice as much tonnage as did agriculture, three times as much as forestry, and twelve times as much as animal industry.

Our early statesmen with all their prophetic vision could not foresee the tremendous possibilities of our mining industry, nor could they foresee the effect of scientific research upon its future development. All our industrial achievements have been made possible by the enactment of laws pursuant to the public-welfare clause of the Federal Constitution.

Legislation has directly developed great agricultural areas of the Northwest through our beneficent reclamation laws, and has stimulated the mining industry through the activity of the Bureau of Mines. Congress has been a little tardy in the exercise of its power under the Constitution in initiating legislation directly affecting industry. There was a time in the history of this country when such legislation was considered improper, but with the passing years and more liberal education, the public mind has so changed upon that question that to-day the demand for the same is far in excess of the ability of Congress to supply. To illustrate: Our Government was exactly 100 years old when Congress first exercised its power under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution to regulate traffic through the instrumentality of the Interstate Commerce Commission. At that time it was urged that the vesting of such power in an auxiliary branch of Government was in violation of individual rights, and that the carriers themselves should be left free to make and enforce freight and passenger rates. Now, everybody concedes, even the carriers themselves, that Congress not only had such power under the Constitution, but wisely exercised the same in the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission by the act of 1887. Our very industrial and economic life depends upon legislation, and our law-making bodies, both national and State, are reasonably responsive to the necessities of the people in enacting the same. The judiciary has been more slow in responding to new and changing conditions arising from time to time in our industrial life than the legislative, yet this branch of the Government can be depended upon to sympathetically interpret such laws as may be enacted upon the subject.

The development of our national resources is one thing and their conservation is quite another thing. We often hear the expression that our resources are unlimited, but in truth and in fact they are limited. It would be hard to think of one resource but what is diminished by use under natural laws, the only exceptions, perhaps, being water and electric power. Our mineral products are annually being depleted and are not replaced by natural laws like the recurring annual agricultural crops or the replacement of the cut-over forest by an early growth of young timber. Therefore it is the plain duty of Congress to safeguard the welfare of the Nation by aiding the economic development of our mining resources and their conservation, because the supply at hand must serve both present and future generations. Our country has grown from a mere handful of people in the thirteen original Colonies to a population of 105,000,000, whose present needs far exceed those of the past, and, with an ever-increasing population, the wants of the future will correspondingly multiply.

In answering the question, What can legislation do for the mining industry in the future? we can best judge by what has been done in the past. By act of Congress the Bureau of Mines was established in 1910 for the purpose of doing scientific, research, and experimental work in mining and metallurgy, and to reduce mine disasters by aiding in an advisory capacity the mine operators of the country in working out safety problems in mines. Coincident with the action taken in this regard by the Federal Government, every State in the Union interested in either coal or metal mining that did not have a department of mining promptly enacted a code of mining laws. Through the operation of our State and Federal mining laws the number of mine accidents in recent years has greatly diminished, the death rate among workmen reduced, working conditions have been made more easy, and the health of the employees improved by the use of safety and health appliances. By a well-directed system of instruction and education carried on by the Bureau of Mines workmen and operators have been taught how to avoid mine disasters and have been brought into a closer relationship, the result of which has had a large influence in creating the nation-wide movement in all industries for greater human safety. There were fewer fatalities in mine accidents in the United States in 1920 than in any previous year. The value of this work can not be measured in dollars and cents.

Another concrete example of what legislation can do for the mining industry is shown in tests now being carried on in the recovery of oil from shale and the elimination of waste in the recovery of petroleum oil by the economic use of scientific methods. It has been determined that shale oil can be successfully recovered from the Colorado and Utah shale at an approximate cost of $3.50 per barrel. Geologists are agreed that the greatest deposits of oil shale are located in the Northwest, especially in Colorado and Utah; and our oil experts hold that the supply of shale oil far exceeds the supply of petroleum oil. If this view of the matter be correct, the only remaining question to be considered is how to bring the price of production down to a reasonable cost. It is true, from a practical standpoint, that no market can be found in this country for shale oil at $3.50 per barrel so long as petroleum oil can be obtained at $1.50 per barrel, or at any other price below the cost of producing oil from shale. However, Scotland has produced shale oil for 70 years, and is producing it to-day, at a cost of about $4 per barrel, but none is produced for export, the entire amount being used for domestic purposes. Tests are now being made in the recovery of oil from sand, tar, and asphalt, in the hope that as the supply of petroleum oil is depleted a process may be worked out by which oil may be recovered, not only from shale but from these other sources. It is thought our possibilities for the recovery of oil from the oil sands especially are equal to the possibilities of shale oil. Under the operation of the recently enacted oil leasing law the Government has a force of expert oil men in charge of the oil-leasing stations in Colorado, Wyoming, California, Oklahoma, Texas, and Louisiana, who go out into the field and assist, in an advisory capacity, the more inexperienced operators in the bringing in of oil wells, so as to avoid as much waste as possible. The oil operators, like the coal and metal mine operators, welcome the assistance the Government is rendering in this regard.

Another concrete case of what legislation has done for the mining industry is shown under the operation of the so-called Pittman Act, which became effective April 23, 1918. Under this act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, through the Director of the Mint, to purchase the silver produced by the silver mines in the United States at the fixed price of $1 per ounce delivered at the mint or the New York assay office. While the American silver miner has not received less than $1 per ounce for his silver since the passage of this law, yet the price of foreign silver since April 23, 1918, has been less than 50 cents per ounce. Had it not been for the existence of this legislation American silver would have gone possibly as low as 50 cents per ounce and would have closed practically all the silver mines in the United States in 1919, just as the lead, zinc, barytes, cobalt, and copper mines have been and now are closed in most States, on account of the lack of proper protection. The effect of closing the silver mines would not only have thrown thousands of men out of employment but would have added greatly to the reduction of our gold supply, because there is a recoverable amount of gold in most silver ore. Briefly stated, legislation is conserving our forests, reclaiming arid lands, propagating rare seeds and plants, stimulating industry, and making life worth while.

So much for what legislation has done. Now let us turn to what legislation may do for the mining industry.

On account of the alarming reduction in our annual output of gold since 1915, there has arisen a demand in some quarters for legislation to increase the price of gold. The total gold production in the United States in 1920 was 50 per cent less than the 1915 production. Our 1920 production was 2,395,000 ounces, being a reduction of $10,000,000 over the preceding year, and if it had not been for the abnormal importation of gold into the United States during the past three years our gold reserve would have been reduced to the danger point. By legislative act the standard gold dollar contains 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine. During the recent period of high prices gold was the only commodity that did not go up in price, yet the price of labor and material increased from two to four fold. In fact, every factor entering into the cost of producing gold increased, but the price of gold remained fixed at $20.67 per ounce. Many western gold-mining operators assert that on account of this fact they have been compelled to close their mines permanently. This situation gave rise to the so-called McFadden bill, proposing to impose an excise tax of 50 cents a pennyweight upon all gold going into the fine arts for a period of five years. The Treasury Department does not look with favor upon this proposed legislation, upon the ground that the effect would be to disturb the gold standard by raising the price of gold from $20.67 to $30.67 per ounce. Friends of the measure contend that the legislation is justified, as a temporary measure at least, in order to revive the languishing condition of the gold-mining industry.

Recent reports from California, Alaska, Colorado, South Dakota, Montana, and Arizona indicate the gold-mining industry needs rehabilitation. The writer expresses no personal opinion one way or the other on the McFadden bill at this time, but he does say that unless there is a decline in the cost affecting the production of gold it will be necessary in the near future to enact legislation of some sort in behalf of the gold-mining industry. The United States to-day is not only the creditor Nation of the world, but our coffers contain one-third of the gold of the world. The commanding position we occupy as a creditor Nation is the result of the late war and may not be abnormal; but our holding one-third of the world's supply of gold is abnormal, and with the return of normal conditions abroad we can not expect to hold so large a supply of gold. It is true, our legal gold reserve will never be endangered so long as we occupy our present unique position. But is it fair to allow the great gold-mining industry of the United States to remain under the present handicap because of these abnormal conditions, even though our Treasury is filled with gold? Are not the gold miners of the United States entitled to produce sufficient gold to meet the coinage and industrial requirements of the country, instead of our obtaining so much gold from abroad? Gold mining in all ages of the world has been a permanent industry, and it is essential that gold mining in this country go on at a normal rate. Gold mining is a hazardous enterprise for the reason that capital once invested can not be easily diverted into other industry and because it takes a long time to develop a paying gold mine, unless it be the unusual bonanza discovery, which seems to be a thing of the past. In fact, gold mining is no casual industry and can not be intermittently suspended and resumed without serious interference with production. It is a well-known fact that the high-grade gold ore reserves are being rapidly exhausted, and unless science can open the way by which the gold content of low-grade ores can be successfully recovered the time is near at hand when legislation must be enacted to relieve the present precarious condition of the industry. Those who oppose change in existing law should be reminded that the downfall of empires and republics in the past has been brought about by failure to meet new conditions. The virility of this Republic lies in its ability to meet by legislation the new and ever changing industrial and economic conditions. The decrees of ancient Venice were considered irreversible. One writer in speaking of the laws of the ancient Medes and Persians said, "They altereth not, neither do they change." That condition is not true in our Republic. Our growth and development have been brought about by the law of evolution. Growth, development, and expansion are all made possible by the law of healthy change.

There is another question so close of kin to the proposed gold bonus legislation that it should be mentioned in this connection. Under existing law there is nothing to prevent the destruction of gold coin for use in the fine arts. In 1919 $80,337,600 of gold coins and bullion were sold by the United States Mint for use in the fine arts, of which $3,500,000 consisted of gold coins of various denominations. In other words, five, ten, and twenty dollar gold pieces were actually broken up and destroyed. It is estimated that at least $8,000,000 in gold coins were destroyed in 1920. Another startling fact in connection with the use of gold in the fine arts is that the 1919 gold production in this country was $21,948,000 less than the amount consumed in the fine arts and manufactures that year. Congress has no right to prevent by law the use of commercial gold from going into jewelry and industry, but Congress should prevent the destruction of gold coins for such purposes, and such legislation is now in contemplation.

Last, but not least in the consideration of legislation necessary to stimulate the mining industry, is the creation of a new executive department of government, to be known as the department of mines. It is entirely inconsistent with the importance of the great mining industry, in the light of its contribution to our whole economic structure, to relegate this indispensable function of government—as is true to-day with the Bureau of Mines—to a small department in a secondary Cabinet office. Our total output of mineral wealth in 1920 was $6,707,000,000. With one-half of the world's output of coal, iron, and steel, and all other mineral products about in the same proportion, are we not entitled to a department of mines in the President's Cabinet?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we are closing general debate now on another one of the numerous supply bills of this Government. This particular bill which is under debate at this time carries $295,622,112 to be taken out of the people's Treasury. And by actual count the membership here on the floor is just 10 Congressmen. Ten Congressmen only, out of 435, to consider a measure that takes $295,622,112 of the people's money out of the Treasury!

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not yield; the gentleman has had plenty of time. I know that the gentleman does not approve of this situation because he is nearly all the time here. We know that the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee [Mr.

CRAMTON] is one of the hard-working Members of this Congress, and if all the bills had the consideration from other Members that this distinguished chairman of the subcommittee gives to the bills we would have better legislation.

But let me call your attention to what happened under these conditions. Yesterday we had another of these supply bills under consideration and passed it, carrying millions of dollars to be taken out of the people's Treasury, and when we came to an item to provide packing boxes—cedar chests that you put your clothes in—you do not put papers and periodicals into cedar chests, you put clothes into them, and that is what they are manufactured for; that is what they are bought for by Congress, and that is what Members use them for—cedar chests, pine chests, and oak chests. When we reached that item of the bill that carried the appropriation for cedar, pine, and oak boxes I made a point of order against it. I called the Chair's attention to the fact that there was a precedent for sustaining the point of order in the last Congress, where in the legislative bill, when that item was reached, I made a point of order, and the Chair sustained it, and it went out of the bill, and so this last year we did not have any cedar, pine, or oak boxes. But when the Chair sustained it yesterday, he did it reluctantly. Here is his language:

Under the ruling cited by the gentleman from Texas this item has been held out of order, and while the present occupant of the chair, aside from the ruling, does not desire to so hold, yet in view of the ruling cited the Chair feels that he should follow the precedent and sustain the point of order.

He did sustain it and it went out. He indicated by suggestion, however, that he would like to have somebody appeal from the decision and set a new precedent, so as to secure for us all the cedar, oak, and pine chests. Immediately the very bright and ever-present gentleman from Massachusetts, the actual floor leader of the House, Mr. WALSH, caught the cue and appealed from the decision of the Chair. Let me show you how many men voted on the appeal. There were a little more here than there are at this time. There were 24 Members present yesterday when the appeal was decided. The Record shows, on page 2359, that the Chairman, when he said the "noes" appeared to have it—those that did not agree with the Chair's decision—the Record shows that I demanded a division, and the question was taken and the ayes were 1 and the noes 23. I was the only one who voted to sustain the ruling of the Chair, keeping out the packing boxes, and the other 23 voted to overrule the decision of the Chair, voted to overrule the rules of the House by which legislation ought to be passed, and the packing boxes were put back into the bill by a vote of 23 to 1.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment. That was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union which frames these bills, and under the rules I could not force a record vote there. But when we got back into the House—I want to show you how these things change when you force the yeas and nays on record—when we got back into the House I demanded a separate vote on the packing boxes and forced a record vote, and then instead of the vote being 1 to 23 the Record shows that there were 79 Members voted against that proposition, nearly four times as many as were present when the point of order was sustained and then set aside. If those 79 Congressmen had been here when the point of order was made and when the appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair, they would have kept that item out, and they would not only have voted to keep the packing-box money in the people's Treasury but they would have upheld the rules of the House.

Mr. CARTER. Has the gentleman any assurance that they would have voted the other way if they had been here? It was not a record vote.

Mr. BLANTON. Sometimes when you have a record vote you can change things, and that is one reason for a record vote. It is to place the responsibility where it belongs.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not yield. The gentleman is the distinguished subwhip of the Republican Party, and the chairman will give him all the time he wants.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to know how many of the boxes the gentleman has himself.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want the gentleman to interpose any remarks into my speech.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman know that his speech is costing the Government more than the packing boxes?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the cost to the Government goes on whether you stay here or not. That old gag about "costing" is the worst piece of foolishness I know of. We could adjourn tomorrow and not come back until December and practically the same expenses of Congress would go on just the same, and the distinguished and intelligent Member from Ohio knows it as well as I do.

Mr. BEGG. It would not cost so much for printing.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but the daily Record has got to be filled up. [Laughter.] If I were not using these 10 minutes right now, some other Member would be occupying the floor and the printing would be the same.

Mr. ARENTZ. Should there not be some discrimination shown?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would rather be putting something good into the Record than the people want than something that they might not want. There is not a Member of Congress who can get up here now in this House and justify the action of taking the people's money and buying cedar chests with it. Oh, you may claim some excuse, possibly, for the pine and the oak chests, but you have not any excuse whatever for the cedar chests. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who has spent 44 years in this House, said yesterday that during the 44 years he had had many applications from Texas for his cedar boxes. You know, we use them as things of monetary value when they are given to us.

When I made a speech against these cedar chests yesterday, as was the case a moment ago, a gentleman from West Virginia then said, "Oh, but didn't you take yours?" Of course I took them, and you take them. Why, if I had not taken them, then some subemployee of the many which the House has on its pay rolls would have gotten them. These chests are purchased by the Clerk; the money had already been taken out of the Treasury and spent for the chests when we receive them; they are placed to my credit, and if I had not gone down and received them then somebody else would have gotten them. I took mine, of course. I would have been a fool not to have taken them. But I say now what I told the gentleman from West Virginia yesterday if the distinguished subwhip of this House from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], who is one of the strong men in the House, would get up here and use the same vim on this fight that he uses concerning other fights on some improper measures and help stop this petty graft, we might get rid of it.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. How can I stop it when the gentleman is so anxious to continue it by taking his boxes?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I would not take them, and no other Member could, if we stopped the law and appropriation that furnished them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the large, enthusiastic, and impatient attendance here this afternoon, I feel somewhat reluctant in consuming the time of the House, but I do want to take the time to thank the majority members of the subcommittee for their courtesy to the minority members in consideration of this bill, and to add just a word with reference to the Indian Bureau portion of the bill.

Just after the subcommittee report on this bill was submitted to the general Appropriations Committee, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations came to me on the floor of the House and said, "You boys held this bill down wonderfully well, and I want to compliment you on having done a splendid job." I repeat this not as a compliment to myself, but as a slight tribute to the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. All of them labored assiduously to try to bring this bill to that point which they thought would thoroughly conform to the views of the membership of the House. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] and I contributed, I think, the usual share of minority members on subcommittees. So far as I now recall there was practically complete agreement on all items agreed to in the bill, with the exception of the increase in the Bureau of Pensions force and continuation of officials known as surveyors general in the Public Lands Bureau. Mr. BYRNES and I dissented from these two propositions because we felt that they were unnecessary appropriations at a time like this, when the country is demanding economy and reduction in taxation, and for other good reasons which we will be able to explain when the items are reached in the bill.

When I first came to Congress I was considerable of an iconoclast, but my 15 years' service here and association with gentlemen on both sides of the House have brought me to a better realization of that old proverb, "There is so much good in the worst of us and so much bad in the best of us that it hardly behooves any of us to talk about the rest of us." Yet while some of the sharp edges have been knocked off my iconoclastic views, I am still not very much of a hero worshipper. It is not often I can find very much good to say about any Republican public official; in fact, I do not agree with Republican officials on anything worth mentioning. I feel, really I know, that the views taken by them on practically every public question are erroneous; but I am not so steeped in partisanship that I fail to recognize good in a public official even though he view public questions from a different angle from myself. The instance to which I am about to call the attention of the House is made somewhat more difficult from the fact that the bureau chief to whom I must refer was at one time a Member of this House, and during his membership here he and I disagreed very materially on many Indian questions, especially those in Oklahoma and South Dakota. I can recall no more bitter debates having been waged around the Indian question than those between this gentleman and the Oklahoma delegation. Much of that difference of opinion, however, was thoroughly dissipated when each of us came to understand the real purpose of the other. All of us here, and especially those of us who have served on appropriating committees, understand the customary attitude of the usual bureau chief. As a rule he does not come before the committee for any economical purpose in reducing his estimates, but he rather considers his duty before the committee to maintain and justify every appropriation recommended, no matter how large and unnecessary it may be.

This gentleman to whom I refer is the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Hon. Charles H. Burke, for many years a Member of this House and for a while chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I do not care to sing his praises any further than to say this: When he and his Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Meritt, came before our subcommittee, in the language of the street, they literally "laid their cards on the table." They made no attempt to conceal anything from the committee. For instance, when one of their appropriations overlapped some other branch of the public service, or was supplemented by another amount, they did not hesitate for a moment to tell us so; in fact, they did not wait to be asked, they usually volunteered the information. Then when we came to make up the bill in the committee, we found it next to impossible to make any reduction in the estimates that they had made in each individual case. As a matter of fact, they had cut their estimates so broadly and so intelligently that at times we felt somewhat dubious about making the few cuts which we did make, and that accounts for the small reductions made in the estimates for the Indian Bureau in this bill.

So far as the commissioner himself is concerned, I do not know that it is necessary for us to sing his praises for having seen and done his plain duty. His whole work on the floor of this House was one intelligent fight for economy in expenditures in all branches of the Federal Government, so when he took his place as Commissioner of Indian Affairs he was thoroughly equipped to view the necessities of his bureau not only from the Indian Bureau standpoint but from the angle of view of this House itself. I thank you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Do I understand we are ready to commence work on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate is finished, as the Chair understood.

Mr. WINGO. There are only seven Republican Members present and one is asleep, and I think we should have a quorum here.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment. The gentleman is aware that the President is addressing the Senate at this time. Those who are interested in the address are over in the Senate, and those who are more interested in this bill are here. I hope we can begin reading the bill and make a little progress and then adjourn at a reasonable hour.

Mr. WINGO. I do not want what I say to appear to be critical of absent Members. I do not blame them for not being here during general debate. I have been here all the time and had a hard time to keep awake while some gentlemen simply talked to fill the Record, but when we commence actual consideration of the bill we should have more of the working Members present.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think there are a great many Democrats as well as Republicans in the Senate.

Mr. WINGO. There are but three or four active working Members of the House present.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know who are included in that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it for the present.

Mr. WINGO. In view of the fact that the President is speaking over in the Senate and many Members are over there whom I would not like to disturb, I shall withdraw the point of order. I presume the gentleman will not try to handle any disputed items, but simply wants to read the bill until we reach a disputed item and then adjourn. I understood the afternoon program was to have the bill explained in a general way, then let those who simply wanted to fill the Record talk and not try to do detail work on the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary and the bureaus, offices, and buildings of the department; furniture, carpets, ice, lumber, hardware, dry goods, advertising, telegraphing, street car fares not exceeding $350, and expressage; not exceeding $500 shall be available for the payment of damages caused to private property by department motor vehicles, exclusive of those operated by the Government fuel yards; purchase and exchange of motor trucks, motor cycles, and bicycles; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motor trucks, motor cycles, and bicycles, to be used only for official purposes; diagrams; awnings, filing and labor-saving devices; constructing model and other cases and furniture; and other absolutely necessary expenses not hereinbefore provided for, including traveling expenses, typewriting and labor-saving machines, $58,000: Provided, That within 30 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to deliver to the Department of the Interior, without payment therefor, one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Michigan will give his attention. I notice he has provided here that "not exceeding $500 shall be available for the payment of damages caused to private property by department motor vehicles exclusive of those operated by the Government fuel yards." First, I want to know why you have excluded those operated by the Government fuel yards?

Mr. CRAMTON. The language is the same language as the current law. The gentleman will realize how careful this committee must be not to widen what might look like a legislative provision, and hence we did not widen the language as it now is.

Mr. WINGO. Is not there as much danger from their motor vehicles as the others?

Mr. CRAMTON. It may be; I am not informed. We took the language as carried heretofore.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman tell me how many cases there were last year?

Mr. CRAMTON. I know the amount was small; $500 is the limit of the appropriation, and there was no request for a larger amount.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will yield I will say that the same provision touching such vehicles referred to will be found later on in the bill as applying to fuel yards and motor trucks.

Mr. WINGO. Why not include them in this provision?

Mr. CRAMTON. Because we took the language as it came in.

Mr. WINGO. I thought we were going back to normalcy and doing away with surplus language and duplication of provisions. For instance, we passed a bill in the House a day or two ago enlarging the present existing statutes so as to authorize the consideration of claims up to a thousand dollars. The gentleman thinks it better to carry this?

Mr. CRAMTON. Until that becomes a law, and naturally then this would go out.

Mr. WINGO. I notice they are going to get another motor-propelled passenger vehicle. Can the gentleman tell me how many of these passenger vehicles they have in the department?

Mr. CRAMTON. Not many. I think that is in the hearings. They have some trucks to haul ashes with and some delivery busses. The new car is for the use of the Secretary, as other department Secretaries.

Mr. WINGO. My observation has been this department does not possess as many passenger motor-propelled vehicles as some of the other departments.

Mr. CRAMTON. Their expenditure for the current year for maintenance and repair for the first five and a half months, from the 1st of July to the 13th of December, was under $3,000. That was from their contingent fund for maintenance and operation of those vehicles.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I believe I will withdraw the pro forma amendment and offer an amendment to strike out the words in lines 2 and 3, page 4, "exclusive of those operated by the Government fuel yards," giving notice that later on I shall move to strike out the provision that carries those words so as to have only one provision covering this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words, beginning in line 2, "exclusive of those operated by the Government fuel yards."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence of two special inspectors, while traveling on duty, at not exceeding $4, and for actual necessary expenses of transportation (including temporary employment of stenographers, typewriters, and other assistance outside of the District of Columbia, and for incidental expenditures necessary to the efficient conduct of examinations), to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,500.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The chairman will note the expression here, "employment of typewriters," page 6, line 4.

Mr. CRAMTON. I suppose that means to apply to typists.

Mr. BLANTON. No; stenographers cover that.

Mr. CRAMTON. But they sometimes have clerks who are typists but who are not stenographers.

Mr. BLANTON. This has no reference to machines?

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume not.

The Clerk read as follows:

CUSTODY OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT BUILDINGS.

The responsibility for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Interior Department Building, the Pension Office Building, the Patent Office Building, and the General Land Office Building, and the disbursement of the funds appropriated therefor, shall be transferred on July 1, 1922, and thereafter, from the Secretary of the Interior to the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings: Provided, That the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Buildings is hereby authorized to manufacture and sell at cost to the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government such quantities of ice, electricity, and steam as he may be able to manufacture or generate with the equipment that is available in the buildings under his supervision.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WINGO. What is the change provided for in that paragraph, the first part of it?

Mr. CRAMTON. The change is this: There are four buildings in the district under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior—the main Interior Department Building, the Patent Office Building, the Pension Office Building, all three of which are used almost entirely by the department, and the old General Land Office Building, formerly used by the department, but now occupied entirely by other activities. In the report of the Secretary of the Interior he suggested that the old General Land Office Building should be turned over to the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, because it is no longer used by the department. Col. Sherrill, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, made a survey of the buildings with a view to following that action. He showed that a very gratifying reduction in the expense of maintenance could be secured in that event, and because of that and with the full approbation of the Secretary of the Interior, Col. Sherrill, at the request of the committee, then made a further survey to ascertain what could be accomplished if the other three buildings were likewise turned over. As the result of that survey, it developed that an immediate reduction of approximately $74,000 could be made, to which would be added, in the event there should be $240 bonus paid, in addition to the dropping of 82 employees, a saving of $18,000, or a total saving of about $92,000 this year and perhaps more hereafter.

Mr. WINGO. It tends to centralize the control?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; and it puts the control in the hands of specialists.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is satisfied that it will promote economy?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. I would like to put into the Record at this point the letter of the Secretary of the Interior agreeing to the change, demonstrating the willingness of Secretary Fall to accept any suggestion that means efficiency and economy.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman will insert that?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to insert the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 30, 1922.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
Chairman Subcommittee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: Confirming my phone message, Secretary Fall and I are entirely willing, if the committee deems it advisable, that the plan for consolidated control of the buildings of the Interior Department be placed in the office of Public Buildings and Grounds, provided your committee believes that it will result in increased efficiency and economy.

As will appear from the records, we have managed our buildings in a very economical manner, but as pointed out in Capt. Hoover's report to your committee of January 27, 1922, it may be possible to improve upon that through the operation of a consolidated force under which mechanics and others may be shifted from point to point, as their services are needed. This department is very much in favor of coordinating governmental activities to secure efficiency and economy and to place activities in departments to which they are properly related. Secretary Fall so expressed himself in a letter to Chairman Brown of the Efficiency Commission November 10, 1921.

Again assuring you of our willingness to cooperate in every way for the improvement of the service, I am

Respectfully,

E. C. FINNEY,

First Assistant Secretary and Budget Officer.

Mr. WINGO. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors: For suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among the natives of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in response to the desires of some of the Members, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CLAGUE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for February 10 and February 11, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. MANN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Capt. John B. Jeffery, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 11, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

521. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of the second annual report of the Perry's Victory Memorial Commission, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Library.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BURROUGHS: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 9490. A bill to provide for medical and hospital services for the officers and seamen of the Coast and Geodetic Survey; with amendments (Rept. No. 689). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WARD of New York: Committee on Agriculture. S. J. Res. 12. A joint resolution authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic; without amendment (Rept. No. 690). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEENERSON: Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. H. R. 7544. A bill authorizing the Postmaster General to temporarily reduce the pay of rural carriers for disciplinary purposes instead of suspending them without pay; without amendment (Rept. No. 692). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEENERSON: Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. H. R. 8927. A bill authorizing establishment of rural routes of from 36 to 75 miles in length; without amendment (Rept. No. 693). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FROTHINGHAM: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2736. An act providing for the conveyance of certain unused military reservations in the State of Massachusetts to the city of Salem and the town of Marblehead; with amendments (Rept. No. 691). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3814) granting a pension to Benjamin Ratliff; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10307) granting an increase of pension to James F. Lyons; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SWEET: A bill (H. R. 10369) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Eldora, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10370) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Independence, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10371) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Dubuque, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10372) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Waterloo, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10373) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Eagle Grove, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10374) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Waverly, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10375) to authorize the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a Federal building at Hampton, Iowa; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. VOIGT: A bill (H. R. 10376) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Hartford, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10377) providing for the extension and enlargement of the post-office building at Sheboygan, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10378) providing for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Portage, Wis.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 10379) to amend a provision contained in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1917, approved May 18, 1916 (39 Stat., 123-156), appropriating the sum of $95,000 to be used in addition to the tribal funds of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians in Wisconsin who are enrolled under the act of Congress of March 3, 1893; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 10380) granting a pension to Emma A. Drake; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOWELL: A bill (H. R. 10381) granting a pension to Matilda Mitchell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FOSTER: A bill (H. R. 10382) granting a pension to Mary C. Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREENE of Vermont: A bill (H. R. 10383) granting a pension to Katharine Falk; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 10384) for the relief of the estate of Robert Moore; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LAMPERT: A bill (H. R. 10385) granting a pension to Agnes Ditter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHAW: A bill (H. R. 10386) granting an increase of pension to Mary Ann Bandy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPROUL: A bill (H. R. 10387) granting a pension to Minnie A. Houser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEBSTER: A bill (H. R. 10388) granting a pension to Rose G. Bingman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WURZBACH: A bill (H. R. 10389) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Trask; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3961. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petitions of the Pan-Albanian Federation of America "Vatra" (the Hearth) (Inc.), Local Branches Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 15, 16, 21, 35, 49, 60, urging the recognition of the Albanian Government by the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 11, 1922.

(Legislative day of Friday, February 3, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian on the expiration of the recess.

EXECUTIVE AND INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9981) making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lodge	Sheppard
Ball	Glass	McCormick	Shortridge
Borah	Harrell	McNary	Simmons
Brandeggee	Harris	Myers	Spencer
Bursum	Harrison	Nelson	Stanfield
Calder	Heflin	Newberry	Stanley
Capper	Hitchcock	Norris	Sterling
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Swanson
Culberson	Kellogg	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Warren
Curtis	Kenyon	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	Keyes	Poinexter	Weller
Edge	King	Pomerene	Williams
Fernald	Ladd	Ransdell

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] are absent on official business, attending a meeting of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is unavoidably absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I would like a moment to look over a suggested amendment which has just been handed to me and which I think will probably cover what I want. I have not had time to read it, for I have just come in from a committee meeting. [After a pause.]

This draft of an amendment to take the place of the clause in the House text which the committee propose to strike out has been handed to me by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and I am very glad to substitute it for the one which I offered. I move it as a substitute for the language in the House text proposed by the committee to be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment in the nature of a substitute will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment heretofore offered and in lieu of the words of the House text from line 20, on page 30, to line 6, on page 31, which the committee proposes to strike out, the Senator from Massachusetts moves to insert:

No part of the moneys appropriated or made available by this act shall, unless the President shall otherwise direct, be used or expended for the repair or reconditioning of any vessel owned or controlled by the Government if the expense of such repair or reconditioning is in excess of $5,000 until a reasonable opportunity has been given to the nearest available Government navy yard to estimate upon the cost of such repair or reconditioning, if performed by such navy yard within the limit of time within which the work is to be done: Provided, That this limitation shall only apply to vessels while in the harbors of the United States; and all expenditures in connection with such work are to be considered in estimating the cost: And provided further, That the provisions of this clause shall take effect upon the passage of this act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the amendment which has just been read, and which, I understand, has been suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], offered as a substitute for the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Washington has handed me the amendment which I have sent to the Secretary's desk, and I gladly accept it and offer it as a substitute for the amendment heretofore offered by me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I think the amendment as now suggested cares for the situation, taking both interests into account.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts in what respect does the amendment propose to change the original proposition? Does it modify it in any other respect than to give the President the right to approve what may be done or to direct that something else shall be done?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the original proposition, as it came from the other House, was very drastic and very inelastic. It compelled inquiry at all the navy yards in the country before even a screw driver or any other small article could be purchased in connection with the reconditioning of a vessel. That, of course, was impracticable. The question involved relates to repairing and reconditioning the Leviathan; and I shall take a few moments before I leave the floor to speak concerning the reason why the matter has been brought up.

If I may have the attention of the Senate for a few moments, I shall take advantage of the opportunity to explain why I have proposed this amendment and why I have very gladly accepted the proposition as drafted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

This question, I repeat, has arisen in connection with the reconditioning and repair of the Leviathan. Let me say frankly at the beginning that, although what I am about to state I shall not advance as a reason for action, I wish the Senate to know why it has made me feel very strongly in regard to the matter. In the metropolitan district of the city of Boston there are between a million and a half and two million people. They are gathered there on the edge of the ocean. It is a great manufacturing region, particularly that to the north of Boston. We have there the Charlestown Navy Yard, which is one of the oldest in the country, being more than 100 years old. During the World War the United States bought a dock which had been built by the State of Massachusetts and which was lying just across the harbor from the navy yard. It is the largest dock in the United States, and is built in the best possible manner of stone and cement. It is 1,200 feet long. I repeat, there is no dock of equal size in the United States, for the great dock at the Norfolk Navy Yard, which, I understand, will be a little larger, has not as yet been finished.

In connection with the Charlestown Navy Yard the Government established another plant for the operation of vessels in the dock. One principal reason for the purchase by the Government during the war of that dock was that it was the only dock in which, if need be, such a vessel as the Leviathan could be placed for repairs to the hull.

We have also a great private yard at Quincy, the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., where ships of the largest tonnage are built. In that private yard and in the navy yard at Boston there were over 33,000 men employed, almost all of them being skilled mechanics. There are now only 5,000 employed, including both the private yard and the navy yard. From twenty-five to twenty-eight thousand skilled mechanics have been thrown out of work. Undoubtedly some of them have regained employment, but many have not been able to do so. There is a serious condition of unemployment in that section of the country.

The government of the State of Massachusetts appropriated $50,000 for some work, I think, in connection with woodland or the parks. The purpose was partly to afford work to some of the unemployed. They were to apply at the Statehouse, and a long line of men appeared there waiting to obtain employment. Toward the end of the line, the places ahead having all been taken before they reached the place, there happened to be four ex-service men. There were other ex-service men higher up in the line, but the four of whom I now speak remained there all day, until they fainted from exhaustion, and the opportunity for employment by the State was gone before they could be reached.

I merely mention this to show the condition that exists. There is real suffering and genuine lack of employment. I should be less than human if I did not feel deeply the distress caused by conditions left by the war for which no one is responsible.

These people see these great works belonging to the Government, including the greatest dock in the country, with a plant attached to it, lying there entirely idle. The navy yard has very little work, and, of course, it is inevitable that the navy yard force will be still further reduced. A great reduction has just been made at the Washington Navy Yard, and, as Senators have noticed from the items in the newspapers of yesterday and to-day, the severity of the experience of these men is being taken up by their comrades in the labor organizations.

It is said that they have no better claim than anybody else; but there are many of these men who went into the navy yard as apprentices and have been there from 20 to 30 years. Although I know very well that reductions must come, I think they have a certain claim upon the Government if there is an opportunity for Government work which must be done.

Representatives of these men in New England, together with the mayors from all the surrounding cities, have been down here to see me and other Senators from that section. One representative of the men at the yard, who was very manly and straightforward, said, "I recognize that inevitably the mechanical forces of the yards must be reduced; I recognize the effect of the treaties; I know naval work must decrease. We do not ask charity; we know the Government can not support us and give us work there if there is no work to be done; but if there is Government work to be done, we should like a chance to bid on it. We are aware, of course, that private yards will give bonds and guaranties." I may say, parenthetically, Mr. President, that I have had rather a protracted experience in naval matters, for I was a member of the House committee which authorized the first three ships of the new Navy—the Massachusetts, the Indiana, and the Oregon—and I have yet to hear of a successful effort to collect penalties from a contracting firm. There may be such instances; I presume there are; but none have been produced, although we hear much about the guaranty furnished by private yards. The men of whom I speak stated to me, through their leaders, that they were willing to give and would gladly give a guaranty on their own wages, that they would give bond individually, to insure that they would do the work in a given time and at a certain rate. The wages in that yard are not to be reduced in the future, as Mr. Lasker estimates; they have been reduced already by the Government 25 per cent. Those men, as I say, are willing to bond their own wages in order to secure some assurance of work for themselves and support for their families. That is unbusinesslike, no doubt, and that would be the condemnation that would come from the Shipping Board, but the suggestion was well and honestly meant, and I confess that it appealed to me.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. KING. In preparing the estimate of cost which they might be willing to submit, would there be taken into account as a factor the amount of capital, or any part of it, invested by the Government and the depreciation from the use of Government tools and facilities?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly the second item would be taken into consideration, but they would not take into consideration the interest on the capital invested in the navy yard, because the United States is going to keep the navy yard in any event; it can not do anything else with it.

Mr. KING. Will there be taken into account those factors that would be properly chargeable to deterioration?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the draft of the bid would be made by the experts who prepare the bids for all naval ships which are built. The men who work with their hands are not going to make the designs.

Mr. KING. The Senator can see that if a bid were submitted by persons in control of the Government navy yard and they did not take into account deterioration involving loss to the Government, the replacement of tools, and all that sort of thing, it would give them a material advantage over private competitors.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is provided in the amendment that all such expenses shall be computed.

I do not wish to detain the Senate. I hope that they will adopt the amendment which has been prepared by the Senator from Washington and which I have submitted in lieu of the amendment heretofore offered by me.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to interrupt the Senator to ask him a question.

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. In connection with the question of a navy yard submitting an estimate it will take money to prepare and submit estimates and to do the work thereunder, will it not?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; I think I know the point the Senator has in mind, that there would be great delays if the work were entrusted to a navy yard, but none if it were given to private contractors.

Mr. OVERMAN. Private contractors have already made estimates.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; they have made estimates.

Mr. OVERMAN. And Mr. Lasker says that if the navy yards were called upon for estimates delay would ensue.

Mr. LODGE. I have not finished, and should like to proceed; but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator how can a navy yard make an estimate without Congress appropriating the money to enable them to do the work, which, in this instance, will take something over $8,000,000, as I understand?

Mr. LODGE. It has been done over and over again. If the Senator understood about navy yards, he would realize that such work has been carried on repeatedly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am asking the Senator for information—

Mr. LODGE. I will give the Senator the information in a moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. How can the navy yards do the repairing and reconditioning work without an appropriation by Congress?

Mr. LODGE. In this instance no appropriation whatever will be required, for the money can be utilized which the Shipping Board have received from the sale of ships.

I did not mean to go into the question of bids. I was going to say that those interested at the Charlestown Navy Yard do not expect to get the work unless they can show that they can complete it at a lower cost. It has been done again and again. I have here a list of ships which have been built by navy yards under their estimates. I cite the case of the Bridge, which was a United States ship, although not a warship. In 1914 the navy yard submitted an estimate and did the work on that vessel for $37,842 less than their estimate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I asked the question of the Senator because I can not understand why the Secretary of the Navy himself, Mr. Denby, has written a letter—

Mr. LODGE. I am familiar with his letter; it has been read here a number of times, and I have read it, of course, myself.

Mr. OVERMAN. Although the Senator has read it, I wanted to call his attention—

Mr. LODGE. I have had my attention called to it over and over again.

Mr. OVERMAN. All Senators have not heard it, perhaps. I wish to understand about it. The Secretary says the navy yards can not do the work, and, if they can not do it, what is the use of providing that they shall do it?

Mr. LODGE. It can be done by the navy yards, notwithstanding what the Secretary of the Navy may say.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Secretary of the Navy seems to have a contrary view.

Mr. LODGE. I know it can be done, because it has been done. The reason for the action of the Shipping Board, I am afraid, is that when they allowed the navy yard to bid a year ago the bid of the navy yard was $8,938,000 for reconditioning the Leviathan against the lowest outside bid of $10,740,000. The trouble is not that the navy yard will estimate too high, but that it will estimate too low.

That is the trouble. That is the trouble all of the time; and let me say to the Senate that when they destroy all the navy yard forces and plants in this country the United States will be at the mercy of contractors. We have been all through that on the armor-plate question. The navy yards and the Government plants have been worth to this Government all that they have ever cost by keeping down the bids of contractors.

I am under no delusion about Government work. I have been connected with our naval bills here for 30 years. If I may be pardoned a personal word, my father was a China merchant. He built and owned clipper ships for his trade as a merchant with China. The earliest memories I have are of going to the shipyards and seeing those ships—the famous American clipper ships, the finest merchant ships under sail that the world ever saw, the finest and the fastest, built on our Atlantic coast, necessarily largely in New England, where we had the wood and the harbors.

Mr. FERNALD. In Maine, largely.

Mr. LODGE. I do not pretend to know or be an expert about naval matters, but I knew enough about wooden ships as a boy to know very well, when they proposed to build wooden ships for the use of the Government in the war out of green timber, that within a comparatively short time those ships would be water-logged, owing to the green timber, and would begin very soon to rot; and Mr. Lasker was very lucky when he sold those boats, which cost millions, for $2,700 apiece. I knew enough to know that. I have been studying the question for a great many years.

Mr. Lasker is a very rich man and a very successful man, and no doubt knows an immense deal about many things, but he has been there only about six months; and when he thinks that it is no matter what becomes of the unemployed men in New York and Brooklyn and Philadelphia and elsewhere he has still something to learn. He does not even know the value of the navy yards to the United States.

Do you suppose for one moment that if we destroyed our navy yards, took all the work from them, and broke up their organizations, we could get low bids from contractors? It is a very easy thing for the ship contractors to combine. There are not many of them who build ships, and that has been the service of the navy yard. Apart from the personal feeling which I naturally have, the reason why I press this matter is because we are going to have a Navy under the treaty—a reduced Navy, but I hope a good Navy, an efficient one as far as it goes. We shall have to keep some navy yards, and I do not want to see this country put at the mercy of the contractors. If anybody thinks that is economy, he errs. That is not the road to economy.

You can build cheaper in the Government yards to-day, owing to the fact that the plant is there, costing the Government every hour, and the Government has to maintain it and keep it up. It has to have its marines; it has to have its inspectors; and they can build cheaper for that reason, if for no other. Moreover, their wages have been brought down, as I have said, 25 per cent in the last few months; and all I have asked is that they should have an opportunity to bid for the work, to make an estimate. If public opinion and the judgment of the President do not justify their having it, if their estimate is not low enough to show that it would be an advantage to the Government to accept it, if it is not an economical saving to the American people, I do not want them to have it; but I do not think it is fair to say to the people in the navy yards, this great body of skilled mechanics, "You shall not even have an opportunity. We are going to give it to a private contractor somewhere." Give them at least a chance.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I will.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator will correct me if I have the wrong interpretation, but, as I understand the amendment, it practically places with the President the authority finally to award the contract, rather than with the Shipping Board, and it can be awarded either to private interests or to a navy yard. Is that the practical effect of the amendment?

Mr. LODGE. Unless the President shall direct otherwise, it gives him the power to allow the yard to estimate, and then it is for him to decide whether they shall have the work or not.

Mr. EDGE. Under the present law have not the Shipping Board the same power to award it either to private interests or to navy yards, if they so elect?

Mr. LODGE. The present board has no power to do anything in the navy yards.

Mr. EDGE. Have they not the power to award a contract for reconditioning to a navy yard, if it meets with their approval, under the present law?

Mr. LODGE. While I have seen interpretations to the effect that they have that power, I do not think under the present law the navy yards have the absolute right to bid.

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, if the Senator will permit me, they made a bid, as the Senator stated, about a year ago, on the Leviathan.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; they were asked for estimates. During the war Secretary Daniels took estimates all the time.

Mr. SWANSON. But, I say, no law has been repealed that authorized the bid which the Senator stated was given about a year ago.

Mr. LODGE. I doubt very much if there is a law authorizing it now, or if there ever was; but there is no doubt in my mind that the head of the Navy Department has the right to do it.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, following my question, in order that I may understand the matter clearly, under the House bill now under consideration, however, even if the Shipping Board did previously have power to award the contract to a navy yard, that power would be denied them. Is not that correct?

Mr. LODGE. They would be compelled to take a bid from every navy yard in the country if they could get it.

Mr. EDGE. Under the House bill that we are now considering?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; under the provision that it is proposed to strike out. It is very drastic, as I said when I began—too drastic, too inelastic—and there is no limit of price. If they broke a davit, they would have to go to a navy yard and get an estimate on it. It is absurd, of course.

Mr. EDGE. But in effect, then, we are practically delegating to the President the power that they would have. Is not that correct?

Mr. LODGE. The amendment I have offered delegates to the President a power which the Navy Department has not hesitated to exercise in the past, although I think it is doubtful whether it had strict authority.

Mr. EDGE. And the Shipping Board?

Mr. LODGE. No; not the Shipping Board.

Mr. EDGE. I do not understand it, then.

Mr. LODGE. The Shipping Board has taken charge of almost all the affairs of the universe, but, thank God, it has had nothing to do with the Navy of the United States.

Mr. EDGE. Then, if the Shipping Board under existing law have the power—I have asked the question, and there seems to be some doubt about it—to award a contract for reconditioning a Shipping Board vessel—

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly they have.

Mr. EDGE. Under the Senator's proposed amendment, if adopted, that power will be removed, and the President will be the final arbiter. Is that correct?

Mr. LODGE. If the President is satisfied that it is for the public interest to have an estimate from the nearest available navy yard, and if he thinks that it is to the advantage of the Government to adopt that naval estimate and send the Leviathan to the only dock that will take her—perhaps the dock in Boston—he can do it.

Mr. EDGE. And he also can send her to a private yard if he so elects. Is that correct?

Mr. LODGE. He can. The private yard is not going to be injured.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the proposition advanced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. We have a number of great navy yards in this country. Until 8 or 10 years ago they were used primarily for the repair of naval vessels, but during the past 10 years they have been used also to construct naval vessels. These navy yards have built up great organizations, and from my observation I am quite sure that if properly managed they could repair Shipping Board vessels or any other vessels in competition with the private yards. I hope, therefore, that the Senator's amendment will prevail.

Mr. President, there is one other thought that I have in my mind concerning this whole subject, and I am glad the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], is present, because I want him to understand the situation that prevails in the navy yards of the country.

During the past two or three years—in fact, since the war closed—we have permitted a great many of our battleships and other naval craft to run down. The last Congress, as the result of a determination to cut down the amount of money allotted for the Navy, failed to appropriate sufficient money to keep the going ships of the Navy in proper repair. I know that in the navy yard at New York we have enough work to keep the present force there employed, despite the stopping of the building of two battleships which were under construction and which will be scrapped; we have enough work there to keep the present force employed in repairing the ships that are lying at the docks in that yard, the ships we are going to keep; but we lack sufficient money to repair those vessels. In making the appropriations for the Navy at this session of Congress we ought seriously to take into consideration the matter of providing enough money to keep up to the very highest state of efficiency the ships that we are not going to destroy. Some of our battleships will be done away with, many in the course of construction will not be appropriated for, but we ought to appropriate enough money to keep the ships that we are going to maintain in the very best state of efficiency, so that, if called upon, they will be really useful. We have to-day in our Navy a number of ships that are not really fit to go to sea and be effective and that condition should not continue.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have heard with a great deal of pleasure the splendid speech made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], and I fully concur with him as to the general proposition. The only thing he and I differ about is the special application of the amendment to this proposition at this time. I am satisfied that the Government navy yards ought to be and will be utilized. I am willing to vote for an amendment to the law that will enable them to make bids in competition.

When this matter was pending before the Shipping Board and before the Navy Department I interested myself very actively to have the Norfolk Navy Yard permitted to make estimates for the repair of the Leviathan. I did that in spite of the fact that at that time there was a private shipyard in my State which was one of the bidders. I urged that both the navy yards should be permitted to bid. Neither the Navy Department nor the Shipping Board thought it wise to do that, although I persisted and insisted that they be given that opportunity, as well as Boston and Brooklyn. They said they would award the contract to the lowest bidder. Advertisements were sent out, and I think there were three bidders, possibly two north and one south. After those bids were made the lowest bidder was found to be at Newport News, which bid a great deal less than any other bidder in the country. I do not know to what extent the Senator from Massachusetts interested himself in the matter at that time to have the navy yard at Boston have the privilege of bidding.

The Senator from Massachusetts has said the reason this matter is brought up, especially at this time, is on account of the repairs of the Leviathan. I submit to the Senate, would it be an act of fairness and justice to adopt such a provision when the Government had advertised and three concerns had bid and one concern had gone to an expense of $35,000 to make the estimates? Such a bid can not be made without great expense, and when a concern making the bid had kept its organization together expecting to have this work, as the contract was to be signed on the 15th of February, when the bid practically had been accepted, and they were simply preparing the terms of the contract, is it just for this to be brought up now and to interrupt it and have this work given to Boston? Is that just? Is it fair? Is it the great national spirit which animates America? Is that the broad spirit which should animate both sides of this Chamber? There was no complaint, no demand that Government navy yards should be permitted to bid until the lowest bid had been made by a concern located at Newport News.

If this is not made to apply to the Leviathan, if that is excluded, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts; but it is an act of injustice, it is not right, it is not proper, when the Government had asked bids for the repair of this ship, to refit it, and three firms bid, and one bid was practically accepted, to come in at this time and set that aside.

This is to be left to the President, and that makes it less objectionable than the amendment offered yesterday. I do not believe the President of the United States, when his constituted subordinates, his appointees, had advertised, and people had gone to the extent, at his invitation, of making bids to refit the ship, would set the bid aside.

There is another objection to this amendment as offered. It says "the nearest shipyard." Nearest to what? Nearest to politics? Nearest to where this political power is, or nearest the ship?

Mr. LODGE. The nearest available shipyard.

Mr. SWANSON. The opportunity ought to be given to every shipyard on the Atlantic or Pacific coast, wherever the ship is. Why should Boston alone be permitted to bid?

Mr. LODGE. Because it has the only dock that will hold the ship.

Mr. SWANSON. The Norfolk yard can repair the ship.

Mr. LODGE. They have not their 1,300-foot dock finished. The Senator knows that.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand; but so far as this ship is concerned it can be repaired at Norfolk as well as anywhere else. Why not amend it to say so as to provide that any ship shall be repaired in any yard on the coast where the ship may be?

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, then his objection would be that it would take too long to see what the different firms would do.

Mr. SWANSON. I have not gotten to that phase of it yet.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is doing what is perfectly natural and right. Of course, we know the bid is not complete, but the lowest bidder on the limited bid is Mr. Ferguson, of the Newport News yard.

Mr. SWANSON. That is right; but I tried to get permission, when he was making his bid, for the Norfolk Navy Yard to come in and make estimates. I made the request of the Shipping Board and of the Navy Department, and asked them to let the Norfolk yard have that privilege. After they refused to do it, after they wasted three or four months, and it was awarded to a southern shipyard, then this fight commenced. If it had been awarded to a private shipyard in Massachusetts or some other place, I doubt whether this fight would have been made.

Mr. LODGE. We have one of the largest private shipyards in the country, but they have not a dock which will take that ship.

Mr. SWANSON. They did not bid on it.

Mr. LODGE. They do not bid; and you have not a dock that will take it.

Mr. SWANSON. What I object to is delay, no activity, nothing done until after a yard goes to all the expense of getting up its estimates, goes to the extent of keeping people in its office getting up its bid, and then breaking faith with them and giving this to Boston. I am frank and candid in stating that I do not think it is right. I do not think it is the proper kind of spirit to have in this matter.

In addition this should be amended so as to take care of yards in the future. When the time comes I will ask the Senator to unite with me, if he will, to give these navy yards the privilege of doing this work. I think they ought to be utilized, but I do not think we should adopt this simply to make it apply to one contract which has been practically awarded to the lowest bidder.

Mr. LODGE. It has not been awarded yet.

Mr. SWANSON. It has been practically awarded.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Lasker may have promised; he may have practically awarded it, but he has not yet awarded it.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the suggestion was made to delay awaiting this action. They went to an expense of $35,000 to make these estimates; the Government had invited them, and it was known when they were opened that they were the lowest bidder, and they had said they would award it to the lowest bidder. The only delay was to have the contract written. The contract was being written and revised to carry out the bid, and pending the signing of it this interruption comes. If the Senator will leave out the Leviathan and not apply it to that ship, I am for a stronger amendment even than this.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I will not leave it out. I want to begin now. This is a ship which will cost at least $10,000,000 to restore before they get through, and I would like at least to have it appear what it can be done for and have some bid besides Mr. Ferguson's.

Mr. SWANSON. Did the Senator go up to the Shipping Board and the Navy Department while this thing was pending and try to get them to let that navy yard bid?

Mr. LODGE. I went to the Navy Department.

Mr. SWANSON. I went repeatedly to both and urged them to give the privilege of bidding to the Norfolk Navy Yard and to other navy yards, but after they had refused, in good faith, I thought the Government ought to be fair in its dealing with people; that it ought to be a model in that respect. It seems to me it is bad faith, and it is not right, as soon as this is awarded to a southern shipyard to try to change the law.

Mr. LODGE. I think we can leave the question of honest dealing with the President of the United States, as this amendment does, in preference to the Shipping Board.

Mr. SWANSON. I am willing to leave it to the President, unless this is considered a suggestion of what the law-making power wants done. When this thing is put through, they will say, "Mr. President, this was passed because it was the impression of Congress that this ought to be awarded to the Boston yard, where the fight was." I say that is all this has been done for, and I do not believe, if this were done, the President could afford to violate an offer made at his invitation.

Mr. LODGE. That is Mr. Lasker's theory.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I call attention to the hearings before the committee, at page 37, where Mr. Powell, one of the vice presidents, said:

The company that is the low bidder on this job I happen to know spent $35,000 making their estimates to find how much to bid on that job. They have reduced the elements of uncertainty to the very smallest amount and for whatever it is they are taking it, they will be glad to take it in order to get the job.

Then Mr. Lasker, on page 38, said, in answer to a question by Senator OVERMAN:

How do you know what it is going to cost, or do you know?
Mr. LASKER. Yes, sir; we do. The contract will be given February 15.
Senator OVERMAN. To the lowest bidder?
Mr. LASKER. To the lowest bidder; and it will cost, all told, $8,200,000. In addition to the hidden things which you can reduce to the minimum with the private bidder, the Navy does not guarantee and can not guarantee that their whole general estimate may not be wrong. They can give you no guaranty.

That is from the hearing on this particular matter. If the contract is to be let on February 15, I do not know that we need to bother very much about what goes into this bill, because very likely it can not be approved by that time.

I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President, in regard to this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.
Mr. FLETCHER. The offer of the Senator from Massachusetts now is in the form of a substitute, as I understood him to say, but the question seems to arise in this manner. The Senate committee has reported an amendment to the bill, to wit, that lines 20 to 25 on page 30, and lines 1 to 6 on page 31, be stricken from the bill. That is the committee amendment, and it seems to me the question comes first on whether the Senate will agree to that amendment. If the Senate does not agree to that amendment, then it would be in order for the Senator from Massachusetts to amend that provision in the bill, I presume, by the proposal he has made. But the first question is whether the Senate will agree to the committee amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The committee amendment is a motion to strike out and, of course, a motion to strike out and insert takes precedence.

Mr. FLETCHER. The committee proposes an amendment to strike out certain language.

Mr. LODGE. I am aware of that. Does the Senator hold that that prevents perfecting the clause, or offering a substitute? Does the Senator hold that we can not amend it because the committee has reported in favor of striking it out?

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me the question would be, first, whether the Senate will agree to the committee amendment or not.

Mr. LODGE. Then it is not open to amendment. Where a motion is made to strike out, you have a right to perfect the clause proposed to be stricken out. I am doing that now.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is the Senator's proposal?

Mr. LODGE. To substitute the amendment drafted by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. FLETCHER. For the committee amendment?

Mr. LODGE. For the House language.

Mr. FLETCHER. I leave it to the Chair whether that is proper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] moved to insert, in lieu of the language which is proposed to be stricken out by the committee amendment, the language of his amendment. After that has been done, then the question will be on agreeing to the committee amendment, and I assume the Senator from Massachusetts will then argue that the committee amendment should not be agreed to, but should be rejected, and leave his language intact.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the history of this amendment is this: It was not reported by any committee of the House of Representatives. The evidence shows it was offered by a gentleman from Massachusetts for the purpose of having the Leviathan repaired at the Boston Navy Yard.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, that was the purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was the purpose, and I suppose that is the purpose of the Senator from Massachusetts in moving to strike out the Senate amendment this morning.

Mr. LODGE. I made no motion to strike out. The motion of the committee was to strike out the language, and I moved to perfect the text.

Mr. OVERMAN. When the committee of the Senate heard the evidence, they struck it out. When it came to the Senate, the Senator from Massachusetts moved to disagree to the committee amendment, but the next day, when he found a fight was to be made against his motion, he came in with a substitute, and when he found that substitute was to be fought, he came with a substitute which was proposed and was to be offered by the Senator from Washington, which he accepts, and he offers it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was tied hand and foot during the closing days of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament; I could not be here, and during that time, without one word to me, or one moment to be heard before the committee, which I should have welcomed, this decision was taken.

I find no fault with it. The committee wanted to get the bill through. The chairman of the committee, to whom I explained the matter, has been most considerate, as he always is, and I think I am warranted in saying that he has no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WARREN. That is true.
Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that, but I feel some responsibility for striking out this amendment in the committee. I moved to strike it out, and every member of the committee was in favor of it, because it was an attempt upon the part of these gentlemen to require the repair of this ship in the city of Boston or at the Boston Navy Yard, and upon the evidence before the committee of Mr. Lasker, chairman of the Shipping Board, who is denounced here by the Senator from Massachusetts, and on the evidence of the Secretary of the Navy, who said it was impractical to submit a bid for this work, we struck it out. I admit that the Senator from Massachusetts, as he said this morning, knows more than the Secretary of the Navy. We had evidence before us, and we acted upon the evidence, and I want to read what Mr. Lasker, who is an official of the United States and who represents the President, said.

Ought we to take his evidence or take the evidence of the Senator from Massachusetts or some mayor from the city of Boston or some other one interested? Let us take what the Government officers say, the Secretary of the Navy himself, and let us take the evidence of Mr. Lasker. If Mr. Lasker is a bad man, nevertheless he represents the Government and we should not tie his hands; we do not want him put in a position for the public to say he is an inefficient officer. If he is not the man for the place, he should be removed. Let us see what he said:

Mr. LASKER. If the Congress should pass that provision, I would say that there is no living man who could follow that mandate of Congress.

That is what he is talking about.

If there was a fine attached to it, every human being would have to quit the Shipping Board. Congress has ordered—or the House of Representatives has ordered—in that clause a practical impossibility. This whole thing came about through the desire of a certain navy yard—to get the reconditioning of the Leviathan. Long before this is law the Leviathan will be given to the lowest bidder, as we have to give it, because we can not spend a huge sum just to give it to one locality—Boston.

The Secretary of the Navy wrote a letter explaining why such a thing as this was impractical, and if I may read to you what he said, I think it will throw considerable light on this.

That letter was read to the committee. The Secretary of the Navy and all the navy yards had a right to bid on this thing. Why did they not bid? The Senator from Massachusetts wants them to bid now. Why did they not bid before? Private ship yards were allowed to bid and did bid, but the navy ship yards did not bid, and why? It was because the Secretary of the Navy wrote that it was impractical and impossible, and he could not do it. Yet the Senator from Massachusetts wants to adopt an amendment here wiping out these low bids, where private bidders have spent some $35,000 in order to make the bids, where the amounts of the bids are known, and he wants to require them now to put the matter in the hands of the President and to burden the President with this matter. If that were done, politics would get into it and influence would be used. Instead of permitting the Shipping Board to let the contract to the lowest bidder, it is desired to enact a law here to tie the hands of the Shipping Board, as Mr. Lasker has said.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Was there any evidence tending to show that the bid which has been accepted was too high?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. KING. Or was unjust or unfair?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. KING. Does the evidence show that it was a reasonable bid?

Mr. OVERMAN. It has not been accepted, but the amount of it is known, and, of course, I suppose by exerting certain influence they can get the navy yard to bid lower after they know the amount of the bid submitted by the private yards. This bid is much lower than the estimated cost, the amount it was believed by the Shipping Board it would cost.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the Government under any obligation to accept the bid regardless of any legislation here?

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. NORRIS. It can reject all bids if it sees fit?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Government is under no more obligation to accept the bid or any bid than the Senator would be if he asked for bids for the building of a house.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Government, as I understand it, is really morally bound and has morally accepted the bid. Counsel has been directed to meet with counsel of the Shipping Board to prepare the contract. It is expected that the contract will be signed on the 15th. I understand, and it was generally understood, that the contractor kept his men and organization together for some time after the bids were submitted. It was generally understood they were simply waiting for the contract to be signed, and for counsel on both sides to prepare the contract for signature, and notice was given to wait until it was actually done, as I understand the situation.

Mr. NORRIS. Still the Government is under no obligation to accept any of the bids, and I do not suppose it would advertise for bids under any other consideration than that it reserves the right to reject any and all bids. It certainly would have the right, it seems to me, without being placed under any legal or moral liability, to reject them all for whatever reason might appear to the Government to be sufficient.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Lasker further said:

All I know is that the Shipping Board is always criticized for being inefficient.

We hear the Senator from Massachusetts criticizing the board this morning. It may be so. If Mr. Lasker is inefficient, he ought to be turned out of office.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon; he is misquoting me. I did not say he was inefficient.

Mr. OVERMAN. I inferred that from what the Senator said.

Mr. LODGE. Not at all. I said he was a very able man, a very rich man, and had had no experience with ships until six months ago, and therefore I ventured to make the suggestion.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. Lasker continued:

Everybody considers it as inefficient—

That is what everybody has said—

It has neither business standing nor official standing. If Congress puts this proviso in, it is just adding something more to increase the claimed inefficiency—to make it by law more inefficient than it could be inefficient actually.

What was the committee to do in the face of all this testimony? The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], chairman of the Committee on Commerce, was present. The motion to strike it out was unanimously carried. The Senator from Massachusetts now comes on the floor of the Senate and moves that we recede from or not agree with the committee action. He says it is too drastic. I am glad he admits that.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator say I pressed for the House language? Never!

Mr. OVERMAN. I said the Senator moved that we disagree with the Senate committee amendment proposing to strike out the language in the House text, which would have the effect to restore the House text.

Mr. LODGE. I did not so move.

Mr. OVERMAN. I so understood it. If the Senator says he did not, I apologize.

Mr. LODGE. I said I should move to disagree.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator said that he had to leave at 1 o'clock, and would move to disagree to the Senate committee amendment, and the next morning he came in with a substitute. He was not satisfied with the substitute when he found there was to be a fight made on it, and so he comes in now ready to accept a substitute prepared by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], which leaves the matter in the hands of the President. If the Senator from Washington, chairman of the Committee on Commerce, is satisfied, I do not know that I ought to make any objection to it, except to say that the President ought not to have this burden put upon him. It ought to be left to the Shipping Board, especially when the Secretary of the Navy, who is the head of the great Navy Department, says he can not make the estimates through the navy yards as is proposed.

How is the Secretary of the Navy going to make estimates unless he is satisfied that Congress will appropriate the $8,000,000 necessary to enable them to do the work? Congress will have to make an appropriation to enable them to do the work. Mr. Lasker can not pay out any money for the work until it is delivered, so Congress in the next naval appropriation bill will have to make provision for eight or ten million dollars to enable them to make the repairs, when we already have private shipyards estimating what it will cost and proposing to do the work for a certain sum which they say is quite low and on which they say they will lose some $200,000. The reason why they made the low bid is because it is their desire to keep their force and organization together. A laborer is a laborer wherever he may be. A laborer in a Government navy yard is a laborer, and a laborer in a private shipyard is a laborer just as much as a laborer in a Government navy yard.

It was stated on the floor by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that the way the situation now stands the Leviathan is costing the Government approximately $700,000 a year. What are we going to do? Are we going to let the navy yards bid on this work? How long will it take them to bid on it? The Shipping Board say that they want the Leviathan in shape by spring, because they have already engaged passengers for it, and they will make thousands and perhaps millions of dollars on the operation of the Leviathan through passenger and freight service. Do we want to delay the matter?

As Mr. Lasker said, we ought to do something to make him more efficient, but it seems to be the desire to tie his hands. The Senate can do that if it wants to. I am not in favor of tying his hands. I am not in favor of the Government spending $700,000 a year for the care of the Leviathan when we can have the ship repaired and let it go on its way carrying passengers and earning money. How long will the navy yard take to estimate what they will do the work for? There is a book of a thousand pages which they will have to have their engineers go over, and it will take them probably two or three months. That means $50,000 gone for the first month, $50,000 gone for the second month, and probably $50,000 gone for the third month, and we are getting nowhere.

Do we want this ship reconditioned? Do we want it on the sea? The sooner we do it the better. Now that we have this private shipyard bid for the work, and a low bid, too, and as long as we can have the work done at once, I say let us do it in that way instead of adopting this amendment and having a navy yard undertake to recondition the vessel with probably very great delay and great loss involved.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, Senators are getting excited and nervous over this proposition. I am sorry to see it. People are prejudiced often when they do not know it. Most of us are liable to be biased, unconsciously often, and I have no doubt that these great statesmen here who are expounding this question are unconsciously influenced somewhat in the positions which they assume by the fact that they have navy yards in their States.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no navy yard in my State.

Mr. NORRIS. I said these great statesmen. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERMAN. Ah, the Senator does not consider me in that class.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Edge in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. With pleasure.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator will admit, though I lay no claim to being a great statesman, that at the very outset I confessed the charge that I do represent a State where a navy yard exists, and I have great sympathy for the men there employed.

Mr. NORRIS. The other statesman, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], also admitted that he had a navy yard in his State and a private yard as well.

I find no fault with Senators if they are influenced either consciously or unconsciously, but in submitting my testimony that may conflict with theirs it is proper for me as a witness to show that I have no such bias or prejudice. We have no navy yard in my State although we do have some of the best locations in the world. Locations for dry docks, and so forth, could be supplied there cheaper than anywhere on the Atlantic or Pacific coasts or even the Gulf of Mexico. It might be difficult to get the ships to them, but there would be no danger of airplanes or bombs from the enemy. It would be too far inland. When a ship was once constructed or reconditioned there it would be safe; it would not be where it could be torn to pieces either by an enemy or by the waves and tossing of the sea.

Mr. President, I feel, therefore, that those of us who do not have navy yards in our States are better qualified on this question than those who do. To my mind it is a greater question than whether we shall help Boston or whether we shall help Norfolk, much as we love both of them. It is a question, in the first place, of economy in the repair of these ships. In the next place—a very important consideration, I think—it is a question that we should maintain our navy yards to the extent that they can be maintained by giving them all to do that we can of Government work.

I have advocated for a great many years that the Government of the United States ought to build its own vessels. I have advocated for a great many years, and often on the floor of the Senate when I was not supported by any of the Senators who had navy yards in their States, that the Government of the United States ought to do its own work, ought to make its own guns, ought to build its own ships of war, and ought to do everything that is necessary to be done in the maintaining of its Navy. In Government yards it ought to manufacture its guns and its ammunition. In other words, it would, in the first place, I think, give us the material cheaper than we would get it where a profit was made by private parties. In the next place, it would take profit out of war. When we take the profit out of war and take away from war the probability of a profit of money or territory, we have done a great deal toward perpetual and permanent peace. At the same time, as long as it is necessary under world conditions to maintain a Navy, we will have to maintain navy yards. We have the machinery, we have the overhead expense, outside of the one item of labor, that we must keep up anyway, and we must keep in good condition. Why not, then, do Government work in Government yards by Government officials and at Government expense? If I had my way about the Leviathan, and had the power to do it, I would not ask for bids from anybody, but I would send the Leviathan to the Government navy yard which is best equipped to take care of the work and let that yard repair the Leviathan, whatever the expense might be.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Nebraska think that the experience recently revealed by an item which we all saw in the newspapers relative to the city of Chicago with respect to that municipality applies in principle to the Government doing its work and is duplicated in the experience of the Government? The Senator will recall that it cost the city of Chicago $5,480 to repair for one year two Ford cars which were worth about $800, and that ratio was maintained with respect to all other similar work; so the city authorities of Chicago finally concluded that they must abolish the shops and leave to private garages the repair of their vehicles.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I believe, if the Senator will pardon me a moment further, that there is very much in what the Senator has said; yet I doubt not that whatever the Government touches in the way of building ships or erecting buildings or anything else it mars, and that the expenses are infinitely greater than if the work were done by private individuals or private corporations.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah may pick out an illustration here and there which will demonstrate just what he has stated, but if I were going to take the time to debate the fundamental proposition—which I am not—as to the Government doing its work or private parties doing it, I could select just as many illustrations showing the reverse of what the Senator has stated to be true. When the Government carries on a business, if some crooks represent the Government we shall have much crooked work; there is no doubt about that. The same is true also of private parties. There is nothing which brings the blush of shame to the cheek of an American citizen to a greater extent than the history of the construction in America of railroads, which are privately owned. There are very few of the railroads, if their history were disclosed to the public, as to which there would not be found all kinds of corruption, all manner of inefficiency. Almost every Senator on a moment's notice can think of dozens of great railroad systems of the country which at one time or another during their history have been guilty of just that kind of corruption. I put in the Record not very long ago a reprint of a public document which showed how private parties—some of whom are now connected with the great private shipbuilding yards which are building ships and making armor plate for the Government of the United States—had passed off on the Government worthless armor plate, which was full of holes and hollows, and which was of such a character that it might have meant the difference between victory and defeat of our Navy upon the high seas. We do not have that to contend with if we construct our ships in Government navy yards.

It is true the Government pays the bill, and sometimes pays more than it otherwise would, but in the end that would not be so. If we had had no navy yards or if we had none now, or if we shall pass a law which will prohibit the Government authorities from having any of the Government ships repaired in Government navy yards, but that all such work shall be done by private parties—if we shall do that and practically wipe the Government navy yards from the face of the earth, we shall find the price of such repairs will go beyond the blue sky line.

Mr. President, we must not forget that the navy yards, with their expensive machinery, which the taxpayers have had to pay for, must be maintained, and that when we have some work to do there is where it should be done. I am glad that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LONGE], and apparently all the other Senators on this side of the Chamber, following him, have finally come to the position that some few of us had previously occupied, that it is worth something as to some governmental industries to put the Government of the United States itself, to some extent, into business.

That is what we are for now. We are going to have the Government do this work; we want the Government instead of private parties to do it. I presume we shall follow along and take the next step which is logical; we shall next have Government ownership of railroads; we shall get the Government into other things as to which there ought to be a Government monopoly.

Mr. KING. Including mining and manufacturing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the Senator from Nebraska in favor of that?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I am for Government ownership of railroads. This is but the first step. If we have the Government repair and build the ships, we shall, perhaps, get the Government into the railroad business, find out how well it works, and how much we may thereby save to the people.

Mr. President, the Navy is going to be cut down, thanks to the work of the great Conference on the Limitation of Armament, which has just adjourned. The men in the navy yards realize that. Many of them, in consequence, will have to lose their jobs. The Government can not build ships merely in order to give men work; that would not be economical and the men themselves do not expect it to be done; but for a great many years, perhaps forever, we shall maintain some repair shops on the part of the Government; we shall maintain many of these yards. I have not as yet seen a disposition to do away with any of them. It costs thousands of dollars every day merely to keep them going. Now, when we have some work to do for the Government, why not utilize them, and, to the extent that we can, keep men employed in those navy yards working on our own ships?

I do not like the substitute the Senator from Massachusetts has offered. It seems to me if we had taken the House provision in the bill and put a limitation into it as to the amount, excluding small amounts, that we would have a provision which would conform to our ideas. I am not in favor of providing that the nearest navy yard shall be the only one that shall bid. Let them all bid, if they want to do so; let them all submit estimates, if they desire; although the proper way would be, it seems to me, to give to some authority, the President, the Secretary of the Navy, or the Shipping Board, whoever it is who has charge of the matter, the right to send any ship to be repaired to any yard they might wish, to any one of the Government establishments they might see fit. If it happened to be that the Boston Navy Yard were engaged in some other work, or for some other reason it might not be economical to have the repairs done there, let it be sent to the Norfolk Navy Yard. If that be not a good place, if there be some reason why the work should not be done there, let it be done at the New York Navy Yard. Some person in charge will always know which is the best place at which to have the work done, where it may be most economically performed, and which is the best-equipped place to do the work, and that would be the place where it ought to go.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what his view with respect to this feature of the matter is? One of the important elements in figuring upon a contract such as the one before us relates, first, to the capital invested, which would mean the shipyard, the machinery, all the mechanical devices, appliances, and so forth; secondly, the overhead; and, thirdly, the depreciation in machinery, the deterioration of the property. Coming to a governmental yard, we find all of these elements to be considered. Then, there is another, for, as I understand, the employees are under the civil service; they enjoy the benefits of retirement, pensions, and so forth, which have to be paid by the taxpayers of the country. In submitting a bid by a navy yard those factors, one would think, ought to be taken into account, because the private yard has to take into account in submitting a bid the capital invested, overhead, and all of those elements which relate to privately conducted business. Manifestly, if a Government yard may bid for this work, and it does not have to take into account these obvious factors, which can not be gotten away from, it will have such a superior advantage that perhaps no private person could compete with the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator I think that it would have an advantage. I merely suggest what ought to be taken into consideration. I do not set myself up as an expert. For instance, I would not say offhand that they ought to take into consideration overhead, except the immediate overhead expense that applies to the particular repair work upon which the bid is submitted. They ought not to take into consideration the deterioration, which is going to take place in any event, whether they do the work or not. In other words, if they are going to submit a bid, they ought to consider only those things the expense of which would be increased by the particular work for which they are bidding.

Mr. KING. I venture to suggest to the Senator, with his permission, in view of the fact that we have such a large number of navy yards, many of which ought to have been abandoned long ago, and certainly many of which ought to be abandoned now, if we are to keep all of these yards going by having private work done in them, I think it is manifest that we are going to drive all the private shipbuilding concerns out of business, because the navy yards of the United States can practically construct not only the war craft but they can construct and repair a very large portion of the merchant ships that would be built in the United States. If that be done, if we are to project the Government into private business, if we are to keep these yards in esse for the purpose of doing private business, then we can not hope for any private capital to engage in similar work, because, with the Government behind the multitude of Government yards, with all of the advantages that flow from the plan suggested by the Senator, such as the capital not being considered and other factors which may be involved, private yards will not be able to compete.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina to allow me first to answer the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and then I will yield to him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not trying to do some of the things which the Senator from Utah has enumerated; I am not trying to drive anybody out of business; I am not in favor of maintaining all the navy yards of the United States for the purpose of doing private repair and other work. I have not advocated anything of that kind, and I do not now advocate anything of that kind. I have no doubt that we have some navy yards which we could very well scrap, and which we ought to scrap; I have one in mind about which I know something; but I am not an expert on that question. Perhaps there may be a number of others that ought to be scrapped, and when the time comes to scrap them we ought to scrap them, just as the recent international conference has scrapped battleships; but so long as we shall maintain—and I presume that there will be some yards which we will maintain continually—so long as we have to retain those which we feel it is necessary to retain, we ought to keep them equipped so that in case of emergency they could be put to immediate use by the Government. Therefore, in order to keep them in that condition, we ought, it seems to me, to do Government work in our navy yards. Now I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply wish some information. I understood the Senator from Utah to make the point that the navy yards might monopolize not only all the Government work but all of the private shipbuilding of the country. I do not understand that there is any authority—and I wish to ask the Senator about that—for a Government-owned yard to contract for the construction of private vessels.

Mr. NORRIS. Not that I know of. I do not know of any such authority.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not suppose there was. I had supposed that under the law that part of the business now was left entirely to private shipyards. If I am mistaken about that, I should like to know it, because I think that has considerable bearing on the question we are discussing.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. What I intended to say was that if we maintain all of these navy yards, and put them to the use contemplated and projected by a large number of individuals, it is clear to me that we are going to affect materially the business of private yards and the construction of vessels by private yards.

The Senator probably saw in the morning paper that an effort is being made by some of the employees of the navy yard—and I am not criticizing them—to have the Government construct in those yards whatever the Government requires. For instance, if it requires brooms or requires chandeliers or requires motor vehicles, or anything that enters into the requirements of the Government, it is proposed that they be constructed, wherever possible, in these yards. That would mean in time that these yards and other governmental mechanical plants would be occupied in the construction of a multitude of things that the Government requires, coming into competition to that extent, of course, with private individuals and private plants. If the Government begins to make its motor vehicles and construct its chairs and its machinery and its desks—I saw desks mentioned—and its typewriters, and so on, the effect upon private enterprise might be very serious. I agree with the Senator that, as I understand the law now, private vessels may not be constructed in Government yards.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I think I can answer to some extent the question propounded by the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska further yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANDELL. It is my understanding, Mr. President and Senators, that the navy yards have a right to do private work, and certainly that they have a right to do work for other branches of the Government, provided always that the work of the Navy is not interfered with.

Mr. KING. I think that is right.

Mr. RANDELL. That is referred to in this letter of the Secretary of the Navy which has been mentioned a number of times. I will quote just that brief paragraph from it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean that a navy yard could contract with a private corporation to construct a ship of commerce?

Mr. RANDELL. I do. I will say that several years ago I was in the navy yard in New Orleans and I saw a great ship that had sunk in the Mississippi River and had been at the bottom of the river for a number of years. It was brought up, and, at a cost, I think, of about four or five hundred thousand dollars—several hundred thousand dollars, anyhow—it was being rebuilt in the navy yard there. There was no Government work there at that time, and I am quite sure I am right in stating that the Government navy yards have a right to contract for any kind of work, even to the construction of a ship from the very bottom up, provided there be no Government work to interfere with it; and Mr. Denby, in substance, said that in this paragraph of his letter. I read from the letter. It has been referred to a number of times here. It is on page 38 of the testimony:

Furthermore, the stipulated time for the performance of work for other departments of the Government must always be subject to the condition that urgent naval work shall take precedence, even if such precedence causes failure to perform the other Government departments' work within the time stipulated.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is for other Government departments.

Mr. RANDELL. Yes; I know. In this instance he alludes to the fact that they are doing work for other departments of the Government; but while I have not looked into it fully, I will state to the Senator from North Carolina that I am quite sure that is the rule. I know it was done in some instances in the New Orleans Navy Yard. I am convinced from my knowledge of the situation that they can take private contracts, with the consent, of course, of the Secretary of the Navy, provided their work does not interfere with needed Government work.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then the logic of that would be that when the United States shall place in private hands the vessels it now owns and go out of the shipping business altogether, and when we shall have reduced our Navy to a minimum, if we keep these Government navy yards, with no work to do for the Government, we will simply be maintaining them as competitors against private shipyards in this country?

Mr. RANDELL. It would seem to be that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the position I take on this proposition is that while the Government itself is fully equipped to do some work, and we have the work that has to be done, it is poor business to go out and get somebody else to do it. The farmer who is running a ranch and has a little forge or a tool-house, and breaks a handle to his hoe or to his axe, and is fully equipped to repair it, would be foolish if he should go 2 or 3 miles away, where there was a manufacturing establishment, and get their price on repairing his hoe or his axe or something of that kind that he was fully equipped to do.

The Government has the ships. It owns them. We have paid for them out of the Treasury of the United States. They need repairs. We have the yards with which to do it. We have all the tools. We have everything, all paid for at public expense. We have the men there ready to do the work; and now we are going to take the ships and turn them over to some private concern and let them do the work and let our own plants lie idle. It is not good business; and I am glad to see that there are Senators here who have formerly occupied other positions, who believe now that it is good business for the Government to do its own work.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Would it be treating the employees in the navy yards right to give the work to a private company where it naturally would fall within their own province?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so. I do not think it would be treating them right.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me further, I do not see any force in the argument made here an hour ago that because one of the bidders for the contract had spent $37,000 in studying the specifications and making his bid he should be awarded the contract, because at the time he undertook that examination and incurred that expense he did so knowing that his bid might be rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, of course.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. So that was a risk that he took.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course it was. Unless the Government agreed in its invitations for bids to accept the lowest bid, or something of that kind—and if it made that kind of an agreement the men who made it certainly have not good business sense—I can not myself understand why the Government is legally, morally, or in any other way bound to accept any bid that is made. It has the right to reject them all, and it passes on the reasons that are sufficient to make a rejection. If somebody has gone to some expense in making a bid, which I presume all of the bidders did, that is one of the risks of the business.

Mr. KING and Mr. WATSON of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Utah. Then I will yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. KING. Apropos of what the Senator has just stated and what the Senator from Georgia has stated, may I make a suggestion? The Senator from Georgia did not see any force in the argument made some time ago with respect to the propriety or fairness, after inviting bids and getting them and publishing them, of then having somebody else, to wit, Government yards, with those bids before them, make other bids. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that in private matters that would be very unfair. If I were to advertise for bids on a house and the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Nebraska and others were to bid upon that house, and after I had all the bids I should publish them and then go to some other person with whom I was connected and show him those bids and have him bid, it would be unfair. Now, the Government—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will pause there for just a moment. In this case, assuming now that all the elements involved are as the Senator has given them—and I think he has exaggerated them a little—they have invited bids, opened the bids, found out what was the lowest, and the Senator says now that we are under some obligation to accept the lowest bid.

Mr. KING. No; I have made no such statement.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it, however, that the Senator meant that. My theory is that when we have opened the bids and looked them over we see that we can do the work better ourselves. We therefore reject all the bids, and say that we will do this work ourselves. It is our property. We have the plant here, and we say to the bidders that their bids are not sufficiently low to induce us to leave our plants idle and discharge our men and turn this work over to them. I think that is the position we are in now.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator whether this is not the position: The Shipping Board is a private corporation in the sense that it is a corporation, of course created to carry out certain Government work.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. We have put nearly four billions of money into the shipping business. We have created two corporations—the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation—and those corporations proceed as if they were private corporations, subject, of course, to such limitations as are imposed by law. They advertise, as any corporation would advertise, for the construction of ships or for the reconditioning and repair of ships. In this instance the matter involved was the reconditioning and the repair of the Leviathan. Great publicity was given to the matter, and men and corporations were invited to bid. The Navy, it would seem from Secretary Denby's letter, if it was not invited to bid, had its attention challenged to the matter, and the Navy concluded that it would not bid, because of some inconveniences that might arise. Thereupon men of integrity, corporations of high standing, made investigations extending over a long period of time, costly investigations, and they submitted bids. Moreover, it was stated that the work must be begun quickly and completed at a certain time, because it was desired to put the ship into commission at an early date in order to get the trade of the coming year.

With all those facts before them, these corporations made those bids. There is no contention that the bids are not fair, that they are not low, that they are not just, that any advantage is taken of the Government—nothing of that character.

After the bids are in it is found that the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. has made the lowest bid, and that it is fair and reasonable, and the attorneys have been told to draw the contract. We then pass a law saying: "No; we reject that contract, and we insist, now that the bids are known and all these steps have been taken, that the matter be referred to the Navy Department in order to let some of these navy yards, with all of the advantages which they have, with the possibility of their being closed down temporarily, if not permanently, bid with all of that information before them."

I merely suggest those facts, stated by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], without drawing any conclusions or making any comment, to see if the Senator may not find in them something that may distinguish this case from some of the cases that he had in mind.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course I have not any personal knowledge as to all the things that have happened in regard to the Leviathan. Transactions may have happened between the Government and this bidding concern that I know nothing about that morally bind the Government; and if so, I do not want to relieve it from any such obligation. If I were the governmental official dealing with the matter, and found that to be true, I would accept that bid. I do not want the Government to do anything dishonorable under any circumstances, Mr. President.

My contention is that, having advertised for bids and received them openly, having found out what was the lowest, unless there is something else involved, we are under no obligation of any kind to accept any bids. We have a right to reject them all, and Congress, finding the thing in that condition, would, without any moral obliquity, pass a law which would reject them all, in my judgment. I do not see anything wrong about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator suggested a moment ago that he had objected to this substitute because it limits it to the nearest available navy yard.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Massachusetts has no objection to striking out the words "nearest," and changing the word "navy yard" to "navy yards"?

Mr. NORRIS. That would be better.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And that will meet the objection of the Senator from Virginia, I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. It will meet my objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I certainly have no objection, and on behalf of the Senator from Massachusetts I ask that this change be made in the substitute: Strike out the word "nearest" before the word "available" and change "navy yard" to "navy yards," and then in the line just below change the word "yard" to "yards," so that it will read:

Until a reasonable opportunity has been given to the available Government navy yards to estimate upon the cost of such repair or reconditioning if performed by such navy yards.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that improves it very greatly.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I do not know that I can add very much to this debate, if anything at all. The subject has been pretty fully discussed. I think however, that in the discussion many of us have overlooked some very important things which should be considered.

I ask Senators to recall the speech made yesterday afternoon by the chairman of the Commerce Committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who appealed to the Senate to consider the extreme difficulties under which the Shipping Board labors. I was very much impressed by what the Senator said. I am somewhat familiar with the legislation which led up to the formation of the Shipping Board in its present shape and with all of the legislation in connection with it.

I sympathize deeply with the very onerous and difficult duties of the Shipping Board. It has one of the most important and difficult tasks ever imposed upon American citizens, and I for one think we should hold up their hands. We should not tie their hands but should free them and hold them up.

There has been a great deal of criticism directed toward the Shipping Boards; and I use the word "Boards" advisedly, because we have had a good many of them since the original law was passed, and the present board has not been free from criticism.

Mr. President and Senators, I am one of those who do not believe in criticizing people about something which I could not do any better myself if I were in charge of it. It is my candid opinion that the present board is doing the very best it can with an extremely difficult situation, and deserves to be upheld and to be helped by every patriotic American, and not to be abused and criticized?

In the present case what do we find? This appropriation bill carries $50,000,000, not for reconditioning the Leviathan but for doing many things which it is necessary for the Shipping Board to do, and it authorizes an expenditure of $55,000,000 additional which the board expects to derive from the proceeds of sales of ships. Another $50,000,000 is provided to settle claims. These are general provisions, and reach out into many things. Why do we wish to say to the board "You must do this and you must do that" in the handling of its business? Why not treat it as we would an ordinary board of good business men if we expected results? The American people are expecting good things of this board, which is now handling a great number of assets, which have cost us over $3,000,000,000. We want it to make a success of the merchant marine of the United States. We expect it to make a success of this merchant marine; and yet in this little bill we tie its hands and say, "You can not do anything as an ordinary business man would; you can not go to the yard where you can make the best bargain—the navy yard or the private yard or one of your own yards, if you still have one—but you must go to the navy yard. You must deal with navy yards. You are a Government agency. We own you, and we command you to go to the navy yard."

That is an evidence of lack of confidence in the board. I have confidence in it. We must have confidence in it if we expect it to do what it was created for. If we expect it to be efficient we must allow it to handle this difficult business as an ordinary board of directors of a private corporation would do, and not tell it what steps it should take.

Mr. President and Senators, I for one am tired of so much Government in business. I do not wish business to be too much interfered with by Government. We can get along better if we have less direction from Washington. Our experience in Government control and Government handling of things which can better be done by private persons has not been very pleasant.

Some of our people, in considering this question, do not seem able to differentiate between the Navy and the navy yards, on one hand, and the ships of commerce and the private yards, on the other, which are expected to handle the ships of commerce. The navy yards were built originally for the use of the Navy. That is their principal purpose; that is their prime purpose, and under no circumstance can any private work be done in a navy yard for another department of the Government, or for a private person, to the detriment of the naval work. Do not let us ever forget that.

Whenever these Government navy yards undertake anything for another department or for a private person, that department or that private person has to agree that when the Navy wishes something done, the private work or the other department work must be put aside temporarily.

We have had the Leviathan lying idle for a long time, and it is costing an immense sum. The officers of the Shipping Board tell us they wish to make contracts to put this great ship into commission next spring, and it will be very detrimental to American shipping interests if they can not do so. Who can promise us, if the Boston Navy Yard undertakes the reconditioning of the Leviathan, that it can go ahead and finish the work by next spring? Many things might happen to a number of great war ships of the Navy which would have to be repaired of necessity and reconditioned of necessity in the Boston Navy Yard, and in that event, of course, the work would stop at once on the Leviathan. Everyone knows that, and from business reasons, the Shipping Board can very well ask that it be not required to take such chances as that.

But, Mr. President, the point I am trying to make is that we should leave the Shipping Board just where it stands now. It has a perfect right now to deal with the navy yard if it can make a better bargain, or to deal with the private yard if it can make a better bargain with a private yard. Why not leave it free to do as it thinks best with this very important matter?

Bear in mind, it is not only the Leviathan which we have under consideration here, but if you pass this law it will tie the hands of the Shipping Board until the law is repealed. You do not know how embarrassing it will be for the board in a great many cases.

If the Leviathan were the only thing, I for one would not be bothered at all, because I am quite sure that the Chief Executive of this Nation will say to the Shipping Board, under the discretion given him in this provision, "Go ahead, gentlemen, and do what you contemplated doing. You have acted wisely, as patriotic men. You have gotten all the bids you could. You have taken every precaution which could be taken in regard to an important matter like this, and, so far as any discretion is vested in me under the terms of this amendment, I say now, your hands are free, act as you deem best, accept the bid made or reject it." That is what President Harding will say to them, I am sure.

It is not that, sirs, which bothers me. It is the general effect of the proposed interference with a great branch of our Government—the Shipping Board—handling such a difficult problem as it has to handle. It ought to be free. Its hands ought to be unshackled. Instead of weighing them down, we ought to hold them up.

Mr. President and Senators, I personally have the utmost confidence in the Shipping Board as now constituted. I expect it to build up and start on a road of great prosperity a magnificent American merchant marine, and I sincerely hope, sirs, that we will not trammel it by this piece of legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am not quite certain whether the Senate has agreed to the amendments on page 32.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that all amendments have been agreed to except in this and one other case, that relating to the salaries of the three Civil Service Commissioners. Otherwise, all amendments have been passed upon.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not feel that I would be quite warranted in joining wholeheartedly with my friend from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] in refraining from any sort of criticism of the Shipping Board, or from offering what appear to me to be some objections at least to certain proposals which they make and certain things which they have already done. I agree with him, however, that it is most desirable that we give cordial support to the Shipping Board in all respects which our judgment and conscience may approve. I am not in favor of making captious objections here and there. I am not disposed or inclined to offer any criticism merely for the sake of criticizing. I do think, however, that we ought to point out anything that appears worth while in a constructive way.

I would not feel quite warranted in acquiescing in full in the course which they have pursued and in indorsing absolutely and unreservedly all they propose. They are asking for a good deal of money in the bill. While I do not feel warranted in making any strong opposition to granting what the committee have seen fit to allow, I do feel that in all reason there is ground for some protest as to some of the expenses incurred by the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

I am inclined to believe that when they reorganized the Fleet Corporation, as they did according to resolutions printed in the hearings before the House committee, they created some machinery that calls for additional and to some extent unnecessary expenditures. For instance, they organized a number of bureaus under that reorganization scheme. They have now, of course, the office of the chairman, which calls for considerable expense, $122,700. They have a bureau of traffic which calls for an expenditure of $47,960; a bureau of operations, $10,440; a bureau of construction, $20,360; a bureau of law, $9,900; a legal department, $27,740; a bureau of research, $43,540; total, $312,000; and with other objects of expenditure, as set out on page 866 of the hearings, making a grand total of $392,500 for administration expenses.

That is $42,000 more than was appropriated for 1922. Their administration expenses now amount to more than in the previous year, although they are now operating only 390 berth steamers. On December 31, 1920, they were operating 785 berth steamers and 51 tramp steamers. Now they are operating only 390 berth steamers and their expenses seem to be increasing all the while.

They claim under one head that they are not losing as much by operating their ships now as they did some few months ago, which is quite true. The fact is they have ceased to operate the ships. Out of a total tonnage of 11,287,125 dead-weight tons owned by the Government, there are only 3,156,485 dead-weight tons now in operation. The other ships are tied up. Of course, there is no loss on operating them along new routes, or any route, because they are tied up at the docks, and yet the administration expenses, as they are now proposed on page 866 of the hearings, are $42,000 more this year than last year. I can not see why that should be. And I can not quite appreciate it, since they have so largely decreased the number of ships in operation, and so many ships are tied up, thus preventing any loss from operation. I am not criticizing the fact that they are tied up, because we all know that commerce has fallen off and the exports and imports have decreased very largely, and it is perhaps the wisest thing to tie up most or all of these ships; but in doing so we ought to save some expense in connection with the agency that is operating the ships.

Another item I might mention is the question of the legal department. In the annual pay roll, June 5, 1921, it is shown that they had at that time employed in that division 191 people, and they were costing the Government $544,880. Now they have, after all discharges and deductions, made as late as December 31, 1921, 284 persons employed, and it is costing $962,681 a year. That is the legal division. The increase there is in number 93 and in amount of actual expenditures $417,801 over the previous year's expenditures. This appears at page 849 of the hearings. It does seem to me that there is certain ground for very serious question about whether they are exercising good judgment and proper economy in connection with that particular division of the board.

Mr. President, I shall not take the time to review the hearings. As I said, I am not mentioning this by way of merely finding fault with what is being done, but as stressing what appears to me to be the necessity of properly guarding against unnecessary outlays in connection with the work. It does seem to me there are opportunities for a very great reduction, and that, whereas we have decreased the number of employees, they appear to have increased the amount paid them to such an extent that the expenditures are, in my judgment, not justified.

We have these ships. We do not know what is going to become of them. We are to discuss the question later on of proposals in that connection. Mr. Lasker in his testimony indicates that we are expected hereafter to provide subsidies in order that we may create a market for the ships and eventually dispose of them perhaps in that way. We will deal with that when we get to it.

I have never been convinced by anything I have ever heard or read on the subject that subsidies have ever built up a merchant marine for any country anywhere at any time.

From the Marine Journal of February 4, 1922, I read the following item:

SOVIET BUYS SIX 3,150-TON SHIPS FROM BRITISH.

Soviet Russia has purchased in Great Britain in the last six months, according to a report based on Lloyd's records to the Department of Commerce by Consul General Skinner at London, six steamers of 3,150 tons each at prices ranging from £25,000 to £32,000, and two smaller steamers. One of the larger steamers, formerly the Ashwin, has been renamed the Trotsky. Others of these of the 3,150-ton vessels were the Pinevin, renamed Arcos; Tintern Abbey, renamed Jacob Sverdlov; and the Neathabbey, now called the Vneshtorg. The Brann has apparently not had its appellation changed. Up to November at least several of these were still sailing under the British flag, although owned by the soviet authorities.

We recently gave $20,000,000 to keep Russian people from starving to death, and yet the government there seems able to spend about £180,000, or nearly a million dollars, for ships, and buys those ships from Great Britain without apparently any opportunity being given to the United States Shipping Board to deal with them in that connection.

I presume there will be countries wanting these ships. Unquestionably they are splendid ships, well built, well constructed, and up to date in all respects. They will eventually be in demand. There is no question that we will need 15,000,000 dead-weight tons of merchant ships to carry half of our commerce overseas. We have only 11,000,000 tons now and about 3,000,000 in operation. Eventually we will need 15,000,000 tons when matters are more normal and trade is restored. We ought to have under our flag at least 15,000,000 tons of merchant ships. So we have not overbuilt and we have not overdone the thing. It is well enough, however, under the present circumstances that we do not operate the ships simply because we have them. It may be advisable, and I think is advisable, that they should be tied up when the operation is not profitable.

I call attention to these few items, Mr. President, because I do not feel that I can lend my unequivocal indorsement to the vast expenditures being made by the Shipping Board in all the respects which the hearings show. I think there are chances yet for economy, and I hope they will see their way clear to pursue a course of that sort, so we may have relief from this enormous overhead outlay and not be called upon year after year for these large appropriations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire the parliamentary status of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to perfect the language appearing in the bill on page 30, beginning at line 20.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, yesterday the spirit of peace brooded in the Chamber. The President of the United States presented to the Senate the results of the Washington conference, including the treaties which had been signed. The Senator from Massachusetts, with great gratification and pleasure, listened to the speech of the President and gave evidence of a pacific and benignant spirit. To-day, Mars seems to have entered the Chamber. The Senator from Massachusetts has been very vehement, not to say passionate, in the advocacy of the amendment which is now before us. The desire for peace in the Pacific for which he has contended evidently did not bring a peaceful spirit when there is discussed this measure, which seems to be of great importance to his State. And my friend from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has fallen into the same passionate and rather belligerent attitude when he proclaims the virtues of the proposition for which he contends.

Mr. President, if the treaties submitted mean anything, it would seem that they call for a reduction in the number of navy yards in the United States, as well as a reduction in the personnel of all forces, fighting and noncombatant, connected with the Navy Department. As I understand the contention of the advocates of the treaties now before the Senate, capital ships, if not abolished, are to be greatly reduced. Much of the work in the navy yards relates to either the construction of capital ships or the construction of guns and other things appertenant to fighting craft.

It is rather paradoxical that, after so zealously contending for the reduction of our Navy, there should be so quickly precipitated a contest to maintain navy yards and the construction personnel found therein. It must have been known that when capital ships were limited and the naval program suggested by Secretary Hughes was adopted there would not be the need for the same number of naval plants as existed in the past nor for the same number of persons to be employed therein.

But before the ink on the treaties has had time to dry there is a tremendous campaign inaugurated to save the navy yards and to keep them active, though in so doing millions of dollars of cost to the Government would be incurred.

It has been observed by those familiar with governmental activities that it is easy to create commissions and governmental agencies and increase the number of bureaus and employees of the Government, but it is an impossible task to abolish commissions and Federal agencies and Federal works and shops and enterprises and to decrease the employees of the Government. When a commission is fastened upon the Government, or when positions are created, they seem to become embedded in the entire political and governmental superstructure, so that it appears impossible to remove them unless the whole Government structure is successfully challenged.

I am not making these observations by way of criticizing the employees who are threatened with a loss of their positions in the various navy yards of the Government. As a matter of fact, I deeply sympathize with these employees. My investigations lead me to the conclusion that most of the employees in the navy yards are men of the finest character. I believe they are efficient and will compare most favorably with any employees that can be found anywhere in the United States. Some of the workmen in the navy yards are men of the highest integrity as well as of the highest skill. They have had pride in their work and have served their country faithfully. It would seem that under the circumstances there were strong moral grounds for the retention of these persons in governmental positions as long as it is possible, or certainly as long as it is just and fair to the Government and to the taxpayers. Of course, no one should urge that navy yards be maintained and operated merely to furnish positions to individuals, no matter how faithful and patriotic they may be.

Everyone must understand that when we cut down the construction of naval craft there must be a reduction in the number of employees in our navy yards. Undoubtedly the Government will maintain navy yards for an indefinite period. We will have some form of naval craft as long as conditions in the world are as we now perceive them to be. And of course that will require the maintenance of navy yards. There were many who hoped that the work of the Washington conference would be productive of more beneficial results and bring about a practical cessation of naval construction. There were those who believed that the League of Nations offered a means to bring about not only naval disarmament but disarmament upon land. The United States refused to enter the League of Nations or to cooperate with it in its efforts to secure a reduction of military and naval armaments. When we refused this cooperation there were millions in our country who hoped that some steps would be taken by our Nation to make contribution to world peace. The Washington conference, it was hoped, would relieve the people, by reason of its hoped-for beneficent results, of the oppressive burdens which armies and navies impose upon them.

For the current year we will spend five hundred millions for our Navy and nearly four hundred millions in the maintenance of our Army. This stupendous sum is too great to be borne in the hours of peace by this Republic, rich as it is. There can be no justification in the eyes of the world or in the eyes of patriotic Americans for the United States spending this stupendous sum in peace times. There is no reason why our naval program should not be reduced for the coming year at least $250,000,000. The cost of our Army should not exceed $150,000,000. The prodigious amounts called for by the War and Navy Departments can not be defended. It is to be hoped that when the naval appropriation bill and the military appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1923 are finally passed they will have relieved the American people of onerous burdens which they are now bearing.

Mr. President, there will be tremendous pressure brought to bear upon Congress to maintain all of the Government navy yards now in operation. It is well known that a number of them are of no utility and could have been abolished years ago with profit and advantage to the United States; but influences, political and otherwise, operated to prevent the consummation of a plan which economy and the interest of the public imperatively demanded.

I repeat that notwithstanding the Washington conference seems to indicate a great reduction in the cost of naval construction, there will be demands made for hundreds of millions for the Navy for the coming year and for the maintenance of large naval plants and the employment of thousands of persons in naval construction or in extraneous work not essential to the Navy. There will also be a determined effort to prevent a constant and proper reduction in the naval personnel, so that if economies are effectuated it will only be by the assertion upon the part of Congress of its undoubted power, backed by a courageous and determined purpose to serve the public weal and to answer the demands of a higher and better spirit of international amity and good will.

During the consideration of the last naval appropriation bill I called attention to the navy yards at Portsmouth and Brooklyn, and insisted that they should be abandoned. I offered a motion by way of amendment to the bill calling for the disposition of the Portsmouth and Brooklyn Navy Yards. My information was that they were unnecessary, and that they were maintained rather to furnish employment to people than to serve the interests of the Government. It is time that we disposed of some of these governmental yards, because their upkeep and their operation will entail millions of expense upon the Government. As I have indicated, strong efforts will be made to compel the Government to maintain all its present navy yards, even though they will not be required by the Government in its naval program and in its naval operations. Already it is suggested that where navy yards are not required for naval construction or the repair of warcraft they would be devoted by the Government to other purposes. The suggestion is made that they be employed in the construction of whatever commodities or articles the Government may require. I have heard the suggestion that the Government construct automobiles and furniture and typewriters and engines and mechanical appliances employed in reclamation projects and road work. One letter which I received suggested that the Government should construct its own engines and trucks and motors and harnesses and saddles and all articles and appliances used in any of the branches of the Government. Still others have suggested that these naval plants be employed in the construction of tractors and private munitions, including guns and pistols, and so forth. Nearly all of these suggestions, of course, contemplate governmental control and supervision and the retention of all Government employees that are now found in these plants, and the extension to them of all of the benefits flowing from civil service, retirement, or other features which may be found in subsequent legislation relating to employees of the Government.

Undoubtedly the amendment before us will be regarded by some, if it shall be carried, as the beginning of a policy upon the part of the Government of maintaining all naval yards, and their utilization for the construction of articles and commodities required by the Government, or for the purpose of adventuring into private fields of enterprise and business. It would be unfortunate, in my opinion, if the Government responded to all the suggestions and demands that have and will be made looking to the continued operation of all naval plants by the Government and under the control of the Government.

In my opinion, many of the yards should be sold or closed. A few should be retained and kept in a high state of efficiency, which would mean that the most modern machinery should replace worn-out or antiquated appliances and that men of the highest skill and ability should be retained. To maintain a navy, which undoubtedly we will have for many years yet to come, will require several navy yards, and they should be of the very highest type and manned by men of the highest skill and ability. If the question of dealing with the Leviathan in the manner indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts would not be regarded as a precedent, if it could be considered as sui generis, I should support it. However, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts should be adopted, there should be added to it a provision providing that in determining the costs for repairs and reconditioning the Leviathan there should be taken into account such factors as are usually considered in estimating the costs of construction, and so forth. If a bid is submitted by a private firm or corporation not only the cost of materials and the labor cost are taken into account but also the question of deterioration caused by the work to be done to the plant, the question of insurance, amount of capital invested, and so forth.

Mr. President, in my opinion there will be work for several years for the Boston Navy Yard, so that it is not as important as the Senator from Massachusetts thinks that the Leviathan be refitted and repaired at that place. With the scrapping of some of our capital ships, the demand will be made that the warcraft retained be kept up to the highest standard of efficiency. Some of our vessels are in need of repair; some of our submarines are in a confused, if not helpless, state mechanically. The yards which will be kept will have an abundance of work for an indefinite period, so I do not take the doleful view of the Boston yard that is taken by my distinguished friend. What is required is that Congress immediately determine upon a suitable naval program and then execute it. Such a program will, in my opinion, call for some new ships of various types and the putting into perfect condition the warships which will be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	Ladd	Sheppard
Brandeggee	Gooding	Lodge	Simmons
Bursum	Harris	McCormick	Spencer
Capper	Harrison	McNary	Stanfield
Colt	Heflin	Newberry	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Swanson
Cummins	Kellogg	Overman	Warren
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Watson, Ga.
Edge	Keyes	Phipps	Williams
Fernald	King	Ransdell

Mr. NORRIS. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-nine Senators having answered to the roll call, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Fletcher	Kenyon	Oddie
Calder	Glass	Myers	Polindexter
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Watson, Ind.
Dillingham

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. I have written it out hastily, and if I may just call attention to the context, the relation which the amendment would have to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be apparent. I read the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, commencing with the proviso:

Provided, That this limitation shall only apply to vessels while in the harbors of the United States, and all expenditures in connection with such work are to be considered in estimating the cost: And provided further, That the provisions of this clause shall take effect upon the passage of this act.

I offer the following, to be inserted after the word "cost," so as to make the amendment read:

All expenditures in connection with such work are to be considered in estimating the cost: Provided, That in considering such expenditures there shall be taken into account all legitimate and proper overhead expenses, all losses resulting from the use of such yards, including buildings, plants, and the machinery therein, the deterioration in value of such plants, machinery, and yards by reason of the use thereof in such work, the cost of insurance, and, generally, all factors that are fairly to be considered and estimated in determining cost involved in such work of repairing or reconditioning of vessels.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me the Senator has in there a great deal of unnecessary language. Of course, the purpose of the amendment is to make it impracticable. I suppose that would include taking into account the original cost of the Boston yard 100 years ago.

Mr. KING. No; I am not asking for anything in relation to capital.

Mr. LODGE. I think it would include that. At all events, I am ready to have a vote on it.

Mr. KING. In order that there may be no question, I will add the words "excluding capital investment."

Mr. LODGE. That is not the way it is offered.

Mr. KING. I will add "excluding capital investment."

Mr. LODGE. It is almost impossible to pass on anything of that sort, involving all that accounting, and I am sorry the Senator feels it necessary to press it at this time. However, let the Senate vote on it.

Mr. KING. If I may be permitted, I modify it so as to read:

And, generally, all factors that are fairly to be considered and estimated, excluding capital investment, in determining the cost involved—
And so forth.

Mr. LODGE. As far as I have any control I do not feel willing to accept it, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. KING. Just one word. It seems to me great advantage would be given to the yards, an undesirable advantage, an unfair advantage, if they are to take into account merely the cost of the material and the cost of labor. This amendment which I have suggested merely asks that there should be taken into account some of the engineering factors which are involved in determining the cost of construction. Properly, the capital should be included, but I have waived that, and there would only be taken into account the overhead, insurance, deterioration, damage, and loss to the plant and the machinery by reason of that particular work. It seems to me that with the great advantage to be derived from paying no interest upon capital it gives a tremendous advantage to the navy yards in bidding upon any of this work, and I submit the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is a very unsatisfactory thing to be compelled to pass upon amendments of this importance, which are more or less technical in their nature, when they are offered from the floor, when there is a good deal of confusion on the floor, and I would not like to be bound even by my own judgment thus obtained without a fair opportunity of examination and consideration of the amendment. So much in a general way.

Mr. President, the object of this amendment, as I get it, is to make sure that the navy yard will bid high enough to give them a hint that they had better add all these things. In other words, it seems to me the effect of it will be to give the private party an advantage in the bid; in other words, its tendency will be to increase the bid or the estimate of the Government.

The only information I have in regard to it is from hearing it read, and the Senator specifically uses in that amendment the language that insurance there must be taken into consideration.

I do not know, but I have an idea that the Government carries its own insurance. Why, then, should that be taken into consideration? The danger of burning, destruction, is very little, if any, greater when a yard is in use than when it is not in use.

Mr. CALDER. Much less.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume that is true; that when they are using the yards the danger of fire is less than when they are not in use. If they should not make a bid and should be idle the danger of destruction by fire would be greater, and if there is anything considered in regard to insurance it ought to be the other way instead of adding to the bid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that is to strike out a clause in the House text and to insert.

Mr. LODGE. It has been perfected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the committee is to strike out a certain part of the House text. The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: Mr. President, I misunderstood what was done, and I thought what was done was right in regard to the ship amendment that was adopted. My amendment was used to perfect the text which the committee proposed to strike out. It was carried. Therefore it took the place of the House text, and I supposed, of course, that the committee proposition was rejected, because otherwise it would have left my amendment out of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the question I asked at the time, and I was informed that the House language was stricken out.

Mr. LODGE. I misunderstood it.

Mr. WARREN. The chairman of the committee understood that it was stricken out at the time the Senator rose and asked permission to consider it early.

Mr. OVERMAN. I remember that I called attention to that fact, and asked what the parliamentary situation was.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator did, and I misunderstood it. I ask now that by unanimous consent it may be corrected, and that the clear intention of the Senate may be carried out.

I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted, and to have the committee amendment rejected, which will leave the Lodge amendment in place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to shall be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The "noes" have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. LODGE. That, I understand, carries out the purpose of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment passed over is on page 5, line 19.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, we have not yet finished with the Shipping Board item, have we?

Mr. WARREN. Everything has been finished except one item, so far as the committee amendments are concerned. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is now in the Chamber, and we have reached the matter which was passed over at his request, in regard to the salaries of the Commissioners of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HARRISON. Have all these provisions touching the Shipping Board been adopted?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; except as to notice of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that he would move reconsideration as to one amendment. What we agreed to do was to take up the committee amendments first, and I wish to dispose of this committee amendment, which I call to the notice of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRISON. Touching the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought perhaps while we were on the Shipping Board item we might go ahead and discuss it.

Mr. WARREN. It would be entirely in order for the Senator to call that up when we have disposed of the other.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator from Mississippi is ready to proceed, that is agreeable to me.

Mr. WARREN. I can not agree to that under the unanimous consent we have already entered into.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to discuss the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, too.

Mr. CARAWAY. That suits me.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry. May I inquire whether the amendment on lines 21 to 25, page 33, has been adopted?

Mr. WARREN. The Senate amendment in the form of a substitute for the House item is exactly what the House committee had recommended and adopted, but failed to carry, and so it will go to conference.

Mr. KING. I desire to move to reconsider, if we have adopted that. May I inquire whether the provision found on page 32, authorizing the use of $55,000,000, has been adopted?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator says, "Certainly," so there can be no doubt about it. I shall move to reconsider that in a moment when I get the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not clearly understand the amendment to which the Senator from Utah refers.

Mr. KING. I refer to the amendment at the bottom of page 33.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator remembers what the rule is, that a motion to reconsider must be made by some one who supported the amendment, and I judge from the inquiry of the Senator that he did not support the amendment to which he refers.

Mr. KING. I was out of the Chamber attending a committee meeting when this amendment was agreed to. I did not suppose it would be taken up yesterday afternoon when that committee meeting called me from the Chamber for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment beginning on line 21 and ending on line 25, page 33, was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I ask the consent of the Senator having charge of the bill that that vote may be reconsidered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. The inquiry is whether that amendment is to strike out and insert also, or is it just to insert?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was to strike out and insert. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Utah to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to discuss that motion, and, at the same time, the Shipping Board appropriation, and also an item that is carried on page 3, which I suppose was adopted on yesterday or the day before. I am sorry I was unavoidably absent from the Chamber and out of the city and did not know when it was adopted. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the item on page 3, because I want to ask him some questions about it. It is as follows:

Traveling expenses: For traveling and official entertainment expenses of the President of the United States, to be expended in his discretion and accounted for on his certificate solely, $25,000.

This item has been carried in prior bills for a long time, and it has never read just as it is incorporated here. Heretofore this item has been carried—and if I misstate the facts I wish the chairman of the committee would call my attention to it—“for traveling expenses of the President of the United States, to be expended in his discretion, and accounted for on his certificate solely, $25,000.”

The committee suggested, and I believe there has already been adopted by the Senate, the amendment to add the words “and official entertainment.” It may be that this question was discussed when this provision was adopted, but I want to know, if the Senator will tell me, why the words “and official entertainment” are included in this provision, and whether or not there was any request for an additional $25,000 to this appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. So far as a request is concerned, from whom would the Senator expect such a request?

Mr. HARRISON. The request naturally would come through the Budget Committee or the White House.

Mr. WARREN. It did not come from there.

Mr. HARRISON. Did it come from any other source?

Mr. WARREN. A request came, perhaps not exactly in the form of a request, but a suggestion from one or two Democratic Senators.

Originally when the Congress increased the salary of the President and others there were no taxes and no traveling expenses involved; it was simply a straight $100,000 salary that was proposed. That was cut down to $75,000, and afterwards by statute traveling expenses of $25,000 were allowed. I believed then, and I still believe, that we ought to cover the expense of travel. As the Senator knows, in old times when an official trip was made the railroads furnished a full train free to the President of the United States. He took with him members of the press and persons engaged in official business of the United States, and the railroad provided the dining cars and all that was necessary.

Now, however, the situation, as the Senator knows, is different. The traveling expenses should cover the entertainment of those men who go with the President as invited guests in an official way, and there should be no question about it. However, the question has been raised by one or two that expenditures for traveling expenses must be confined to the narrow matter of railroad fare alone, and to do away with that suggestion the committee inserted the words which the Senator has mentioned. I dare say that heretofore Presidents have spent the money for that class of entertainment, believing that the law as it stood covered the situation.

Mr. HARRISON. So, as I gather from the Senator's remarks, this is to take care of the newspaper men or anyone else who might travel with the President when he goes on one of his trips.

Mr. WARREN. Any entertainment of an official character, and any part of that appropriation that might be left could be used for official entertainment.

Mr. HARRISON. Do they intend to use any part of this for any of the official functions here in Washington when they are not on trips?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I know nothing of that.

Mr. HARRISON. But under the provision could they do that?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is a lawyer and I am not.

Mr. HARRISON. As chairman of the committee the Senator has not inquired as to that, then, nor have the committee?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator must understand that I have to figure from a layman's view rather than a lawyer's view. It would seem to be a rather narrow construction that the President, in entertaining those with whom he must come in contact in the line of business, should have to go down in his own pocket and pay for it. It would be a narrow construction of the law. I believe myself that it was the intention of the law, which was perhaps too narrow, to provide all expenses that are incident to travel, which would carry with it, of course, all official entertainment.

I do not desire to say that the Government is parsimonious so far as matters of entertainment are concerned. On the occasion of the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco we gave $50,000 or more to the Navy to entertain friends of the Navy, and we gave, I think, $100,000 to the Army, which was never used because it was coupled with the construction of a building. But our Army and our Navy and our officials are too often placed in the embarrassing situation where, no matter who may come here from another country, they are unable, unless they have funds of their own, to entertain them.

All other countries, and I will not except any for I know of none, provide straight entertainment funds. I noticed, and undoubtedly the Senator did, because he is a great reader of the daily press, an item the other day concerning representatives who might come from Canada and other places. I believe Canada refused to entertain the idea of sending an ambassador or minister to the United States because it would involve a matter of between $90,000 and $100,000. Of course, the salaries would not be any large portion of that. The ambassadors who are here from foreign countries are all provided with straight funds for entertainment purposes.

I hope the Senator does not feel that the economies of this Government require us to do differently from all other countries and that we can not at least have entertainment and travel expenses for the President.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is assuming that I am combating the proposition. I am trying to get some information about it. This provision heretofore has been for “traveling expenses.” A like amount has been provided, but here the words “and official entertainment” are inserted and a request made for $50,000.

Mr. WARREN. There was no request of that nature. It was considered in the committee, but the bill shows for itself that there is nothing of the kind.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator state there was no such suggestion from any outside source?

Mr. WARREN. There was none. I suggested myself that it would only be an honorable and decent thing to have something for the head of the Nation—not only for the President, but I would do the same for the heads of the Navy and the Army who have to entertain foreigners from time to time as they come here. That is the thought in mind. I am responsible for it.

Mr. HARRISON. That suggestion did not come officially from any other source?

Mr. WARREN. It did not. If the Senator would like, I might bring here from my office the story of some millions of dollars that were expended by our last President—

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] for prompting the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Even if he had prompted me, I may say to the Senator that I have the pamphlet either in my desk or in my office, and I shall be glad to read to him where a thousand dollars some weeks and two thousand dollars some other weeks were passed over to Dr. Grayson and from Dr. Grayson passed to the President, and no accounting has been made for it. I myself find no fault with that. The President was entertaining on account of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. Can that be the reason why the Senator felt the sum here should be increased?

Mr. WARREN. It had nothing to do with this whatever. I desire to say to the Senator if this costs a penny additional he might have cause for complaint from his standpoint, but it does not cost anything more than heretofore.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not complaining. I am trying to get information.

Mr. WARREN. I understand perfectly what the Senator wants. He and I do not have any trouble. He is only trying to make some political capital out of it.

Mr. HARRISON. I believe it was the Senator who brought politics into it. I am only trying to get information which apparently I can not corkscrew even out of the chairman of the committee. May I ask the chairman of the committee if this $25,000 additional was suggested by him to the committee because the words "and official entertainment" were inserted in the provision?

Mr. WARREN. That had nothing to do with it either. There was a conversation in the subcommittee about the other matter. The doings of the committee and the subcommittees are not always a matter of publicity in the Senate, but we do nothing in our committee that I am ashamed to disclose and nothing about which I would not like to have the Senator from Mississippi or any other Senator know in detail.

Mr. HARRISON. I feel that way about the Senator. The Senator talks about the dazzling splendor of the last administration.

Mr. WARREN. Have I found any fault with the last administration?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator never finds fault with anything.

Mr. WARREN. I was about as good an adherent of that administration as was the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. That is why the Senator is occupying his place now in the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I went so far in the matter that a great many of my friends in the Senate, one sitting not far from me now, gave me very severe castigation because of it, and I deserved it, I dare say.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not finding fault with the Senator. I have agreed generally with the Senator, but the Senator should not get riled at me because I am seeking information.

Mr. WARREN. I am not riled. I could not become riled at or with the genial Senator from Mississippi. The Senator merely wishes to contribute something to literature, I take it.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; in behalf of the taxpayers. The Senator spoke about the expenditures in the last administration by the President. I notice that in the last campaign a speaker's series of pamphlets were issued and sent all over the country to prejudice the minds of the people against the President's trip to Paris, and they headed it:

Mr. Wilson at court—Royal pageantry and dazzling splendor.

That is the kind of literature that was distributed all over the country, and yet fault is found with me, because, forsooth, I ask the chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations why, for the first time in the history of the Government, an appropriation of $25,000 is made, and an insertion is made of the words "and official entertainments." The Senator becomes riled at me and finds fault with me.

Mr. WARREN. I beg to say to the Senator that he must not state in the record that I am riled at that.

Mr. HARRISON. All right; I will withdraw that. He is not riled.

Mr. WARREN. I never could be that. I have too much sympathy for the Senator. I hope that the Senator is not charging that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or the committee itself was the editor or instigator of the pamphlet which has aroused the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator never would have allowed it to be distributed as a campaign document, especially if he had ever thought that at this time, so early in the administration, there would be a request for an appropriation for $25,000 "for official entertainments" for the first time in the history of the country.

Mr. WARREN. But they have not asked $25,000 nor 25 cents nor 1 cent additional.

Mr. HARRISON. The provision is for $25,000 "for traveling expenses" and "official entertainment."

Mr. WARREN. Very well. That is what the statute provides as to the amount, and it is exactly the amount that has been appropriated every year. Not a cent has been added to it.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems that running through the whole bill is a spirit of extravagance and a desire to employ a whole lot of useless officers and to give them high salaries. Here is an item:

For reconstructing greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $6,000.

A new item was adopted. The item was increased from $8,000 to $12,000 for fuel for greenhouses, and so forth. So it would seem there is some "pageantry and extravagance" practiced by others than those who are advertised in the campaign literature by the Republican committee in the last campaign.

But, bad as that may be, there are other provisions in the bill—

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator to explain.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is alluding to items that have been carried every year, less or more, according to the amount of repairs necessary. As to the item for fuel, that is a matter, as the Senator knows, first, of great advance in expense in the price of coal, and, secondly, he knows that the plant propagations are started there for the public gardens and the ornamentation of the entire city.

Mr. HARRISON. Is not coal a little lower than it was last year?

Mr. WARREN. I have said coal is higher than in former times, and, besides, we have been providing too little to last the year around.

Mr. HARRISON. Higher this year than it was last year?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. Of course, it depends upon localities and the kind of coal.

Mr. HARRISON. Both of the items carried increased appropriations, as the Senator will recall, for coal from $8,000 to $12,000, and the other a new item of $6,000 for reconstructing greenhouses.

Mr. WARREN. It is not a new item, as I think the Senator will admit when he considers it. What does he say it provides for?

Mr. HARRISON. Reconstruction of greenhouses, Executive Mansion.

Mr. WARREN. There are some twenty-odd of those greenhouses, and they last only a certain number of years, very few years, because of the constant wetting and heat and rotting away. The consequence is there is something going on every year as to some of them in the way of repairs or reconstruction.

Mr. HARRISON. There are other items except the new one put in by the committee.

Mr. WARREN. There was one greenhouse which was to be refitted or reconstructed, I believe, at $5,000. It was necessary to fix two of them, and we changed the item to make repairs, or reconstruction of two greenhouses, and increased the amount for that reason.

Mr. HARRISON. That is a new item to which I was calling attention.

Mr. WARREN. No; it is in place of an old item.

Mr. HARRISON. Here is another item, for ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of the Executive Mansion, $50,000; for fuel for the Executive Mansion and greenhouses, $12,000, formerly $8,000. Then there is another item for care and maintenance of greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $9,000. Then there is another item for repair to greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $3,000. Then there is another item for reconstructing greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $6,000. Then follows an item for improvement and maintenance of Executive Mansion grounds—within iron fence—$10,000, and so on down the line. I shall not read all these large expenditures which are made to keep up the greenhouses. I hope the appropriation is large enough to grow plenty of flowers, and that they will be beautiful and ornamental.

Some days ago I read a very interesting article by Mr. Lasker, head of the Shipping Board—

Mr. WARREN. Before the Senator proceeds, does he wish to strike out any of the items he has mentioned?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I believe there is a motion now pending, but later I shall so move, and I hope I can get the aid of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will not get the aid of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not think I would; but I am going to move to reconsider the vote by which those items were agreed to anyway.

Mr. WARREN. And the Senator's motion will be defeated, and he will wish to have it defeated.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the Senator can not put me in that position, especially after I have argued so forcefully here to-day against those items. I hope the Senator thinks it has been done forcibly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator's argument will call for the rejection of his motion.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. President, I want to read from the Chronicle—

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARRISON. I gladly yield.

Mr. SPENCER. The fact of the case is that the item for the reconstruction of greenhouses is not a new item, but provides precisely the same amount which was appropriated and spent last year. It is called reconstruction, but it really is to replace certain portions of greenhouses which have deteriorated. Each year it is necessary to provide for a certain amount of so-called reconstruction in order to keep the greenhouses in proper condition. Last year $6,000 was estimated and appropriated and spent.

As to the item for fuel, the Senator from Mississippi is quite right. Last year the amount of the appropriation was $8,000, but it was not enough to pay for fuel, and it has not been so for a number of years, and accordingly deficiency items have come in. This year the estimate was for $14,000, but the committee thought they might get along with $12,000 without incurring a deficiency. Just so much is required for fuel used at the White House as in the case of the Senator's house or of my house, and yet the Senator objects to appropriating enough to pay for fuel.

Mr. HARRISON. The only difference I see between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Wyoming touching the appropriation for the greenhouses is that the Senator from Wyoming says that some of the items are new, and in one case, at least, there is an increased appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator from Missouri says that the appropriation for the last item is for the same amount as last year.

Mr. WARREN. I beg pardon. I did not say that there were any new items. I said that as to this particular item we added an "s" to the word "greenhouse," in order to make it plural, but that we appropriated the same amount as was appropriated last year and the same amount as was asked for this year, which was $1,000 more than the House had provided. That is the case, but it is by no means a new item.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the bill shows upon its face that the House appropriated $8,000 under the item in lines 12 and 13, "for fuel for the Executive Mansion and greenhouses." The committee have raised that to $12,000.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; but the estimate was for $14,000, and this appropriation is nothing new so far as that is concerned. There is nothing new about it; it is not a new item.

Mr. HARRISON. It is for an increase, however. The other item to which I called the attention of the Senator was:

For reconstructing one greenhouse, Executive Mansion, $5,000.

The committee has stricken that out and in its place has inserted:

For reconstructing greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $6,000.

That is an increase over the House bill.

Mr. WARREN. It is an increase over the bill as it came from the other House, but the language is not different; the language is exactly the same, except that the letter "s" was added to the word "greenhouse." The amount of the appropriation, however, was changed from $5,000 to $6,000, which was the amount estimated for this year and the same as allowed last year.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I have stated.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Mississippi, I fear, did not quite study his lesson before he began to speak or he would not separate them in just that way.

Mr. HARRISON. I always study my lesson. I said that the two items in the bill had been increased, one from $8,000 to $12,000 and the other from $5,000 to $6,000. Now, the Senator from Missouri says that the same amount was carried last year in the original bill. I do not know whether the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Missouri agree as to that or not.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Missouri is exactly right.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but a part of it was carried in a deficiency bill.

Mr. WARREN. That is not different from what I have stated.

Mr. HARRISON. A part of the amount was carried in a deficiency bill. Is that not correct?

Mr. WARREN. A part of it may be covered by a deficiency bill, but it has not, perhaps, been provided for as yet. However, the full amount has been estimated for, because the $8,000 went only a part way through this year, and the remainder, of course, will have to be provided.

Mr. HARRISON. The amount which was requested by the Budget Bureau was $14,000, and the committee have provided $12,000, so that the difference will come in as a deficiency some day.

Mr. WARREN. We do not know.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Senator will ask the Senate to make the appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. We hope it will not come in as a deficiency, and I hope the Senator has not changed his position, but will stand with us and join in the hope that we shall have to appropriate less instead of more.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope it will be less, but we are not getting less.

When the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] interrupted me I started to read from the Chronicle. What I shall now read is from a speech which was delivered by Mr. Lasker on October 5. Among other things he said:

We believe we have our losses checked and hope to require not more than $5,000,000 a month for operations from now on until the end of the Government's fiscal year, June 30 next. Five million dollars a month is a huge sum, but small compared to keeping alive an organization with $3,500,000,000 invested and operating and developing essential strategic trade routes, which must necessarily be run at a loss under the present trying conditions of world-carrying trade. We can not but believe that if we can produce a constructive policy, the taxpayer, hard pressed though he is, will not only approve of the continued operation at the present cost, but applaud same, in the comparison to the previous loss entailed.

Yet notwithstanding that speech and the statement that the Shipping Board would cost only $5,000,000 a month, and the subsequent statements which have been issued to the press and published everywhere that the Shipping Board had effected a great saving to the taxpayers of the country, that great reforms and economies had been worked out, we find that in this bill practically $150,000,000 is being carried for the administration of the Shipping Board. The first item, of course, is to pay the seven commissioners $12,000 each and a secretary $5,000, making a total of $89,000. Then the next appropriation which is requested is $350,000; the next is $20,000; and then we come to the emergency shipping fund. I quote from that item as follows:

For administrative purposes, miscellaneous adjustments, losses due to the maintenance and operation of ships, for the tie-up, reconditioning and repair of ships, and for carrying out the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, (a) the amount on hand July 1, 1922—

I have no idea how much will be on hand in 1922, but they have a right to expend that during the coming fiscal year—

(b) $50,000,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for the payment of claims other than those resulting from the current maintenance and operation of vessels; (c) the amount received during the fiscal year 1923 from the operation of ships—

No one knows how much that will be. I suppose the Shipping Board does not know.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Senator alluding to the $55,000,000 item?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I am coming to that.

Mr. WARREN. I think I ought to say at this point for the information of the Senator from Mississippi that a year ago that same or similar provision was placed in the bill. The officials of the Shipping Board have collected everything they could; but most of the amounts will be uncollected, although during the year they may perhaps collect 5 per cent or 10 per cent. It has, however, seemed to the committee that we should make it a "spurring up" point to help them collect it in order to obtain the funds with which they wish to go on. We hope that the remainder will be collected to the utmost possible extent, and that whatever can not be collected immediately may be put in the shape of secured indebtedness. In other words, we want to give the board responsibilities, rather than have the matter go into the courts, so as to make the best settlement we can and secure the money as soon as possible.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The next item is:

(d) Fifty-five million dollars from moneys collected from mortgages, leases, accounts and bills receivable other than those arising from current operations, and from moneys collected from the sale of ships, plants, material, securities, and other assets, prior to July 1, 1923, less such portion of said $55,000,000 which shall have been collected during the fiscal year 1922 under the provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1921.

Then there is another item as follows:

For the payment of claims, damage charges, and miscellaneous adjustments authorized under the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, $50,000,000.

So running through this bill are enormous amounts, which are contradictory to the prophecy made by Mr. Lasker, the head of the Shipping Board, and to the statements which he is constantly issuing to the public.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before the Senator passes from that may I interrupt him?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 865 of the House hearings Mr. Lasker reports the loss from operation to be $4,000,000 a month.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; $4,000,000 a month. How can we expect the American people to believe the head of the Shipping Board when he makes statements such as those to which my attention has been called, and then we find him here requesting and obtaining of Congress enormous sums of money to run and operate the Shipping Board?

But that is not the worst of the matter. No wonder that the farmer in the Middle West, who is to-day receiving 25 cents a bushel for his corn, no wonder that the farmer in the great Northwest, who is to-day receiving a small amount per bushel for his wheat and demanding that Congress guarantee a price to him for the next year, is discouraged when he realizes that men employed in the Shipping Board under the last administration who received $6,500 a year are now receiving $35,000 a year, and when they realize that men who in the last administration worked under the Shipping Board and who received $2,500 a year are now in some instances receiving $10,000 a year.

We fought out here during the last Congress the question of imposing a limit to the number of men who might be employed by the Shipping Board at salaries above a certain amount a year, and a proviso was moved in connection with the appropriation for employees of the Shipping Board limiting the salary which could be paid, as I recall, to not over $10,000 a year, with the exception of one employee who might receive in excess of that. Then we voted on the proposition of allowing not more than three to receive a greater salary than the sum I have named. I believe that that provision was finally adopted, if my memory serves me correctly. Yet in this bill, despite the boasted economy of the present administration, the great reforms that have been worked, and the savings made, we see the Shipping Board requesting and obtaining from the Appropriations Committee of the Senate a provision which gives them the right to employ at least 11 men who may be paid over $11,000 a year.

We fought it out once and the fact was revealed on this floor that an ex-Representative, who had not prosecuted a lawsuit perhaps in 12 years, but perhaps because he had made some Republican speeches in the last campaign, was given a job to write bills which might be presented to Congress touching the merchant marine of the country and was paid $10,000 a year. At the same time the further fact was revealed that an ex-Senator, who was one of the close advisers at Marion during the last campaign and who is slated for the Supreme Bench of the United States, was to receive $5,000 merely to advise the general counsel of the Shipping Board when his advice was sought. With condemnation still ringing in the ears of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, we find that committee bringing into this body a new provision and saying that the board shall be allowed to employ at least 11 men who are to receive over $11,000 a year.

Oh, the Senate committee are more generous than the House were, because the House in the bill as passed by it only allowed six officers or employees of the Shipping Board to receive in excess of $11,000, but the Senate committee goes them five better and allows them to employ 11 to receive over $11,000 a year. The Republican side must answer to the voters this fall from one end of the country to the other why they have increased the salaries of men working under the Shipping Board who received $6,500 a year during the last administration to $35,000 a year. You will have to explain why you are paying these enormous sums to attorneys for the Shipping Board.

It is pitiful to think of the low prices the farmers are receiving, the low wages that the laborers are getting, the millions and millions that are hungry and without clothing throughout this country, and yet see Congress appropriate these enormous sums increasing salaries for these high officials. If you think that the people are not watching and looking and waiting, you are very much mistaken. They know that that provision is in the bill. They know what you are trying to do—so when you come to vote on the motion made by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to reconsider the provision giving to the Shipping Board the right to name at least 11 officers and employees who shall receive over $11,000 a year, I hope that it will prevail.

Now, Mr. President, I want to pass from the Shipping Board for a moment and address myself to another amendment that is pending, one that was offered by the distinguished junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY]. It also relates to an increase of salary. It looks as if this administration is bent on trying to find jobs for its adherents and increasing salaries, forgetful of the needs of the American people and unable to solve the great problems that are pressing upon Congress. We wait here for days for some program to be given to us, for some policy to be revealed, and none comes. We are handed by the Appropriations Committee, though, day after day, bills seeking to increase salaries, thereby adding to the burdens of taxation in this country.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator will permit me to say that this is the second large bill we have practically completed, except for a conference report, and that in the two together no attempt has been made to raise a single salary, with the exception of the point that is not yet settled in regard to the three Civil Service Commissioners, and $400 in the case of one position that has been changed in its responsibilities; so that if those three go out, it simply leaves a matter of $400, where a man steps from one place to another, out of all this total of approximately $700,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator for indorsing what I said. The last bill carried that appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Which one?

Mr. HARRISON. The appropriation of $7,500 to pay to a person who received at one time only $1,800 during the last administration.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is mistaken about that. It took the place of the House provision, which carried $10,000. In other words, we cut down the House provision from $10,000 to $7,500.

Mr. HARRISON. I say that the administration is bent on increasing salaries, and the incident to which the Senator calls my attention proves it. There was a young man named Gilbert, I think, working in the Treasury Department, who received at one time during the Wilson administration $1,800 or $2,000 a year; and the Secretary of the Treasury now beseeches the committees in the House and in the Senate to make an appropriation of $10,000 a year for this man.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator, of course, is indulging in ancient history.

Mr. HARRISON. It is history, anyway.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know the early history of the thousands of men who have been employed by the Government, and I do not know to what man the Senator is alluding or what salary he formerly received, except that he was one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury under the past administration, and I know that the lowest salary paid to an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is $5,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. He is a very efficient gentleman; but I said that during the last administration, at one time, he worked for $1,800 or $2,000 a year, and just before we went out of power he was appointed to take Mr. Lefingwell's place, I think, as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator might say that he worked for $13 a month, as I did once, and I should not dispute it, because I do not know; but I do know that the first we knew of him on this side of the Chamber was when he was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, receiving $5,000 a year; and everyone who has spoken of him on the floor here has spoken of him as a very competent man.

Mr. HARRISON. Why, he is a splendid young man. He is a Democrat; and I think you have the best excuse for increasing his salary that you have in the case of anyone, because he is the most competent man in the Treasury Department to run that department, and I do not know how you would get along without him.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator know that he is a Democrat?

Mr. HARRISON. I am not exactly sure. Since he has been associated with you and a few others he may have changed.

Mr. WARREN. Was he ever a Democrat?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know about that. I do not want to do him an injustice. I hope he is. It may be if you find out he was you would dispense with his services. I hope not.

Mr. WARREN. I know nothing about it; but I will enter against that the statement that he has always been a Republican, and the people can take their choice. I do not know Mr. Gilbert's politics, nor does the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. I can see now why you are insisting on paying him $10,000 a year, then.

Mr. WARREN. We did not insist upon paying him $10,000 a year as it happened. The House insisted upon it. We did not.

Mr. HARRISON. Anyway, Mr. President, I have come now to discuss another provision in this bill. Here are the Civil Service Commissioners up here. They have been receiving $5,000 a year for a long time. In the years gone by they have done some very efficient work. They have been very impartial, and no power and no influence, however great, could swerve them in the discharge of their official duties. I do not know whether they can be influenced now. I hope they can not be. I have a very high respect for the Civil Service Commission. I notice, however, that this very generous Appropriations Committee proposes to increase the salaries of the commissioners from $5,000 to $6,000 a year. There are other increases made for the Civil Service Commission. For instance, the appropriation for additional employees for the Civil Service Commission is increased from $56,780, as recommended by the House, to $100,000, as recommended by the Senate. The way they are now interpreting certain orders issued by the President and by the Postmaster General and executing the civil-service rules, I do not know that there is any use in making any appropriation for the Civil Service Commission. There is where we really could effect a saving to the taxpayers of the country.

The way the thing operates now—and I look into the faces of Senators on the other side who agree with me; if they do not, I wish they would rise and speak—it is a farce the way postmasters are being named throughout the country. I pause for an answer, but none come. We know that the civil-service rules are not followed. They hold out great hopes to persons who take the examinations throughout the country that the one who receives the highest rating will be put on an eligible list of three, and one of them will be appointed, and so forth. I do not know who it is that works the thing around, whether it is the commissioners themselves or some fellow in some part of the commission up there, or whether the word goes down the line from the Postmaster General or his First Assistant, or from the President; but you know and I know that they work it around to put some fellow in the office that "the powers that be" desire to have appointed; you know, too, that if a poor person, be it a girl or a boy or a man or a woman, has not Republican influence now, he or she has no chance to get a job under this civil-service system.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the Senator wants to leave the impression—at least, I hope he does not, and if he does, I want to controvert it—that the Civil Service Commission is to blame for the condition of which the Senator complains, and which I agree exists.

Mr. HARRISON. I really do not think they are to blame. I think it is due to the orders that are being issued from high authority. They naturally desire to stand in with the "powers that be."

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is perfectly plain what is being done, and nobody is concealing it, as far as I know. I do not agree that the order ought to have been changed. I am on record against it myself, in a written communication to the Postmaster General at the time it was contemplated to change it. The old order that was issued by President Wilson applying to post offices above the fourth class, including the first, second, and third class offices, provided that civil-service examinations should be held, and that the Postmaster General should appoint the highest one on the list. President Harding changed that order. He had a perfect legal right, of course, to change it. I think myself it was bad policy to change it, and that it ought not to have been changed; but he changed it, and provided that the postmasters should be selected from the three highest on the list certified by the Civil Service Commission.

I understand that where there are any post offices in a district represented by a Republican Member of the House of Representatives, the practice is for the Republican Member of Congress to make a selection from the three highest on the list that is recommended to the Post Office Department, they send it to the President, and the President sends it to the Senate. Where there is not a Republican Member of the House of Representatives, I suppose it goes through some other party machinery. I think I have stated the matter correctly.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is correct; I do not want to do the commission an injustice. Of course, they are following orders from higher up.

Mr. NORRIS. Personally, I have never agreed with the administration in making that change. As I said, I am on record against it myself, and protested against their making it. I would have been glad to have the order of President Wilson improved in any way it could have been improved, but I did not want the Post Office Department to take a step backward and put these post offices on the political pie counter. I advocated that when there was a Democratic President, and I felt in honor bound to advocate the same when there was a Republican President. I think, myself, it is a step backward, although it can be, I think, very truly said that under the prior administration of President Wilson the Post Office Department very often did not carry out in good faith—and I think I could prove it in a good many instances—the work of the Civil Service Commission. In a great many instances, many of which came under my personal observation, they practically nullified the orders of the Civil Service Commission and the real intent of the law. But I did not consider that any reason why my party should be guilty of an act probably worse than that. It ought to have improved on it, if improvement were possible, and, as I think ought to be done, should have kept the post offices of the country entirely out of partisan politics.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska is correct, that if we are going to have a Civil Service Commission at all, we should have it function as it is intended to function.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me to add to what I have said, something which the remark of the Senator from Florida reminds me, I concede that under the law the President has a right to make appointments of postmasters. He has a right to resort to any method he pleases, and whatever method he adopts, as far as I am concerned, as long as I am in official life I will help him carry out in good faith. I will not interfere with it, because he has a right to adopt it, though as a matter of policy I disagree with him entirely. But I think a political party, no matter whose party it may be, which goes before the people and says, "We are going to take these offices or those offices, whatever they may be, out of politics and put them on the merit basis," ought to keep them on the merit basis in good faith; they ought to be sportsmen enough so that when the rules they themselves have laid down work against them, they ought to take their medicine, and if that kind of an administration of the law brings a postmaster into office of the opposite party, we ought to be sportsmen enough to stand for it and defend it, or we ought to frankly say to the people, "We are going to put these offices on the political pie counter and give them out to deserving Democrats or deserving Republicans," as the case may be.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is very true. We are told that there will be examinations, and that the appointments will be based on the grades made before and certified to by the Civil Service Commission. I am not willing, however, to let this pass with the clean bill of health given by the Senator from Mississippi, apparently, or the Senator from Nebraska, to this Civil Service Commission. I have reason to believe, and I want to say it now very briefly, that the Civil Service Commission, as it functions now, does not regard as at all controlling the findings of the examiners and the agents whom they appoint to make investigations with reference to these appointments and with reference to the applications; that they make their own rulings, and those rulings are plainly influenced by political considerations. In other words, the Civil Service Commission as it is now constituted is a great political machine, and they disregard the findings and the reports of their own people and establish grades and make certificates as to eligibility and as to qualifications of their own volition and arbitrarily, and are evidently influenced by political considerations.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator from Mississippi will allow me to interrupt a moment, I will just briefly state to the Senator from Nebraska that no Member of the House or the Senate of the Republican faith is elected in my State, and therefore the chairman of the State central committee is the official distributor of offices, although I understand he is advised by a committee of 16 men, 13 of whom drew the 13 best places in the State to start in with; but he passes upon everybody's right to hold an office, even to that of a rural carrier. The fortunate ones are named in advance of taking the examination. The faithful have been told who shall have the places in order to discourage anybody else from entering the examination as far as possible. At Glenwood, the one to whom the place has been given made around 60 per cent, 10 per cent less than the passing grade, as I understand, and after that had been certified, and it was shown he was not eligible to appointment, the distributor of offices came up here, went to the Civil Service Commission, and they changed that grade and gave the man 70.2 per cent, and now his name is pending before the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator for his information.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. If the statements made by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Arkansas are correct, the Civil Service Commission ought to be investigated; and if those facts are found to be true the commissioners ought to be removed from office, if they are responsible. As far as I am personally concerned, I have seen nothing which has led me to believe that the Civil Service Commission as now constituted has been anything but fair. I concede that they might be unfair and I not know it. If it is true that political influence is being used to make a difference in the grades of persons applying for positions under the Civil Service Commission, Senators owe it to the country that they prefer their charges and that the Civil Service Commission be properly investigated and the commissioners removed from office, because if there is any place in the Government where we ought to have a square deal, without regard to politics, where the law bringing life to the commission was based on the theory that politics should be abolished, it is in reference to the work of the Civil Service Commission, and no member of that commission, whatever his politics may be, has any right to serve 10 minutes if he is permitting his official acts to be influenced or controlled in the slightest degree by the politics of anybody being examined.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator would like to, he may go to the Post Office Department and examine the record of the case I suggested at Glenwood, and I think he will agree with me that that is a rather extraordinary thing to happen, that in the case of a man who has been promised the office in advance and fails to make the examination, his rating being given out, they go back and amend it, claiming, I understand, though I get it from some source I can not now vouch for, that they learn something more about his business efficiency, and by that means he got a re-examination, to all intents and purposes, and got on the eligible list. I have two or three more cases, and when the Senator from Mississippi is through, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to them.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the conditions in other States, but the greatest complaint in my State against the Civil Service Commission is that the ex-service men are not getting a square deal. They are actually turning ex-service men out who have rendered good service, and are not carrying out the spirit of the law passed by Congress in regard to giving preference to ex-service men. More than a year ago I introduced a resolution in the Senate to investigate the treatment given the ex-service men by the Civil Service Commission. They are not giving these deserving soldiers the credit Congress intended. In a number of instances in my State it has come to my attention where the ex-service men have been discriminated against, and it is time something was done to prevent it. The ex-service men risked their lives to save our people, and we should leave nothing undone in our efforts to assist them. The men who went to war should at least be given preference in positions of the Government in times of peace.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Post Office Department names the inspectors who are going around to investigate the applicants, and I imagine that in most instances those inspectors are pretty good Republicans. Some of them are politicians, and naturally they make their reports to the Civil Service Commission and the authorities who are high up, naturally, who have some influence with the Civil Service Commission. There are thousands of ex-service men who have held positions in the post offices, as well as others, who have passed examinations and made the highest grades who have been ignored, and others, mere politicians, put in their places. I am not going to fall out with the present administration if they abolish the whole civil service touching postmasters and take the responsibility and name these persons to office. That really appeals to me very strongly, and if it were within my power that is what I would do; but when you say you are going to follow civil-service rules and advertise to a community to come and take the examination you should not fool anybody into studying up on it and making a grade away above 90 and then have somebody else appointed merely because he is a Republican politician who made probably 65 or 66 per cent.

Be that as it may, we could rehearse instance after instance which would condemn the present administration and show the unfairness of their policy, but the most glaring instance I know of in the whole history of the civil service has been practiced by this administration. They violated the law in letter and in spirit, and it was done by the highest in authority in America, the President of the United States. There were probably hundreds of good deserving Republicans at Marion who desired to be appointed postmaster. They had read of the civil service law, and what a friend the Republican Party had been to it in the past. They believed that they would be treated fairly when it came to holding an examination for the postmastership at Marion. They relied upon the assertions the President and the leaders of the party had made, in forum and in hamlet, in every campaign. They believed they were the friends of civil service, and that they would get a fair deal when the successor of the then democratic postmaster at Marion should be appointed; but, like a clap of thunder out of a clear sky, the President of the United States, who had before paid high tribute to the civil-service employees and to the system, stamped it under his feet, repudiated it, spurned it as though it was a poisonous thing, and wrote an Executive order appointing the postmaster at Marion.

Oh, how can the followers of civil service have any faith or confidence in the administration after that act? If it be true that the President should do it and name some friend postmaster at Marion through an Executive order, why should he not issue an Executive order for Senators to appoint their friends in their home towns? Why should he not issue an Executive order for the Republican Congressmen, so that they might name some friend as postmaster in their home town? It is the beginning of the end of the civil-service system during this administration. If I were President of the United States and had committed such an act as that, I would not have the face ever again to advocate civil-service reform or contend for civil-service requirements or enforcements.

I do not know whether that nomination has been confirmed or not, but I shall oppose its confirmation, and I shall ask, if it has not been confirmed, that the Senate shall sit in open executive session to consider the nomination. I want to put Senators on record to see whether or not they will indorse an act, even though it comes from their own President, which will destroy the civil service at one fell swoop, as President Harding did in that instance.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I received a letter to-day from the president of the Civil Service Commission, who conceives that I was unfair to the commission in what I said about it yesterday, and asks that I have his letter incorporated in the Record. I understand that for fear I should not do so he has also supplied other Senators with copies of the letter and asked, if I should fail, that they do so. I shall gladly place that letter in the Record, if I may do so by unanimous consent.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator have the letter read?

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator from Nebraska wishes it.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to hear it.

Mr. CARAWAY. At the request of the Senator from Nebraska I ask to have the letter read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1922.

Senator THADDEUS H. CARAWAY,
Senate Office Building.

MY DEAR SENATOR CARAWAY: Your statements with reference to the Civil Service Commission as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of to-day are before me. I appreciate your prefacing your statement with a reminder that the commission was not present to state its side of the case, and for that reason I am assuming that you will do us the justice of inserting this letter in the RECORD.

We must flatly join issue with you in the proposition that any ratings are changed arbitrarily or wrongfully. Such is not the fact. No one in your State or in any other State can prove such an assertion.

Personally I looked into the matter of the contest for postmaster at Paragould, Ark., about which you wrote the commission. If your complaint is based upon this, nothing could be fairer than that you should place the entire correspondence in the RECORD as proof of our position.

The Government receives its vouchers and affidavits from citizens in the community under a pledge of confidence. A banker, for instance, is taken into his private office and assured by a representative of the Government that if he will tell the exact facts about the candidates his statements will be kept by his Government as strictly confidential. That pledge must be kept.

You asked in your letter of February 3 to the commission that it send to you by one of its clerks the papers in the case of Paragould, Ark., and you suggested that if we did not comply you would put it in the form of a charge against the commission. The commission wrote you on the 7th that it could not comply on account of the confidential relation above stated.

With reference to your allegation that the commission is refusing to grade certain papers in order that it may make others eligible, permit me to remind you that this, too, was covered in our correspondence, and that when you made the charge against us you had in hand the facts with reference to this and could have given them to the Senate. However, to repeat, I will explain to you again that in cases of first and second-class post offices we actually give numerical ratings to only the highest three, but we very carefully compare all others before we select the highest three. As between the third and any other competitor for third place, we give a great deal of study.

As suggested to you in my letter, the reason for not rating numerically the various other candidates is in the interest of economy of time when there is a great congestion of work, and also economy of appropriation. In Chicago, for instance, we had more than 40 candidates. You can see how perfectly useless it would have been, after having decided who belonged in the highest three to continue on and decide the relative order of the other candidates. There would be sharp contests, for instance, as to whether a man was eleventh or twelfth, or again whether another pair was twenty-third or twenty-fourth. The amount of time consumed in this idle discussion would be folly. Furthermore, the Executive order makes it necessary to select from the highest three. In case we are reasonably asked to review our work, we do so, but such review consists in making sure that we have the right three. Sometimes, however, it might affect the order of the candidates composing that three. It is rarely that there is any change upon review. Occasionally, however, the commission has found that it has overlooked some evidence, or in some way erred. In such cases we have corrected our mistakes or revised our judgment, but we have never done this except on the evidence which is reduced to writing and is a part of the case. It has never been done on the "say so" or suggestion of any "influence."

I might also add that the majority of candidates who do not succeed in making one of the first three places are fully as satisfied not to have it known whether they are fourth or fortieth.

I will close this letter in the exact language in which I closed my letter of February 7, namely, "You may be assured that I would be glad to extend to you every courtesy possible."

Yours, very truly,

JOHN H. BARTLETT, President.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am pleased to have the letter appear in the RECORD. It contains three statements, each one of them false, and known by Mr. Bartlett to be so at the time he made them. It is ungracious, and I am conscious of that, as I said in my first mentioning of these facts, to discuss an official unkindly who is not permitted to answer in the same forum and at the same time the charge is made. This charge against the Civil Service Commission is the first of its kind that I ever made. I hope it shall be the last.

I am conscious of another thing, that if I say what occurred in a telephonic conversation the party representing himself to be a certain official speaking to me could and probably will deny that he was there. But to show how absurd this statement of Mr. Bartlett is, I asked if the commission would restate these papers, and was told that the papers were not in their possession, that they were in the possession of the Post Office Department, and that they did not have access to them. If the man who told me that was not the official he represented himself to be, of course that ends that. I know some one answering the phone at the commission's office made that statement to me. Whether he was the person he claimed, I do not know. It might have been some one else. I do not know anyone of those commissioners, thank the Lord. I have as large a list of acquaintances as I care for of the kind they seem to be.

I was first told that the men whose papers I asked about had not made a passable grade. I do not know who told me that. When I called on the telephone for the chairman of the commission, I know some one in the office there told me so. When I rather doubted that and wanted the papers reviewed, I was switched to another person, and then I was told, as I said a moment ago, that the papers were not in their possession and they could not review them, that they had been turned over to the Post Office Department. I said, "Is it the rule of the Civil Service Commission to transmit to the Post Office Department papers on which the grades are made?" I was told that was the rule and that I could not see them.

Some one at the commission talked to me over the telephone—I do not know who it was—and told me that there were five excellent applicants from Paragould, that their papers were so good that after finding three of them were entitled to be certified they did not rate the other papers. I was rather curious to know how they should know who was first and who was second, unless they graded all the papers.

Then I received a letter full of evasions saying that the papers had been received in confidence. I had notified them that I had the written request of the men whose grades had not been certified, according to their understanding, asking me to see the papers, not granting permission to see them, but asking that I would do so and let them know what was wrong. I was then told that the whole thing was in confidence. Now, I am told that some banker in a back room may have said something derogatory about some candidate's reputation and that such information was received under the pledge of secrecy.

Since this matter has come up this afternoon two Senators have told me of cases which they are going to submit when the commission of investigation begins its hearings. It seems that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] did not know that the Senate had adopted a resolution to investigate the Civil Service Commission along this very line.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I did know that. I was aware of it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to say to the Senator that I supported the resolution directing the inquiry.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure the Senator would. It does not seem that the inquiry is going to get under way very soon.

I have been told, as I said, by Senators of cases even more flagrant than those to which I have called attention. The Executive order requires, as I now recall—and if I am mistaken in that I hope some one will correct me—that the applicant must be a patron of the office to which he expects to be appointed as postmaster. In other words, he is not eligible for examination and rating and appointment unless he is a patron of the office in which he aspires to serve as postmaster. Am I correct?

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is correct.

Mr. CARAWAY. Just for the enlightenment of the president of the Civil Service Commission, there is another place in my State about which I shall give the facts to the committee that is to investigate the Civil Service Commission. They gave a rating to an applicant there and the President has nominated him because he was the choice of the political machine down there. I am not finding fault with that feature of it. That man's name is now pending in the Senate for confirmation as postmaster in a town even though he does not live in the county where the office is located. He lives 30 miles away and is a patron of another post office. He does not own a dollar's worth of property in that county. He does not vote there. He is a citizen and voter of another county and a patron of another post office.

I am sure this information was possessed by the commission when it certified his eligibility and was known by the Post Office Department when it transmitted to the Senate his nomination.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does not mean he is postmaster at another post office?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; but he is a patron of another post office. He lives in another county.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought perhaps he was going to have two post offices and thus lessen overhead expenses.

Mr. CARAWAY. I doubt, if the charges are true, that one man could afford to have two post offices in my State. I know, because a copy of a letter was furnished me from a man who prefaces his letter by saying that he has been a lifelong Republican and has been a member of the Republican State committee. He was at the time he wrote chairman of the Republican county committee of his county. Another Republican was selling the offices, and they were rated at from $150 to $250 apiece. They had sold the office in the town where he lived. He wrote the letter to the Postmaster General and sent me a copy of it. That did not prevent the man who has purchased the office from being nominated, and his nomination is now pending before the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. NORRIS. In that case the man who bought the office got it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; just like the man from Michigan who bought a seat in this body got it.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think he paid too much for the post office?

Mr. CARAWAY. He is a good business man. I would not like to say that he did, because he evidently knew what he was buying. What I meant to say is that no man could afford to have two at the price for which they were selling. That was in answer to the suggestion of the Senator that they were, perhaps, trying to give the same man two jobs.

That is not an isolated case. These incidents may all be subject to explanation, and I do not doubt, if anyone wants to accept the statement of the chairman of the Civil Service Commission, that he could "explain" them. I would like to read to you again the second paragraph of the letter of Mr. Bartlett, president of the Civil Service Commission.

We must flatly join issue with you in the proposition that any ratings are changed arbitrarily or wrongfully. Such is not the fact. No one in your State or in any other State can prove such an assertion.

How can I prove that they change ratings arbitrarily or change ratings wrongfully when they will not let me see the papers on which they make the alleged ratings? It is a silly thing for a man who is the head of a great commission to say, "Well, I guess you can prove we did the things, but you can not show we were arbitrary in our ratings"; in other words, that if you steal something I can show that you stole it, but, except for your act, I can not prove that you had in your heart the intent to steal. I can not prove what was in his mind. Of course I can not prove why he certified as eligible one who had just before, on the same papers, been certified as not making a passing grade. I can show that he did it, and I know that when he says he did it for any reason except for a political reason no one is going to believe he is telling the truth. I can not prove it, but I know it, and every man that reads his statement or looked at the papers will know it, and, of course, he knows it. Again, I should be very much pleased for him to suggest how we could prove that his conduct was not inspired by good motives except by proving what he did. But enough of him.

I do not agree with the Senator from Mississippi that the commissioners are at all times responsible for ignoring the rights of ex-service men where they are on the eligible list. It is true that the administration, in my State, with possibly one exception, so far as I know, has turned down every ex-service man who was eligible to appointment as postmaster and has named some one else whose service consisted in contributing something toward the success of the campaign that resulted in the election of the present President.

I am myself a good spoilsman. Since you folks are in power—and I do not think you are going to be again—I am perfectly willing that you shall have every office, high and low, that is subject to Executive control.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator excited my admiration when he indicated that he was such a good sportsman, but he gave a reason for being so that rather takes away all the honor that I was going to bestow on him. He gave as the reason he was willing that we should have the spoils that he thought we would not have them very long.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course.

Mr. NORRIS. What would the Senator say if he honestly believed we were going to have them for the next 10 years? Would he still be willing that we should have them?

Mr. CARAWAY. I can not conceive that the people are going to make another such awful mistake.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that they will continue making these mistakes, because they have, I confess, had a pretty difficult time to know what to do or where to go. They got pretty tired of you.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, they are pretty tired of us, and God only knows where they can go and be satisfied. They have got to jump out of the frying pan into the fire, and they may do it; but if they do that, for the reason that they put us in office, it will not be long before they will put us back, because they will get just as tired of you as they did before.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; they never can grow as weary of anybody else as they are of this administration. Some things are possible. I am willing for the Republicans to have the offices. Will Rogers said last night, "I had a conversation with the President, and said, 'Mr. President, this administration has made lots of mistakes.' The President said, 'Yes; I appointed most of them myself.'" [Laughter.]

I am not critical about the character of men whom the Republican Party selects for office in my State, except I think they should be decent, competent citizens; and I presume most of them are; I am making no charge against them; I think they are. I do think, however, that the Republican Party ought to live up to the spirit of the law which Congress has passed, and for which the President voted before he went out of the Senate, to give ex-service men the preference where they are on the eligible list.

We said to them when we asked them to go to war that whatever good things were to be given out when the war was over, they should have them; and the present Postmaster General—or has he yet gone into the movies? I do not remember. I have not seen an interview from him recently, and I do not know whether he has gone into the movies or is just going.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know, I am sure.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, I presume nobody knows.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator from Arkansas attend the movies?

Mr. CARAWAY. Not of the kind, I think, the Postmaster General is going into. I have always gone to those—

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has probably seen his picture on the screen?

Mr. CARAWAY. No. I think there is some kind of a censorship of the movies.

The Postmaster General was quoted as saying that the American employer who, when there were good places to be given out, did not give them to the ex-service man was no longer an American. Well, I presume that applies as much to the Post Office Department as it does to a man who runs a factory, and if the Postmaster General were to be judged by his own declaration of what constitutes Americanism, and by his acts, why, God bless your soul, the Alien Property Custodian would have all his property before night, because the Postmaster General has absolutely ignored the provision of the civil service law and the spirit of the law, which directed him to give ex-service men the advantage where good jobs were to be given out, but has universally turned them down.

I do not know, and far be it from me to suggest, that the Postmaster General can not find anybody in the Republican Party who went to war; that they all stayed at home in good jobs; I would not suggest that; but he does not seem to be able to find any ex-service man in my State whose politics meets the requirements of the powers that be in my State when it comes to measuring men for public office. But, so far as I am concerned, I wish to say here and now that if I can do so I am going to make the Senate go on record in every case where an ex-service man who is entitled to an appointment by being on the eligible list has been ignored. If I can get an open executive session of the Senate, I want a record vote, so that all the world may know whether the Senate indorses the administration in turning down ex-service men who went 3,000 miles from home and offered to lay down their lives for the liberties of their country, and went with the assurance that when the war was over whatever good things might be given out would be given to them; but when they come back and ask for a little third-class or fourth-class post office they are turned down for some man who did not wear his country's uniform when the Great War was raging beyond the seas.

I do not know whether or not it is true, but I desire to cite another case occurring in another town in my county. I have letters from reputable people stating that the person whose name is now pending for confirmation as postmaster in this town, although there were two ex-service men on the eligible list, the party nominated, so the people swear—and I know those who have furnished the affidavits and I presume they tell the truth—the successful candidate lives in Tennessee.

In another case I have all the facts, including letters and copies of letters of the man himself who was nominated as postmaster of another town in my State. He is a lawyer. He claimed to help ex-service men who were disabled to obtain compensation from the Government.

A poor boy, stripped of whatever vitality he ever had by his services beyond the sea, and who is now drawing compensation for practically total disability, went to his office and asked him to write a letter to the War Risk Bureau to assist him to secure compensation. It was not at all an effective letter that was written, but the man to whom I have referred wanted the ex-soldier to pay him $25 for writing the letter. He said, "The Government has no right to fix my fees; I know enough to fix my own charges; you have got to pay, and if you do not pay"—I am not using his exact language, but I will put it in the Record—"if you do not pay, then you are not a good citizen; then you are dishonest; you must pay your honest debts." He wrote a series of letters and abused him. After he had been paid $2.50 at one time and $5 at another for the very nominal service which he had performed, he still wanted $27.50, because, he said, he took some acknowledgments. Yet, despite all these facts, the man who had vilified and abused this poor, crippled soldier boy because he would not submit to his extortion has been rewarded by being selected as postmaster, although nearly every citizen who is a patron of the office had signed petitions against his appointment. On one rural route leading out of the town, where there may be possibly 85 families, I think, something more than 80 signed a petition protesting against this appointment, but he had evidently paid his contribution and the office is his if the Senate will ratify what the Civil Service Commission and the Postmaster General have seen fit to put up to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the Senator has not yet, at least, shown that the Civil Service Commission is to blame for the appointment of the man to whom he has referred?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I can not say the Civil Service Commission is to blame.

Mr. NORRIS. But I understand the Senator is criticizing the Civil Service Commission for this particular case?

Mr. CARAWAY. Possibly the Senator's suggestion is well taken. I rather think that I wandered a bit far afield, although I am not certain but that all of this information was in the hands of the Civil Service Commission when they certified him as a perfectly proper and eligible person to be postmaster there. However, for fear that you and I may know what influenced them in giving the ratings, they now say that they have all of this information under a pledge of secrecy, and we can not see it.

Mr. President, all that I have said is drawn out in my opposition to the increasing of the salaries of the Civil Service Commissioners; and, as my understanding is that the amendment to increase their salaries is to be withdrawn, I yield the floor.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, just a word. As a member of the Civil Service Committee of the Senate, in the absence of the chairman, I wish to say that I am sure that in the very near future that committee will make a painstaking examination of the matter referred to by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and by some other Senators, and I feel sure that we will do as near what is right and just in the matter as can be done.

Just one other word in regard to the increase in salaries for the Civil Service Commission proposed in the bill. I have not read the testimony and am not able to speak very fully in regard to it; but I know, Mr. President and Senators, that after very careful investigation the Civil Service Committee has reported to the Senate a bill to reclassify all the employees of the Government, and under the terms of that bill the Civil Service Commission is given charge of that reclassification. It is charged with very onerous, important, and difficult duties.

I am not here to defend the present personnel of the commission or to say anything in the world about that. If they have done wrong, I am sure they will be held accountable for it. I know nothing about that; but I am here to say that in my humble opinion we would make a great mistake not to approve the proposed increase of the salaries paid those commissioners from $5,000 to $6,000, because of the very heavy additional duties we are going to put upon them in a few days.

The measure is entirely a nonpartisan one. It has already passed the House, and I am quite sure it will pass the Senate; and it is a measure that is in the interest of good administration. It ought to be passed, beyond any question. I shall not discuss it now, but it adds tremendously to the duties and the importance of the Civil Service Commission, and I, for one, believe they ought to have the increase recommended by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire what amendment is before the Senate at this time?

Mr. WARREN. This amendment is the one that was passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to strike out and insert from lines 16 to 25 on page 33 was adopted.

Mr. WARREN. I beg pardon, but we have not finished the bill itself. We have not had a vote upon the matter of the salary of the three Civil Service Commissioners.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the question is upon the motion of the Senator from Utah for the reconsideration of the vote to which the Chair has referred.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I did not know that the Senator desired to address the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand, the motion before the Senate deals with one feature of this bill relating to the Shipping Board. The House bill provided that not more than six officers or employees of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation "shall be paid an annual salary or compensation in excess of $11,000, but no compensation or salary shall exceed $25,000." As I understand the Senate committee amendment, that provision is stricken out, and we are now asked to support a provision stating that not more than 13 officers or employees, including 7 attorneys, shall be paid an annual salary or compensation in excess of $11,000. May I inquire of the Senator why this change was made and also what interpretation is placed by the committee upon the Senate amendment concerning the limitation of $25,000?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, first we are restoring just what the subcommittee and the committee of the House put in their bill. Late in the consideration of the bill, in fact after days had been spent on it, and late in the afternoon, as it is here now, with a very small attendance of the House, they changed this provision, and put it in the shape of the matter which we struck out. We thought it better to reinstate what the House had done, after considering the showing that had been made in the testimony and especially in the concrete form of it. The House item reduced the salaries of three or four of the men who have had $35,000, and, of course, would prevent more than six altogether getting over $11,000.

There are cases as to these claims of $300,000,000 where the opponents of the Shipping Board are employing lawyers who are paid very many times $35,000 a year. They are making tremendous fees, and of course the lawyers for the Shipping Board are protecting the largest business in the world. There is no other business as large as this shipping business, with the amount of capital invested in it, and it is a competitive business against all the world, and they have to have suits brought in all sorts of places and under all sorts of conditions. It is necessary to have, for instance, a vice president in charge of the traffic. It is necessary to have another in charge of operations, another in charge of commerce, and so forth, and so forth. And I will say that the Shipping Board did not take advantage of the authority to employ six at $35,000. They did not have six at $35,000. They had only two at $35,000 and one at $25,000 and, I think, one or two at $12,000, as I remember now. We felt that we had better put it back as the House committee had it, and when it goes to conference both matters will be there, and then we can see whether they were right or whether, just in the storm of passing the bill at the last moment with perhaps 15 or 20 Members present, those Members were right. That was our object in putting in this amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. KING. Yes; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not had an opportunity to look up the matter fully, but, as I understand, before the last bill was passed the Shipping Board had seven attorneys who were getting, I think, $15,000; at any rate, it had seven attorneys who were getting more than $11,000.

Mr. KING. As I recall, some were getting $17,000, others $20,000, and Mr. Bullitt was getting $20,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Possibly so. These men have been prevailed upon to stay during the present year at $11,000.

Mr. KING. That is, 13 of them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I am talking about the seven attorneys that the Senate provided for. I am assured by the chairman of the Shipping Board that these men say they will not stay any longer than this year. They have the business pretty well in hand, and it would seem that we would probably lose much more than the additional salary if there should be a disorganization of the board and these men should quit and we should have to get in a lot of other men. It may be possible that we would get men who would render just as good service as these. I do not know a man who can say positively that we could or that we could not; but there is not any question about the tremendously important character of the legal work that must be done or of the very great amount of it, or of the vital interests of the Government at stake. I am satisfied that if the Senator or I were at the head of a big organization like this as a private owner we would not hesitate for one moment at the amount of money that is proposed to be paid to these men during the next year.

It was really to meet that situation, I think, that the Senate committee made the provision that it did. As the chairman has said, it is a matter that we hope to go into very carefully in conference. I know that a year ago the House committee was very much opposed to this increase. I remember very distinctly that this was the situation.

The House reported, I think, provision for not more than three employees over a certain salary. The Senate cut that out and left it open, leaving it entirely to the Shipping Board to determine the number or the salaries of their employees. In conference the House finally agreed to the limitation of six above $11,000. They would not go any further than that. When they went over this matter before the House committee the Shipping Board made such a strong case that they evidently convinced the House subcommittee of the need of at least 13 men at salaries over $11,000.

Mr. KING. Seven of those will be attorneys?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KING. And the other six will consist of whom?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is the head of the traffic bureau and the operating man.

Mr. KING. Mr. Kimball, Mr. Smull, Mr. Love?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Smull and Mr. Love and Mr. Frye. They are the three $35,000 men. They each hold extremely responsible positions, as the Senator knows. Then there is one man up in New York, I think, who gets $25,000, or probably more. I am not sure about that. At any rate, we allowed only the six in the last bill. Upon the showing made before the House committee, that committee reported 13; and the Senator knows enough about the House committee to know that there must have been a very strong case made showing the need of increasing that limitation. The Senate committee thought, on the showing made and in view of the action of the subcommittee of the House, that this was the wise thing to do. I think so very strongly myself.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington, while he is detailing the action of the House subcommittee on this subject, if he is willing to state what the action of the Senate subcommittee was on this subject?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was not on the Senate subcommittee, and I do not remember. I think the Senate subcommittee did not report in favor of that. I think that was the case. I have no objection to the Senator reporting what the Senate subcommittee did, because he was a member of the Senate subcommittee and I was not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I suppose it ought to appear in the RECORD at this time or some other time that the Senate subcommittee agreed with the action of the House that there should be a limitation upon these salaries of not exceeding $25,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; the subcommittee agreed to the action of the House; but I want to appeal to the Senator from Utah, who knows the proceedings in the House and how things are done there, and how apt amendments of this character are to get in a bill upon the floor of the House, and how carefully the subcommittees go into these matters, and the weight that should be attached to the recommendations of the subcommittees. I have my opinion about it. It may be different from that of the Senator from Utah; but I want to say that the action of the subcommittee of the House, based as it was upon hearing the testimony given by the representatives of the Shipping Board, and carefully considering all that testimony, is entitled to far greater weight upon a matter of this importance than the action of the House itself.

Mr. KING. The Senator can not contend that it was entitled to far greater weight than the action of the subcommittee of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not questioning the action of the subcommittee of the Senate; but it is true, and the Senator from New Mexico will bear me out in the statement, that that subcommittee did not give to the matter the extended consideration that the House committee did in this whole Shipping Board proposition. The House committee took testimony for weeks, four or five hundred pages in length, and while it may be that the subcommittee of the Senate arrived at a fairer and a juster conclusion than the House, yet my judgment is that there is not a Senator here who, if he had in his charge a business of a hundredth part of the value and the intricacy of this Shipping Board business, would hesitate for one moment on a question of an eleven-thousand-dollar or a fifteen-thousand-dollar salary for one, two, or half a dozen men, or more than that.

Mr. KING. I would like to say to the Senator that I have made inquiries, and it is my opinion that if Judge Payne had remained with the Shipping Board six months longer he would have settled all of the claims thus far handled and settled by the new régime and most of those not yet disposed of; and it is also my opinion that his adjustments and settlements would have been of greater advantage to the Government than those effected by the new legal department.

The Shipping Board was in a chaotic condition when Judge Payne was called to its aid. He was making great changes and working great reforms when he was named to succeed Secretary Lane in the Interior Department. The new administration has received millions of money from appropriations and now asks $150,000,000 more.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator can get into no controversy with me over what Judge Payne might have done or would have done or anything of the kind. Nevertheless I have my own opinion as to what the results would have been, and I believe the Government of the United States would have been out millions and millions of dollars which it is going to save by proper action now.

I think I know what I am talking about, because I have been in close touch with the Shipping Board organization during the last three or four years. I know something about how these matters have been settled, and I know something about what the Government has lost by reason of action which has been taken in the past; but it is in the past, and it is gone, and I am not going to spend any time upon it. What I want Congress to do is to look in the face the conditions which confront us.

The record shows the very large number of suits which are pending, involving hundreds of millions of dollars of claims against the Government, which must be defended by attorneys. It may be that they can be properly defended by attorneys getting $3,000 or $4,000. It may be that five or six such attorneys can look after this business. I want to say that if I had this business I would not let my interests rest in the hands of three or four or five thousand dollar men, if I could get men at higher salaries. I would not take a man who would offer to do it for $5,000 or $6,000 a year, because I would feel pretty well satisfied that he was not competent to protect my interests and the interests of the Government.

If we are going to tie the hands of the Shipping Board by saying "You can not keep these men whom you have and who have charge of these cases; we are going to make you get rid of these men and take some other men, or else make these men work for eight or ten or eleven thousand dollars a year," we might just as well throw up our hands, so far as establishing a merchant marine, or so far as protecting the interests of this Government against the claims that have been made against it, is concerned.

It probably is not an argument at all, but I want to say that if I were on the Shipping Board and Congress were to take such action as that with me, I would quit the next day and let Congress run it. We can not expect these men to go on month after month and year after year and bear the criticisms they have to bear and which they are bearing, doing the work they are doing, toiling day and night, and worrying over these things, honestly trying to protect the rights and interests of the Government of the United States, and when they come to Congress and tell what they feel they need to take care of the business of the Government, have Congress deliberately say, "You do not know what you are talking about. You do not know what you need. We know better what you ought to have than you do, and we do not propose to give you the assistance and the aid and the help which you think you ought to have." They would be justified in saying, "We will have to give up." As a matter of fact, if we do not do what these men reasonably think we ought to do to uphold their hands and help them, and they make a failure, they can very well say that Congress was to blame for the failure, and that the board were not. I would like to see them put in such a position that, when an accounting is made, if there is a failure, we can lay the cause of the failure at their doors.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not care to discuss this matter at present, but I think I ought to say, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Washington, that the testimony which was taken by the House subcommittee was all before the subcommittee of the Senate when it was considering this question.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, everybody concedes the importance of the work assigned the Shipping Board. Few persons are satisfied with its record; most persons believe that record is very bad. There are many who believe that no matter what reforms may be wrought the work of the board will prove disappointing and its attempt to operate a merchant fleet will continue to be a frightful expense and a colossal failure. Billions have been lost and hundreds of millions more will be swallowed up in this monumental failure. Of course, the present board are not chargeable with the defaults of their predecessors. They inherited a situation which called for men of courage and ability, and those now in control are entitled to fair treatment and a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate what they can do.

Congress and the country have been patient with the new administration of the Shipping Board. There has been a sincere desire to see some improvement and to discuss evidence that the huge investment of three and a half billions of dollars will not be entirely lost. It was thought that there would be an end to the demands for appropriations to keep alive this inert and clumsy object, known as the Government-owned merchant marine and Emergency Fleet Corporation. But we are doomed to disappointment. Millions follow millions—the huge creature seems unappeasable. Its appetite for food from the taxpayers of the country is insatiable. This bill carries directly and indirectly $150,000,000. And, of course, there is no assurance that further appropriations will not be made. Indeed, I believe that every Senator expects that the Treasury will be called upon to meet further demands from the Shipping Board.

There are fewer ships controlled by the Shipping Board engaged in ocean traffic than there were one year ago. The new administration has tied more ships to the docks and evolved a costly and extensive organization. The Senator from Washington yesterday spoke with enthusiasm of its "achievements." I am interested to find out what they are. There may be important gains secured by the new régime. I hope so. I am anxious to perceive them. The country will be glad to obtain their benefits. The gains and achievements are so important to the country that we must appropriate directly more than $100,000,000 at a time when the country is burdened with debt and the people are groaning beneath the heavy Federal and State tax exactions, and, in addition, grant the board the authority to use $55,000,000, which is due from various Governments, including the United States, and corporations.

In other words, $155,000,000 more must be poured into the cavern which has drawn approximately three and a half billions from the people. However, I desire to do no injustice to any of those now connected with the administration of the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation. I feel certain that there are men of the highest character connected with these organizations, and that they are endeavoring to bring to a successful conclusion the enterprise in which they are engaged.

But I doubt the wisdom of some of their policies, and see difficulties, if not defeat, in their pathway.

Knowing that the people will not be willing to have the present unsatisfactory condition continued, a propaganda is being waged to secure the passage of an act to give subsidies to American ships. It is felt by some, doubtless, that subsidies to privately owned ships will be less objectionable than a continuation of a policy which locks ships in the harbors and votes tens of millions from the Treasury annually to meet the expenses of keeping up an expensive organization.

Mr. President, I have carefully read all of the testimony taken by the various committees of the House and Senate relating to the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board—testimony covering hundreds, if not thousands, of pages, and extending over a period of more than four years—and I can not help but feel that no activity of the United States has ever been so wasteful and extravagant as that which relates to the construction and operation of the ships controlled by the Shipping Board.

During the past week I have read the testimony taken by the House Appropriations Committee, consisting of several hundred pages, and I can not reach any other conclusion than that there is now extravagance in the Shipping Board. It is too finely organized; there are, in my opinion, needless employees and many persons who are receiving compensation greatly in excess of what is fair and reasonable.

I might say in passing that an examination of this volume which I have before me, beginning with the statement of Mr. Lasker, at page 798, and concluding on page 1175, shows that there is such an arrangement of the testimony, of the data, and the figures that it is very difficult to ascertain with any degree of certainty just what the board has done and is doing and what the costs of operation are.

If it were not so late, I should call attention to the vast number of organizations, assistants, heads of unnumbered departments or divisions of employees, officials, big and little, great and small, but always numerous, the large amounts which they receive, the enormous expenditures made, for the purpose of impressing upon the Senate, if I could, how insincere or, at least, how inaccurate are the claims of economy in connection with the present administration of the Shipping Board and how hollow and worthless are the protestations that the administration in power is devoted to economy and reform.

Mr. President, I shall say no more upon this particular item. I shall not call for a quorum, because most of the Senators have gone home owing to the lateness of the hour, although I shall ask for a vote. Before the vote is taken I should like to be advised by the Senator having the bill in charge whether he will accept as an amendment to the committee amendment the last sentence found in the House text, which is stricken out, to wit, "but no compensation or salary shall exceed $25,000," so that as amended it would provide for 13 officers and employees, including 7 attorneys, who might be paid annual salaries or compensation exceeding $11,000 but not exceeding $25,000.

Mr. WARREN. I am willing that the Senator should have a vote on both propositions, but I shall ask for a division of the vote. I would not feel at liberty, on the part of the committee, to accept the amendment.

Mr. KING. I will then withdraw that amendment and tender an amendment to the amendment of the committee to add at the end of that amendment the words "but no compensation or salary shall exceed $25,000."

Mr. WARREN. The Senator may have two votes, one on this and then one on the committee amendment. I could not accept the amendment as offered.

Mr. KING. I do not ask the Senator to accept it, but I ask if he has any objection to my withdrawing my motion now, which would involve the Senate amendment as it now stands, and perfecting it by offering that amendment. I will do that anyway, Mr. President. I move to amend the Senate amendment as I have suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not in order until there is a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I took it for granted that it was always the rule where Senators were called out on official business, as I was, attending another committee meeting, and an amendment is passed, to reconsider the vote pro forma.

Mr. WARREN. I understood from what the Senator stated that he did not vote for the amendment. I thought he asked unanimous consent that the vote be reconsidered, and I supposed he had received it. I appeal to the Chair to know whether the Senator asked unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah withdraws his motion to reconsider, and asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to shall be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I move to amend the committee amendment by adding at the close thereof the following words:

But no compensation or salary shall exceed $25,000.

Mr. WARREN. I shall ask for a division. That is a privilege always accorded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 33, line 25, to add at the end of the committee amendment, the part to be inserted, the following words:

But no compensation or salary shall exceed $25,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator does not want the consideration of the bill to go over for another day.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I feel rather keenly about this amendment.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator wants to force the bill over to another day, of course he has that right.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am very anxious to accommodate the distinguished Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say to the Senator that it is hardly a personal accommodation to me. We must have an end of these measures in order to keep up with the work before our committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico demands the yeas and nays on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not know that I shall insist upon the demand. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico demands a division.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the question to be on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote is about to be taken on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Which would prevent the payment of more than $25,000 to any one person as compensation.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to strike out, in line 21, page 33, the word "thirteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten," so that it will limit the number who will get this tremendous amount and reduce the number to 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I now move to amend the committee amendment by inserting at the close thereof the following:

But no compensation or salary exceeding $20,000 shall be paid to any of said 13 officers or employees.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. I now offer the following amendment. The distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] says that this is silly. I know it is silly to attempt any economy.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator refers to the junior Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KING. Yes; the junior Senator from Missouri. Of course, the senior Senator from Missouri would not say that. I know it is silly to attempt any economies or retrenchments in these appropriation bills, but at the expense of being charged with a silly effort by the distinguished junior Senator from Missouri I shall make one more effort.

Let me say that under the present law a number of officials of the Shipping Board are obtaining $35,000 salaries. Those who have voted against the amendments which I have suggested approve of that course. There is no limitation. The Shipping Board could pay $50,000 if they desired to do so, but in their desire for economy and in the plentitude of their mercy for the poor taxpayers of the United States they have restricted it to $35,000.

I shall make one more effort which my friend will denominate as silly. I move to add at the close of line 25, page 33, the following:

But no compensation or salary shall exceed $30,000, and that amount shall not be paid to exceed three persons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to congratulate the people of the United States upon having here such faithful guardians who protect the interests of the people and the oppressed taxpayers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 33, after line 20, insert the following:

Not more than 13 officers or employees, including 7 attorneys, of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be paid an annual salary or compensation in excess of $11,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course we did not ask for a yea-and-nay vote on that question, but it pains us to the very core to think that of all the distinguished Republicans who are present on the other side only one, the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], voted with the solid phalanx on this side of the aisle to help the taxpayers of the country and to repudiate these extravagant expenditures of money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment passed over on page 5, line 19, which will be stated.

Mr. KING. I would like to challenge attention to the item which we have been considering, namely, the Shipping Board fund. I can recur to it after disposing of the item just suggested by the Chair, if it is preferred by the chairman of the committee. I wanted to move and shall move to strike out all of item (d) on page 32.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator obtained leave to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to?

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact that this item was previously disposed of, to reconsider the vote by which the amendment in line 2, page 32, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which that amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I now move to strike out the item (d), found on page 32, which provides—and (d) $55,000,000 from moneys collected from mortgages, leases, accounts and bills receivable other than those arising from current operations, and from moneys collected from the sale of ships, plants, material, securities, and other assets, prior to July 1, 1923, less such portion of said $55,000,000 which shall have been collected during the fiscal year 1922 under the provisions of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1921.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. I stated the matter conversely.

I do not propose to be hurried in the presentation of this matter very briefly. This item gives to the Shipping Board $55,000,000. On the preceding page we appropriate $100,000,000, so that, if I read the bill correctly—and if my interpretation is wrong, I hope I shall be corrected by the chairman of the committee—we are called upon to appropriate and do appropriate $155,000,000 to the Shipping Board for the coming year.

Mr. WARREN. Fifty million dollars of that amount is for the settlement of adjusted claims. There is only $50,000,000 outside of the $55,000,000, and that $55,000,000, or collections thereon, is provided for in the law of last year. They have collected only a small amount.

Mr. KING. They have collected between five and six million dollars.

Mr. WARREN. And they will collect perhaps less this year, so there is really only $50,000,000 appropriated for the Shipping Board, other than the amount involved in the claims.

Mr. KING. I am not quite sure of all the deductions to be drawn from the statement of the Senator. I call attention to the testimony of Mr. Montgomery, the expert for the Shipping Board, and it is practically the same testimony as that given by Mr. Lasker. It is found on page 142 of the hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session. We find there at the time this testimony was given, or at least on June 20, 1921, a statement of estimated quick assets consisting of cash on hand $36,145,852; notes and accounts, foreign Governments, $31,400,000; United States Government departments, $15,300,000; United States relief organization, $900,000; vessel purchasers, $143,700,000; individuals, firms, and corporations, $96,000,000; investments and loans, $87,000,000; materials, supplies, ship stores, and so forth, $90,000,000.

So that on June 30 of last year there were quick assets in the hands of Mr. Lasker, or of the board, aggregating $500,445,852. That is a fund which has been made available for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the Shipping Board. That is made available to the extent of the cash on hand, plus $55,000,000. In addition to that fund we are now asked to appropriate in cash $100,000,000; and—

For expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, for administrative purposes, miscellaneous adjustments, losses due to the maintenance and operation of ships, for the tie-up, reconditioning and repair of ships, and for carrying out the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, (a) the amount on hand July 1, 1922; (b) $50,000,000.

The amount on hand July 1, 1922, I presume would be $36,000,000, plus the $50,000,000 cash which we are now called upon to appropriate. Then follows the $55,000,000 to which my motion is directed.

Then on page 32 for the payment of claims, damage charges, and miscellaneous adjustments, authorized under the provisions of the merchant marine act, 1920, we as asked to appropriate $50,000,000 more. So that, as I stated at the outset, the bill carries appropriations amounting to $155,000,000, plus.

What has become of these assets, these quick and liquid assets? It may be responded that they have not been collected. We were told by Mr. Montgomery and Mr. Lasker, when they testified last year, that there was a vast amount of material, supplies, ships' stores, and so forth, on hand which would be available for sale and that the proceeds derived therefrom, as I recall the testimony, could be utilized in paying some of the claims against the Government. These materials were estimated to be worth $90,000,000.

What has become of that $90,000,000? What has become of the $36,000,000 of cash on hand, plus the larger appropriation carried in the former deficiency appropriation bill, the amount of which I have just forgotten? What has become of the sum due from foreign Governments amounting to $31,400,000? What has become of the $15,300,000 due from various departments of the Government of the United States to the Shipping Board? Have those amounts been collected?

What has been collected from the purchasers who were owing to the Government $143,700,000? What has become of the $96,000,000 due to the Shipping Board from individuals, firms, and corporations? Five hundred million dollars were there as quick, liquid, available assets. What disposition has been made of them?

Mr. President, we are asked to make this enormous appropriation in the face of the testimony which was given at the former hearing which indicated, as I recall, that the demands to be made upon the Government for future appropriations would be very much less than those which are sought by the pending bill.

I can not understand the attitude of Senators allowing these enormous appropriations to go through without due consideration. We are asked to appropriate, and we do appropriate without discussion, $155,000,000 for this agency which has already consumed money out of the Treasury to the amount of more than $3,350,000,000 or $3,400,000,000. I should like some explanation, aside from the necessity of making the appropriation, why we should be willing to make an appropriation of this character, leaving it to the individuals in charge of the board to which the appropriation is made to utilize it as they see fit. If these vast sums are due, they should be collected, and turned into the Treasury, and then Congress should make appropriations, so that it would know just exactly what it is called upon to appropriate.

As I have indicated, it apparently seems to be the purpose of the committee to treat the $500,000,000 of available assets as a fund which may be used by the Shipping Board without making due returns to Congress or, at any rate, covering any of these funds into the Treasury of the United States. It seems to me that it is unwise to give such authority to any agency of the Government, no matter how competent or efficient or honest that agency may be.

If $55,000,000 is due the Government—and that and a great deal more is due—it ought to be collected and turned into the Treasury of the United States. Then if we have got to make appropriations for this great organization, whose demands seem to be insatiable, we ought to make the appropriations deliberately from the Treasury of the United States, with full knowledge of the burdens and the liabilities and, of course, of the purposes for which the money is to be used.

I ask the Senate, Mr. President, to reject this amendment, which gives to the Shipping Board the authority to use $55,000,000 without any supervisory power from any agency of the Government, as well as the $100,000,000 which we are asked to appropriate by the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted on page 3, line 4, inserting the words "and official entertainment" in the clause making an appropriation of $25,000 "for traveling and official entertainment expenses of the President of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the committee amendment in lines 4 and 5, on page 3, was agreed to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The question now is upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the committee amendment which was passed over, which the Secretary will state.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 5, line 19, under the heading "Civil Service Commission," the committee proposes to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$6,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. Let us have a division on that, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. I understood that amendment was to go out of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. No; I said that after the Senator made his remarks, inasmuch as he would then have expressed himself on the subject, it would be all right to vote on it, and let it go out, if the Senate so decided.

Mr. CARAWAY. I certainly misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I am sorry the Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from North Carolina understood that it was not to be insisted upon.

Mr. CARAWAY. That was the understanding I had.

Mr. KING. I will have to suggest the absence of a quorum if the amendment is insisted upon.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask the Senator not to make that suggestion.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, rather than have any misunderstanding of the matter, I would prefer to have the amendment go out. I do not wish to have any Senator think that there has been any unfair advantage taken.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I am not making any accusation against the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that.

Mr. CARAWAY. But I so thoroughly understood that the amendment was to go out that I made no point of it.

Mr. WARREN. I am sorry the Senator misunderstood anything that I have said. The facts are as I have stated them; but if any Senators have an idea that I am not fair about the matter, why let it go out. I think, however, that we ought to take a vote on it and have a division.

Mr. KING. I withhold my suggestion for a moment.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to say to the Senator from Wyoming that I am not standing here in the position of criticizing him, for I entertain for him a very high regard, but it was my understanding, as well as the understanding of other Senators, that the amendment was to go out.

Mr. KING. I do not want to call for a quorum, but I will have to unless the amendment does go out.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there seem to be two angles to the situation now. One is a misunderstanding with the Senator from Arkansas, for whom I have great respect. I would dislike very much to seem to offend any of the proprietaries. Furthermore, another Senator proposes that he will have to call for a quorum, which he knows and we all know will take a very long time.

Mr. KING. A number of Senators left here with the understanding, which has been expressed, and it will be only fair to them that they be recalled if that understanding is not adhered to.

Mr. WARREN. Let the amendment go out. If there is one attribute that I want to establish here beyond others, it is fairness on my part in the conduct of the appropriation bills which happen to be in my charge. While I believe that the Civil Service Commissioners should have the amount proposed by the amendment, and even $7,500, as estimated—not the individuals particularly, but the offices, and while they are occupying the offices—at the same time we seem to be in a position where we will have to pass it over and make the increases when we come to the efficiency rating measure, which will, I presume, comprehend all salaries up to those of Cabinet officers. So I will permit the amendment to be rejected, and shall hope to reach it in another way at a later date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 6, in line 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the amendment, on page 6, line 10, will be disagreed to. Under the unanimous-consent agreement already entered into, the Secretary will make the necessary corrections in totals.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington was not present when the item for the "National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics" was reached, on page 19. May I inquire of him, in view of the fact that there is a bill pending, which is the unfinished business, providing for the establishment of a bureau of aeronautics, whether he thinks this amount ought to be carried in the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics was created by an act passed in 1915. It is composed, I think, of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and others. It is a scientific organization. What their actual needs are, however, I do not know, although I suppose that was shown to the subcommittee. The committee, however, does not deal with practical aviation or anything of that sort, but is a purely scientific organization. I have here a description of its activities by one of its members. I quote from the statement of Joseph S. Ames, chairman of the executive committee, National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, as follows:

It was established by law in 1915, having 12 members, appointed by the President. It consists of two representatives from the Army, Gen. Patrick and Col. Bayne; two from the Navy, Admiral Moffett and Admiral Taylor; Dr. Walcott, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; Dr. Stratton, Director of the Bureau of Standards; Dr. Marvin, Chief of the Weather Bureau; and five civilians from private life.

Dr. Ames says further:

Our committee is charged primarily with the consideration and undertaking of scientific work dealing with aviation. We conduct laboratories and research institutions which look after this subject of aviation; that is, its purely scientific side.

As to the details and objects of their work I can not give the Senator the information he desires, but it must have been given to the subcommittee, of which I was not a member.

Mr. KING. I heard a great deal of criticism about the committee as a fifth wheel to the coach and as wholly unnecessary. As the Senator remembers, we have made very generous appropriations for the Army and for the Navy in connection with aeronautics, and this organization, as I have been advised—I have made no personal investigation—hardly appears to justify its existence.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not give the Senator any more information than I have given with reference to the particular organization. The Senator from Missouri, who was on the subcommittee, may enlighten the Senator further.

Mr. KING. We are about to create a bureau of aeronautics, some sort of a civil organization, under the Department of Commerce, and it occurred to me that if we have this organization functioning, and then create a bureau of aeronautics and have that functioning, and then have an organization in the Navy and in the War Department doing aeronautical work and research work. It would be an unpardonable and indefensible duplication.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the purpose of the bill which is the unfinished business does not contemplate doing the work which this organization does. The work of this organization may not be necessary; I can not say about that; I have not looked into that particularly; but the bill that is pending to create a bureau of aeronautics does not do the work, at any rate, that this Dr. Ames says this organization does and was created to do. This organization may not be necessary; I do not know; I do not pretend to say; I have not examined that question.

Mr. KING. May I ask the attention of the Senator from Missouri for just a moment? My information is not full enough to justify me in moving to strike it all out, but, in order that that matter may be fully considered in conference will the Senator consent to an amendment striking out "$200,000" and inserting "$150,000"? If that is done in conference the situation may be carefully considered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to interrupt the Senator, if he will permit me.

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that this is all necessary, although I have not heard anything to indicate that it is. It occurs to me that none of it is necessary.

Mr. KING. That is my information, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the motion ought to be made in the Senate to strike out the entire provision. We are in a position now where we can do nothing else, because the provision is in the House text; so that the way to get it properly before the conference is to strike it all out. The difference between the $200,000 and $150,000 would not reach the meat of the matter.

Mr. WARREN. I have consulted with my colleague on the committee who has charge of a bill, which will come up later, in regard to the proposed Bureau of Aeronautics, and, with the understanding that the matter shall be considered in conference, I am willing that the amendment may go out entirely.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, I move to strike it all out, commencing with line 8, on page 19, including the remainder of the page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 7, it is proposed to strike out:

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS.

For scientific research, technical investigations, and special reports in the field of aeronautics, including the necessary laboratory and technical assistants; traveling expenses of members and employees; office supplies, printing, and other miscellaneous expenses, including technical periodicals and books of reference; equipment, maintenance, and operation of a research laboratory, known as the Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory; maintenance and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; personal services in the field and in the District of Columbia; in all, $200,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for clerical, drafting, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, shall not exceed $42,000.

For the construction of an additional laboratory building necessary in connection with the operation of the research laboratory, $10,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish now to call up a conference report, which will take but a moment—the conference report on the Treasury Department appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20 and 21.

F. E. WARREN,
W. L. JONES,
WM. J. HARRIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator just one question? All the matters in disagreement have been agreed upon?

Mr. WARREN. Everything had been agreed upon except these two items, on which we recede to the House, thus cutting out the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Treasury vault and $500,000 for an archives building.

Mr. HARRISON. This is a final report?

Mr. WARREN. It is a final report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, in amount $52,000, for rent of suitable buildings in the District of Columbia, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a copy of the second annual report of the Perry's Victory Memorial Commission, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

S. 2994. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakely Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.," approved October 5, 1917;

S. J. Res. 99. Joint resolution providing a site upon public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., for the erection of a statue of Dante; and

S. J. Res. 140. Joint resolution relative to payment of tuition for Indian children enrolled in Montana State public schools.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably from the Committee on Commerce House bill 9931, extending the time for completing the construction of a bridge over the Delaware River and to submit a report (No. 491) thereon. The passage of this bill is very urgently desired by the Senators from Pennsylvania. It is the regular routine permission with regard to the construction of bridges, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the bridge authorized by act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, to be built by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co. across the Delaware River near the city of Trenton, N. J., which has heretofore been extended by Congress to August 24, 1922, is hereby extended for a further period of three years from the last-named date.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 3138) to provide for the appointment of commissioners of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3139) to license insurance brokers, agents, and solicitors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3140) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to extend the time for payment of construction charges under Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3141) to amend an act entitled "An act to revise and equalize rates of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, to certain widows, including widows of the War of 1812, former widows, dependent parents, and children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases," approved May 1, 1920; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 to aid the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind, located at 1808 H Street NW., Washington, D. C., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10101, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WARREN. If there is nothing more for consideration now, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HEFLIN. Are we not going to have an executive session?

Mr. WARREN. Not to-night.

I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 13, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 11, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose life is the light of men, again Thou hast touched the old earth with a heavenly glow. We thank Thee for rich privileges; and may we rise to their opportunities and to their call. Impress us that anything but genuine fidelity to them, which is an active relation, is failure, and sullies the page of life with forbidding fingers. Before Thee we are so limited and dependent that the silence of necessity is with us. With our ever-present labors may our zeal never slacken, our faith never weaken, and our love never grow cold. O broaden and deepen the range of our understanding and our moral natures. Strengthen our wills for the right. Chasten our pride and continue to fit us for strong and acceptable service for our country that has so honored us. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ASSOCIATION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2373) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products, and move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up from the Speaker's table H. R. 2373 and moves to concur in the Senate amendments. The clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman please explain the effect of the Senate amendments?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. These amendments, with the possible exception of the first one, do not make any change in the bill as we intended to pass it in the House. The effect of that amendment is this: In the bill as it passed the House there was no specific limit upon the amount of farm products in which these associations might deal. Under this amendment they can only deal in an amount of such products of nonmembers equal to the amount of products dealt in for members of the association. In that respect it limits the scope of these associations; but it is not believed that that limitation will interfere with their operation.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman think the bill is better as it comes back from the Senate than it was when it went over there?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think it is practically the same. I do not believe it is changed much one way or the other. That is the general opinion of those who have examined it.

In connection with what I desire to say in regard to this legislation, I may be permitted to offer some observations on legislation that this Congress has passed in the interest of agriculture, and to emphasize the need of that industry for relief.

In this industrial depression it has been noticed that the more thoroughly an industry is organized the less it has suffered and the less its prices have been deflated. This was noticeable in the dairy industry, which is more largely controlled by cooperative farm organization than any other branch of industry except that of certain fruit growers. Milk, cream, and butter have maintained a much higher average of prices than many other farm products. In this country, until within the last few years, farmers have made but little effort to combine, though those with whom they have had to deal are combined in large corporations. At the beginning of the last Congress a bill was introduced for the purpose of giving to the farmers the privilege of combining, so that they might offer their products in cooperation with each other. Hearings were held by the Judiciary Committee, of which I have the honor of being chairman, but the bill failed to receive the necessary support. After consulting with officers of various farm organizations so as to get their views, I drafted a bill which, after being approved by those officers, I introduced and succeeded in passing in the House, but it was so amended in the Senate that in my view it would defeat its purpose, and it consequently failed of passage at that time. I again introduced this bill in the early part of the first session of this Congress and then secured its passage in the House. It has been pending in the Senate for many months. The Senate again sought to amend it, and a prolonged fight was provoked over those amendments.

The farmers are not seeking a chance to oppress the public, but insist that they should be given an opportunity to meet business conditions as they exist, a condition that is very unfair under the present law. When a farmer seeks to sell his products he meets in the market place the representatives of vast aggregations of organized capital that largely determine the price of his products. Personally he has seldom anything to say about the price. If he seeks to associate himself with his neighbor for the purpose of collectively negotiating for a fair price, he is threatened with criminal prosecution. Corporations with which he is compelled to deal, such as grain-elevator companies and the packers, may be composed of thirty to forty thousand members. These members collectively do business as one person. The officers of the corporation act as agents of such members. This bill, if it becomes a law, will allow farmers to form like associations, the officers of which will act as agents for their members. Business corporations have under existing law like powers and privileges to those sought to be conferred on farm organizations by this bill. The measure does not seek to grant a class privilege, but aims to equalize existing privileges by changing the law applicable to business corporations so farmers can take advantage of it.

A number of States have passed laws allowing farmers to collectively bargain for the sale of their products, among which are Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, New York, and Pennsylvania; but the State can not give these associations the right to enter interstate and foreign commerce, hence the necessity for this legislation.

Like associations have been very successful in some of the European countries, and there is no reason to believe that they can not be made equally successful in this country. The agricultural press and the officers of the farm organizations have everywhere indorsed this bill. Personally, I believe that it will prove of great value. To give you some idea of the importance that representative farm organizations attach to this legislation I shall insert in the Record a letter that I received from officers of such associations. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 9, 1922.

HON. A. J. VOLSTEAD,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. VOLSTEAD: We heartily congratulate you and those associated with you on the passage of H. R. 2373, the farmers' collective marketing bill. When in the last Congress, now some two years ago, you drafted and introduced this bill it met, as we all remember, very vigorous opposition, an opposition that was strong enough to defeat it in the Senate at that time. In this Congress you again introduced and caused its passage in the House by an overwhelming majority, and, due in large measure to your firm stand for the House bill in conference, to your persistence and your loyalty to the interests of the farmers, it was possible to renew the fight in the Senate, where it this week finally passed by a like overwhelming majority.

We consider this measure a forward step of the very highest value to agriculture, and we hope now to effect by self-help of the character permitted by this bill a fairer marketing condition for agricultural products.

Very respectfully, yours,

MILO D. CAMPBELL,
President National Milk Producers' Federation.
JOHN D. MILLER,
Chairman Executive Committee,
National Board of Farm Organizations.
T. C. ATKESON,
National Grange Representative.
GREY SILVER,
American Farm Bureau Federation.

I want to again emphasize what you already know, namely, the deplorable condition in which the farmers find themselves financially. The difficulties can not very well be overestimated. I have reason to know from actual experience what the situation is. I own a farm near my home, and though this farm will average with the ordinary farms in that locality, which is one of the best farming sections in the State, it did not pay much more than the taxes against the land during the last two years. There is no mistaking the necessity for any relief that Congress can give if a very large number of the farms are not to be sold under foreclosure sales. Bankruptcy is staring a large number of farmers in the face.

The late war had the usual effect of inflating prices. When the end came the supply of articles needed for peace-time use were scant and the demand forced prices still higher; the ease with which money could be borrowed from the Federal reserve system greatly aggravated the situation. The speculator and the profiteer took prompt advantage of the opportunity to fleece the public. It was inevitable that following this boom there should be an industrial depression, as every boom is followed by such a depression. In this instance the depression is world-wide, as the war involved directly or indirectly every country. The first effect of the reaction came in 1920, when mines, mills, and shops commenced to discharge a large number of their employees, and the railroads, which up to that time had been unable to care for the traffic, suddenly found themselves with idle equipment. But this depression differs somewhat from like depressions in that instead of a sudden break in the general level of prices the retail price of manufactured products remained for many months practically unchanged while the prices of many farm products fell to a level much lower than the average prewar prices. The farmer in the fall of 1920 found himself with a crop that had cost him in labor, rent, and material war prices, but which he could not sell so as to repay him what it had cost him to produce. This was not only true of the crop raised in 1920, but also of the crop of 1921.

Congress recognized this situation, and for the purpose of preventing foreign agricultural products from coming in competition with those grown at home, it replaced the Underwood tariff law, which allowed nearly all farm products to be imported free of duty, with a protective tariff. As foreign countries were in such financial straits that they could not purchase our products, Congress revived the War Finance Corporation and appropriated $500,000,000 for use in financing such purchases. This made it possible to export large quantities of such products. Later, to relieve the financial stress of the farmers in this country, the war finance act was again amended by providing that it might loan to the farmers through banks, co-operative farm organizations, and other financial institutions money to aid agricultural production. Many millions of dollars have been and are still being loaned by the Government in this way. The war finance act as so amended permits the use of the Government's credit to the extent of a billion five hundred million dollars.

The Government has also advanced many millions to the farm loan banks and Congress has amended the farm loan act so as to make it possible to sell bonds from which money can be loaned to the farmers. A joint committee of the House and Senate, of which my colleague, Representative ANDERSON, is chairman, has worked out a plan to provide a permanent means of securing to farmers long-time credit on personal property security through the farm loan banks. This should be considered and acted upon in the near future.

To prevent gambling in wheat and other farm crops Congress has passed a law to regulate and control grain exchanges, and by still another law has placed stock yards and stock exchanges all over the country under Federal supervision and control. These laws should be of substantial assistance in protecting farmers against unfair market conditions.

It has been proposed that the Grain Corporation be revived and a law passed fixing the price on certain farm products which the Government should guarantee. To the extent that this demand rests upon the industrial dislocation that is due to the war it makes a strong appeal. Is it not possible to do that as to two or three staple products? Of course I realize that there would be strong opposition from the millions of idle people in the East who are clamoring for cheap food, and that as a consequence it would be difficult to fix a price high enough to be of any value; but these idle people are interested because the market for a large share of their products is among the farmers who under the present conditions have no purchasing power. I know it is contended that Congress has no power to pass such a law, that it is only under the war powers that Congress can do that, but Congress has exercised the right to readjust the conditions created by the war, and the difficulties under which the farmers suffer are clearly due to a condition created by the war. The Committee on Agriculture of the House is now considering the question, and I hope that this plan or some other plan can be worked out that will relieve the present deplorable situation.

There can be no prosperity in this country, either East or West, until freight rates both on sea and land are lowered. Efforts have repeatedly been made to secure a reduction in railway rates, but we are met with the claim that the prices of labor and material are still too high to permit of any substantial reduction. The claim that the increases in the freight rates are due to the Esch-Cummins law ignores the fact that most of the increases took place while the roads were under Government management and before that law was passed, and that the increases made after its passage were only to meet the increase in wages allowed by the Labor Board to railway employees. The most discussed part of that law has been the so-called guaranty clause. That clause will expire the first of next month and will put an end to the unfounded claim that the Government is guaranteeing the railroads any fixed income. The roads have not made half the net profits that some said the law guaranteed to them, nor can the Government be asked to make up any such loss as there is nothing upon which it can be based. Because of the misapprehension regarding that clause among a great many people I am glad it will soon expire.

Personally I believe that lower freight rates would stimulate business and increase instead of lower railway income, and I notice that this view is being presented by the large commercial and manufacturing interests. I hope that before another crop is moved there may be a substantial reduction in freight rates.

The Great Lakes and St. Lawrence waterway to the ocean must be constructed in the near future. That it will eventually be constructed no one can doubt. It will when in operation be the most effective means of controlling freight rates, and its effect in building up the country can not be overestimated. It will bring ocean commerce into the very center of the continent and provide actual competition not only in transportation but in markets. The great financial interests in New York City are constantly diverting traffic to that port, which is said to be one of the most expensive ports in the world to enter.

Let me add, though it only affects agriculture the same as it affects other industries, I am glad that Congress has been able to make substantial reductions in the expenses of the Government. Not only millions but billions have been saved. This relief in the tax burdens will greatly help all industries; and I feel that every American citizen has reason to be gratified at the success which attended the recent conference for limitation of armaments. It will mean a reduction of many millions in taxes and has settled many difficult problems that have threatened war. While I believe that we should strive to keep down taxes, I can not justify refusing to grant to the ex-service men the adjusted compensation they ask. These men when inducted into the service had no chance to dicker for adequate compensation. They had to take what the Government gave them. Why, under those circumstances, are they not entitled to ask that the Government make up to them the amount that their pay while in the military or naval service was less than the pay they could have earned in civil life? I do not believe that the money to pay this compensation should be raised from a sales tax. Such a tax would fall much too heavily on those who can least afford to pay it. I am not able to see why an excess-profits tax would not be a proper tax for that purpose. It is in line with the policy under which we demand a proportionately higher tax from those who receive a large income than from those who receive the smaller income. Why should not a person who makes more than a reasonable rate of income be made to pay a part of his excess profits to the Government? It has been urged that this form of taxation discourages enterprise and is the cause of high prices, but that is true of all income taxes when applied to incomes derived from industry. No one suggests that such taxes be discontinued on that account.

To encourage industry and prevent money from being withdrawn from business and placed in tax-free securities the Government should have the power to impose a tax on such securities. It will require a constitutional amendment to give that authority, and such an amendment is now being framed for submission to the House.

We have a few men in Congress who would like to place a large share of all taxes on land. I am glad that Congress has nothing to do with taxes on land or personal property. Both real and personal property are taxed by the State legislatures as heavily and in many instances more heavily than they can stand.

Let me say in conclusion that a condition must be created that will give to the farmer a reasonable return on his investment, together with pay for his work. There can be no real prosperity until that is done. Agriculture is the great basic industry upon which the prosperity of all other industries depends.

THE SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 33, noes 1.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and object to the vote on that ground.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present. As many as are in favor of concurring in the Senate amendments will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 276, nays 8, answered "present" 1, not voting 145, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, Mr. VOLSTEAD had leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement I made before the Committee on Agriculture on January 31 relating to the stabilization of farm prices, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in 8-point type.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement he made before the Committee on Agriculture January 31 relating to the stabilization of farm prices and that it be printed in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10329, the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Colorado: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $11,100; contingent expenses, $500; in all, $14,600.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 8, strike out lines 8 and 9.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered is to abolish the office of surveyor general in the State of Colorado. If my amendment should be adopted,

I will offer the same amendment as to the offices in Wyoming, Washington, and Oregon. South Dakota has been eliminated from the bill by the committee. I do this for the reason that the work of surveying land in the States mentioned has progressed to such a stage that in each of the States I have mentioned the land unsurveyed is less than 8,000,000 acres. In the case of South Dakota only 301,000 acres remain unsurveyed, and the bill does not provide for that surveyor general.

For the same reason that actuated the committee in the case of the surveyor general of South Dakota I submit that we should not continue the office of surveyor general for the four offices I have mentioned, and especially in view of the fact that the Land Office, when under the control of Mr. Tallman, recommended to the Congress that they abolish the office of surveyor general in all of the States.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] two years ago offered that amendment. It was defeated. Now I wish to offer amendments which seek not to abolish them in all the States but only in those States where the work has so progressed that there is no justification for the continuance of an officer at the salary of $3,000. It can not be successfully argued that it will hamper the work, because the department head charged with the duty of carrying on this work voluntarily recommended to Congress that it be abolished, and set forth the manner in which the work could be carried on, in his opinion, even more efficiently than it is now carried on; that the surveys which are submitted to the surveyor general of the States, there examined by him and then forwarded to Washington for further examination and approval, could in case the office is abolished be forwarded directly from the field by the deputy in charge to the office in Washington and sent directly back to the States and thus time be saved. The only justification for the continuance of the office is to pay a salary of $3,000 a year to some man who holds the office.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not. Mr. Tallman made the recommendation to the Committee on Appropriations, and it was endeavored to enact it into law. The present official, Mr. Spry, when asked by the committee his opinion, as appears on page 103 of the hearings, said if he made any change at all he would only permit it to apply to the officers themselves. That is exactly what Mr. Tallman recommended, and that is exactly what the Appropriations Committee saw fit to endeavor to enact into law, and that is exactly what I am seeking to do to-day, to abolish the office. If my amendments should be adopted, then later an amendment will be offered by me providing for carrying on the work of these offices which are abolished in the manner recommended by the Land Office.

It is solely a question of whether you desire to introduce a little economy by abolishing these four offices which will mean a saving of more than $50,000 and promote efficiency.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if it is not a fact that the Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress brought in his identical proposition here, abolishing not merely one, but the offices of 13 surveyors general in 13 different States? That upon the recommendation of the majority leader of this House, who recommended to the committee that the snickersnee be applied to the appropriations, and the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood], acting on that recommendation, did use the snickersnee and cut out of the appropriation bill the appropriations for 13 of these surveyors general, and abolished 13 offices? I ask him further if it is not a fact that in the face of that action, when the majority leader learned of what had been done to the surveyor general's office in Wyoming the gentleman from Wyoming came back on the floor of this House and offered an amendment to put all 13 of them back into the bill, and by his speech of insistence secured enough votes in the Committee of the Whole to put them back? Is not that the fact?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what was said by the majority leader as to the use of the snickersnee, but I do know that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] reported the bill which provided for the abolishment of all of the surveyors general.

Mr. BLANTON. And that was done on the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, Mr. Tallman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. And it was done in the interest of economy. It was done upon the recommendation of Mr. Tallman that these offices could be better conducted from Washington by reason of the circumstances mentioned by the gentleman from South Carolina. Yet in the face of our effort and the efforts of the Republicans to effect economy, the effort to carry out the recommendations of the heads of departments, where they make recommendations for economy, we have all of these offices but one placed back in this bill. The question is whether we are going to carry them on. I agree with the gentleman from South Carolina that we ought to take them out. If we mean economy, we ought to mean it by our vote and action and not merely by the spoken word.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to say that I am not able to agree with my distinguished colleague from South Carolina that the office of surveyor general in the State of Colorado or any State other than that noted in the bill be abolished at this time. As a western man, I am just as much interested in economy as anyone in this Chamber. Two years ago there was a broad proposition brought in here to wipe out something like 13 different surveyors general's offices. It was urged that it would mean a saving of $39,000 in salaries paid to these men. We were able then to demonstrate that probably there would be no saving; but if so, it would be at tremendous inconvenience to the West. At this time we come before you with a bill that not only recognizes the surveyors general's offices, but considers other offices that involve vastly more expenditure of Government money throughout the West, and before we proceed many pages in the bill I shall show that we are proposing to abolish offices that will involve a saving of not merely $39,000, but offices which, together with salaries, rents, and other expenditures, mean a saving to this country of $128,800. The western Members generally are in favor of the proposition, and they would be in favor of this proposition if it meant that the work could be handled in an economical way, if it meant that it could be handled in a way that would appeal to the best interests of the people who are to be served. It might be a stroke of economy to abolish all of the United States district attorneys' offices throughout the United States and the offices of the United States marshals throughout the United States. It is conceivable that the work could be handled by the Department of Justice through deputies sent out to the various States. I recognize that that is theoretically possible, but it is not the businesslike or the economical thing to do. You would vote against it if the proposition should be made, even though it should be suggested that there would be a saving of some money that is now paid to the United States district attorneys and to marshals throughout the country. Here is a similar proposition. Has the time come when we may discontinue the surveyor general's office in the State of Colorado? I say that it has not. We have to-day approximately 8,000,000 acres unsurveyed in the State of Colorado. Last year that office supervised the survey of approximately 358,000 acres of land. More land remains in Colorado to-day unsurveyed than was surveyed last year in all the United States.

The office in Colorado still has reason for existence, not only in the surveying of public land but because of the mineral applications which mean mineral surveys in the great mining State of Colorado. One of the most important duties of the surveyor general of any State in the West where there is mining is that which he has to do in connection with mining surveys. He designates or lists the deputy surveyors general throughout the State. When a mining entry is sought the applicant wants a survey of his land. He takes up the matter with the surveyor general of the State and asks to have some particular man listed with that officer designated to make the survey. The mining applicant himself bears the expense of this work, but the responsibility of checking over the work of these surveyors when it may come in rests upon the surveyor general's office. If you transfer the work to the office in Washington, it means then that you are going to transfer from an immediate officer who can be reached to a distant officer work that this mining applicant is interested in. To him it means much delay. To him it may mean much expense. We touched upon that question before the subcommittee, and we were told by the officers of the department that possibly there would be no economy to the Government in the transfer of this work, but, on the other hand, we were told that possibly it would cost more; and I want to tell you that if it is questionable whether it would cost the Government more there is no question on the matter of whether it would cost the applicant in the West more to have the work done close at hand or here in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. I want to call attention to the attitude of the department. We did not discuss this question with officers of the department so far as this specific office is concerned. We did discuss the question with officers of the department so far as all the offices of surveyors general throughout the West are concerned. It is the attitude of the officers of the department responsible to speak that it would be an unwise thing to abolish these offices till the work shall be further advanced. Let us see what the evidence is. Commissioner Spry admitted or stated, as my colleague said, that if he were to abolish any one particular officer it would be this one in question, but he is not the only one who testified, and, more than that, I would agree with his statement that if you are to abolish some officer in each of these offices probably this particular officer could be abolished to better advantage than those who are more familiar possibly with the details of surveys and that class of work.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. What reason did he give for retaining it?

Mr. FRENCH. The handling of the work of the office. I have tried to indicate that there is more work in Colorado that must be done.

It must be done by some one there or some one here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. What did Mr. Spry say about it?

Mr. FRENCH. He believed that it should not be abolished. Let me quote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Did not he say it could be abolished without injury to the service?

Mr. FRENCH. No; he did not say that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I ask for information.

Mr. FRENCH. What he said was this, when he was pressed on that point. What he said was:

If I made any change at all, I would only permit it to apply to the officers themselves. I think it would work a very great inconvenience on the Public Lands case to take bodily surveyors general's offices.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. He said he would only take out the officers, and that is exactly what—

Mr. FRENCH. If he "made a change"—that is the point—and if I made a change that is what I would do, but I would not make a change. Let us hear what Mr. Bond, chief clerk at the office, said before the committee in answer to a question:

If these field officers were removed, if their work was stopped in the different districts, their personnel would come to Washington. We can not handle that work with our force. We have not enough qualified employees.

Further on he said:

My idea is that if we brought those offices to Washington and maintained a custodian force in the field and undertook to put in charge of the assistant supervisors of the surveyors the handling of these additional offices we will saddle, perhaps, more work upon each one of these assistant supervisors than will be helpful, because he is supposed to be kept busy now.

Further on he said—remember this is Mr. Bond, chief clerk of the Land Office:

I doubt very much if we would save any money. I doubt if we would save the $3,000 that the surveyor general is now getting by having two offices, having a force here and a force in another office.

I want to tell you those who are charged with the responsibility for this work do not believe this plan would mean for economy or efficiency or for convenience to the people who are most of all dependent for service.

This whole question was precipitated some two years ago when the then Commissioner of the General Land Office made the recommendation as to all surveyors general's offices. Hon. Clay Tallman was then commissioner. I have great respect for Mr. Tallman, and he is a close student of western problems. But on this question he stands alone so far as I know among officers who have studied the question. Did any of his predecessors feel the same way? Not that I ever heard. His judgment is contrary to the judgment of the officers of the Land Department to-day and it is contrary to the judgment of the Members of Congress from the West, who know the actual conditions.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. SEARS. There is no desire on my part to inconvenience the West, as I have tried to show during my congressional career, or any section of the country. Take my State. I have had several surveys, and one of them was pending almost a year because they could not send somebody.

Mr. FRENCH. But you do not have a surveyor general in your State?

Mr. SEARS. No; we have to come to Washington like you have to come perhaps.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me make an illustration right on that point. The Forest Service some years ago started off with the idea of handling a great deal of its work from Washington. Let me give you one experience. An application was made by a gentleman, whose name I could give, from the southern part of Idaho to cut some deadwood from the forest reserve for his winter use. The request was made in June. The application came to Washington and months went by and he could not get favorable action. The applicant wrote to Washington repeatedly without result. Finally along about November he took several wagons, hired several men, went onto the forest reserves, cut out the amount of dead timber that he wanted, had it carefully measured and surveyed, and everything put into proper shape preparatory to any difficulty. He took the wood to his home before the snows would fall and make it impossible for him to get to the forest. Then he notified the department of what he had done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRENCH. The department at first was going to prosecute this man, as, of course, he could have been prosecuted under the law. Well, my constituent said, "I know I have cut down this timber. If I had not cut this timber, my family would have suffered for lack of fuel. There is no other reasonable place I could get it except from a forest reserve. You have let my application hang on for six months without acting. I have measured the timber I have cut off, I have witnesses to pass on every detail of it, I am willing and ready to pay for it, and if you want to prosecute you will publish to the world precisely what you have done." The department did not prosecute. I want to tell you further, the Forest Service has come to employ a different method of doing business 3,000 miles away and is working under a policy by which it handles just such problems as that through local officers, and under which you do not find 1 per cent of the difficulties that existed in the forest administration of the past. The officers who administer the law are on the ground and are coming into contact with the people who must live under the law instead of attempting to handle the immediate administration 3,000 miles away. The same principle applies to the surveyors general's offices to-day.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is always interesting and impressive, and he knows as much about this situation as any man on the floor of the House. The thing proposed to be done by my colleague on the committee [Mr. BYRNES] is that there shall be stricken from this bill all surveyors general's offices in States where the unsurveyed lands are less than 8,000,000 acres. This would include Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Wyoming, and South Dakota, and in the latter State the elimination has already been made by the committee report. If that is done it will effect a saving of $52,930, because the motion would then be made to strike that amount out of the total.

Coming, Mr. Chairman, as I do, from the West, and knowing a little about these matters, I would hesitate to join in any request or any fight to have any service stopped that the West might need. But I feel sure, and I am sure the gentleman from Idaho himself is certain, that the work would progress just as well without these five surveyors general as with them. That position is justified, Mr. Chairman, by the statement of Mr. Tallman, the former Commissioner of the General Land Office, who says:

It is apparent at the outset, however, that you would save the salary of 13 surveyors general, and then we have more or less other overhead in the 13 different offices that you would eliminate if you had it all in one.

As to the methods by which this work would be handled in case of a transfer and consolidation of the work in the General Land Office at Washington, it may be stated, first, that it will be necessary to maintain in each State, as at present, the field surveying organization, with headquarters where necessary for the conduct of the work, presumably in the same offices or a part thereof, now occupied by the surveyors general. The field surveyors, instead of submitting their field notes of survey to the offices of surveyors general, would transmit same direct to Washington. Instructions for surveys would likewise be prepared in the Washington office and sent to the field surveying organization direct. There would be no necessity of moving the official field notes and plats now kept in offices of surveyors general from their present location. It will be desirable to keep them where they are for reference by the field surveying service, in which case they could also be made available to the public, as they are now, and such files would very probably be kept up to date, with additions of transcripts of field notes and plats of future surveys.

Consolidation of the offices of surveyors general in one office would undoubtedly result in a saving of overhead expenses, in the saving of much correspondence, and in the development of a single standard of efficiency for the entire force.

If we are really in favor of economy, we ought not to need any stronger recommendation than that of the former Commissioner of the General Land Office himself. I know that the political exigencies are great. Coming from the West, I have often had that pressure brought to bear on me with reference to such matters. But it was thought that times had changed, and now we are supposed to be embarking on a system of real economy, where we would cut off political offices that are merely sinecures and which do no good except for political purposes. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina will be adopted, and I hope that the others will be adopted, so that this money may be saved, and I feel sure that no damage will be done to the service. Just let me add that two years ago, as you will recall, the Committee on Appropriations brought in a recommendation that all the offices of surveyors general be abolished. We propose here to abolish only those in States where the unsurveyed lands are less than 8,000,000 acres. Conditions have undergone no change whatever since then. If they were political sinecures then, they are political sinecures now, and if you voted for the abolishment of all of them then you certainly ought to vote for this amendment, which does not go nearly so far.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina calls for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Oregon: Surveyor general, $3,000; clerks, $8,010; contingent expenses, $500; in all, $11,510.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILLIAMSON: Page 13, after line 19, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"South Dakota: Surveyor general, $2,000; clerks, $3,100; contingent expenses, $200; in all, $5,300."

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there are still 301,707 acres of unsurveyed public land in South Dakota. Also to the fact that we have in the Black Hills one of the richest and most important mining sections in the United States. There is a great deal of work for the surveyor general to do there in connection with mining claims. To abolish the office will put the people of our State to a great deal of inconvenience and expense, and particularly be the cause of much delay in getting mining claims surveyed.

I observe from the report that there were surveyed in South Dakota during the year 1916, 37,137 acres; for the year 1917, 8,766 acres; for the year 1918, 32,552 acres; for the year 1919, 57,513 acres; for the year 1920, 58,455 acres; and for the year 1921, 5,217 acres. Now, the fact that only 5,217 acres were surveyed last year indicates very little with reference to the importance of this office in South Dakota.

The chances are that next year, if the office is maintained, there will be surveyed at least 50,000 acres of additional public land. It is highly important, therefore, that the surveyor general's office should be retained for at least another year.

I want to say in this connection that when I was approached some time ago by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] with reference to the abolition of one of the land offices in my State I immediately gave my consent to have all those abolished in my district where the income and the remaining unpatented lands did not warrant a further continuation of the office. I am not in favor of maintaining any one of these offices that is not absolutely needed and which ought not to be retained for the benefit and convenience of the people. But I do not believe that the time has come when this office should be abolished in South Dakota.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If they surveyed only 5,217 acres last year, why did they not survey more?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not know why it was that they surveyed only 5,217 acres last year; but the gentleman will observe that in the year 1919 they surveyed 57,513 acres, and in the year 1920, 58,455 acres.

Mr. MANN. I know; but if they can survey 58,000 acres in one year, why do they not survey as much as that in the next year instead of cutting it down to 5,000 acres?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That may be due to a great many causes. That land is there and yet to be surveyed. There are over 300,000 acres yet unsurveyed.

Mr. MANN. If the land is there unsurveyed and the surveyor's office have nothing to do, why do they not go ahead and survey the land? That is what I would like to know.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I do not know that that is the fact. There are mineral claims to be surveyed. The record of these surveys are kept in the State office and do not appear in this report.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation has been carried here in the bill for years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the Surveyor General of the United States remove these surveyors from one district to another?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; in some States they have more than they can do and surveyors from adjoining States are sent in. Last year was a light year in this office, but next year they will have a great deal of work to do. I will be entirely willing to have this office abolished after next year should the work not increase, but there will certainly be a great deal of work to do in the coming year.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. KINKAID. Is it not true that the surveyor general's office is restricted pretty much to passing on the reports made by surveyors in the field, and that the surveyor general does not really control the work that is done in the field, but that that work is controlled by the General Land Office here at Washington? Is not that the case?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes; that is the case.

Mr. KINKAID. And the surveyors in the field who do the work there are transferable from one State to another wherever the demand is the strongest for the survey of unsurveyed lands? I know that to be the case in many instances. I know the deputy surveyor who has done most of the surveying in Nebraska has been doing a large amount of the surveying also in South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more to call attention to another point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I want to say also that the office in South Dakota is engaged to a considerable extent in making surveys of mining claims. The number of mining claims to be surveyed will be immensely increased this year, as mining has taken on new activities, and the chances are that there will be five times as much work in the Black Hills during the coming year as there was last year. I can not find a report upon the number of mining claims that have been surveyed. Has the committee any information upon that?

Mr. FRENCH. The officers of the department reported to us that they did not have sent to Washington much of the information as to this kind of work that the gentleman is referring to. He would have to look to the local surveyor for that.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. But nevertheless that is an important part of the work, as the gentleman knows. I think this office should be retained at least for another year.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of what the gentleman has said, I think as a matter of justice I should call attention to the fact that in the hearings this matter was taken up with the Land Office. The chief clerk, Mr. Bond, in response to questions, stated that the surveys are very nearly completed, but that the office had been left open because of the mineral work in the Black Hills to which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] has referred; but that a year ago the bureau recommended the closing of the office, thinking that Mr. Schweitzer, who has charge of the Nebraska office, could handle all the work, as he has been doing, very largely. A little further on Gov. Spry, Commissioner of the General Land Office, said:

There is no more reason for its continuance this year than there was last year, of course, and we have been anticipating some action on the part of Congress looking toward the discontinuance of the South Dakota office. We are not protesting its discontinuance at all, because of the reasons stated in the report.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is there any revenue from these offices at all?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is some slight revenue, but not substantial.

Mr. WALSH. Net revenue?

Mr. CRAMTON. There are some fees that come in.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The use of the fund created by the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. p. 937), for office work in the surveyors general's offices is extended for one year from June 30, 1922: Provided, That not to exceed $25,000 of this fund shall be used for the purposes above indicated.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph extending for one year the use of the fund created by the act of March 2, 1895, for office work in the surveyors general's offices. How much is that fund?

Mr. CRAMTON. The fund is $100,000, a continuing fund appropriated in 1895, and being reimbursable it is continued as at first appropriated. It is to be used jointly with deposits made by railroad companies for surveying within their grants, to pay the Government's share of the surveys. The railroad companies pay for the surveying of their own land.

Mr. WALSH. That was passed in 1895?

Mr. CRAMTON. It was appropriated first in 1895.

Mr. WALSH. How long is it going to take to survey these railroad lands?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no information as to that.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will say that in the parts of the country where settlement has followed closely upon survey work the survey of land is practically completed now, but in parts of the country that are heavily timbered, mountainous, and probably hardly worth settling at all, but usable chiefly for grazing purposes and timber purposes, there are areas aggregating millions of acres still unsurveyed. We better let this item run along for awhile; I do not know how long.

Mr. WALSH. Did they do considerable of this work last year?

Mr. FRENCH. Sometimes it is not an advantage to survey ahead of time, for the reason that you may have to resurvey. If you will turn to the records showing the surveys made this year, you will find several hundred thousand acres of land surveyed that are classified as resurveys. In other words, the surveying was done too far ahead, or was improperly done. Here might be a case where it would be economical not to push the work too fast, because it will cost no more in the long run, and you may survey too far ahead of time, so that the survey posts would be obliterated at the time they would be of desirable use.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know how much they used of this fund last year?

Mr. CRAMTON. About $21,000 or $22,000.

Mr. FRENCH. That would not take care of very much surveying work.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $5,000 per annum each, $372,000: Provided, That the offices of registers and receivers at the following land offices are hereby consolidated, and the applicable provisions of the act approved October 28, 1921, shall be followed in effecting such consolidations: Montgomery, Ala.; El Centro and Susanville, Calif.; Durango, Lamar, and Montrose, Colo.; Coeur d'Alene and Lewiston, Idaho; Topeka, Kans.; Baton Rouge, La.; Cass Lake, Crookston, Duluth, and Jackson, Minn.; Billings, Great Falls, Kalispel, and Missoula, Mont.; Lincoln, Nebr.; Elko, Nev.; Bismarck, N. Dak.; Pierre, S. Dak.; Vernal, Utah; Walla Walla and Yakima, Wash.: Provided further, That, with the exception of the land offices mentioned in the last preceding proviso, and also the land offices at Eureka, Calif., and Burns, Oreg., and where the land office shall be the only remaining land office in any State, no money herein appropriated shall be expended for the maintenance of any land office, other than as is provided in this paragraph, in a land district having public land area of less than 100,000 acres, or whose cost of maintenance shall exceed 33 1/3 per cent of the revenues of the office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922: And provided further, That the land office at Springfield, Mo., and the offices of register and receiver thereat are hereby abolished.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment upon the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in response to that, the item comes clearly within the Holman rule. The effect of it is, as the gentleman must fully understand, in the first place, to reduce the number of officers and further to reduce the expenditures under this item. There is a reduction of $78,000 by reason of the new language in the item. It is clearly within the Holman rule. Further, it abolishes a number of officers and comes within the language of the rule which provides that by the reduction in the number and salary of officers of the United States it shall be in order.

Mr. RAKER. Has the gentleman the act of October 28, 1921, there?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the Holman rule does not seem to me to apply in this case. In the first place, in establishing the first part of the section it provides, as the law now exists, a salary for the register and the receiver at this land office at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each and fixes their salaries. If we turn to the act of October 28, 1921, while the committee may have intended to fix the salary of some officers, they have left them out of this bill and do not provide for them at all. That act provides that the register shall receive a higher compensation, but under the law this will require additional clerks, which would make the salary larger than the register is getting. So that it does not reduce expenditures on the part of the Government. It is an effort upon the part of the Appropriations Committee to carry out what the act of October 28, 1921, puts up to the President upon certain facts and conditions, and clearly the Committee on Appropriations ought not to be permitted to do that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This proposition does decrease the number of officers of the United States, does it not?

Mr. RAKER. It increases others, while it decreases some.

Mr. MANN. Does it not decrease the number by eliminating certain ones?

Mr. RAKER. I think the only way that I can answer that, to answer it clearly to the gentleman, would be to say that you have to take the whole proposition together. If it reduces some and adds more, it is not a decrease.

Mr. MANN. You have to take this proposition by itself. The question is whether this proposition reduces the number of officers, and if you cut out half of them that is a reduction, is it not, in the number?

Mr. RAKER. It would be as the gentleman makes the statement.

Mr. MANN. I am making the statement in accordance with the facts of the proposition. It reduces the compensation of those officers that it abolishes, does it not?

Mr. RAKER. I am in serious doubt about that.

Mr. MANN. If you abolish an office, you do not pay that compensation.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, well, it provides that there shall be no receiver, and you fix the compensation of the register higher and add more to the expense of the Government by the registership, and add to each of these offices a clerk, which makes it cost more than the receivers cost.

Mr. MANN. The salary of the register is now a possible $3,000 a year. This item provides it shall be exactly the same. There is no increase.

Mr. RAKER. Not in this, but they refer to the act of October 28, 1921.

Mr. MANN. But this provides not exceeding $3,000 per annum.

Mr. CRAMTON. And, further, the gentleman is assuming a state of facts that does not exist. The language before us, as the gentleman from Illinois has emphasized, proposes to reduce the number of officers by abolishing one in each of these consolidations. The gentleman from California assumes what is not the fact. He assumes that clerks are to be put in their places, which is not true. They already have clerks sufficient in these offices to answer the needs, so that it is a reduction in the number of officers.

Mr. RAKER. I think my first point is good, but there is another objection to this in that it does not reduce the expenditures. Take the second proviso:

Provided further, That, with the exception of the land offices mentioned in the last preceding proviso, and also the land offices at Eureka, Calif., and Burns, Oreg., and where the land office shall be the only remaining land office in any State, no money herein appropriated shall be expended for the maintenance of any land office.

That is new legislation.

Mr. MANN. That is a mere limitation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why the exemption?

Mr. MANN. We are discussing the point of order now. That is a mere limitation on an appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It exempts two places that might just as well come in, and that is new legislation.

Mr. MANN. That is not legislation. We can say that we appropriate for Colorado, that we appropriate for Wyoming, but that we do not appropriate for California, if we want to, and if the law provides that there is authority for the three States, we can say that no portion of the money appropriated shall be expended in one of them.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this is new legislation. There was nothing in the hearings to justify the committee coming in here and attempting new legislation on this appropriation bill in regard to the land offices that are working in good shape and are costing less to the Government than the procedure to put this upon the statute books.

Mr. MANN. That goes to the merits of the case and not the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. There can be no question about it on earth that this method is going to cost the Government more and do less good.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Can the gentleman find any legislation to warrant this proposed legislation where the cost exceeds 33½ per cent, and so on?

Mr. RAKER. No; that is new legislation.

Mr. MANN. That is a pure limitation. Anybody can see that if they will read the language.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion? These two provisions are practically a recital of the law as it has been for many years. It has been arbitrary law that when the public lands in any State became diminished to less than 100,000 acres the land office should be abolished, and as to land offices which cost to maintain them in excess of 33½ per cent over the present revenue it is up to the Secretary himself to abolish them or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What does the gentleman say to the exception as to the land offices in Eureka, Calif., and Burns, Oreg.? Is not that legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. FRENCH. No; that is a limitation. May I make an observation in connection with this subject which the gentleman from California thinks would not limit expenditures? As a matter of fact the register and receiver are paid flat salaries of $500, and then they are both paid fees up to $3,000 each. Now, if we diminish the fees of the office, make it possible for the register and receiver to receive not the salary and fees and small amounts up to $3,000 combined, the gentleman must see that in that case there would be no saving of fees, but, on the other hand, there would be a saving of $500 flat salary.

Mr. RAKER. The act of October 28, 1921, authorizes the President to consolidate the offices of receiver and register in any land office, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, after 60 days' notice whenever the compensation of the receiver shall fall below the sum of $4,000 per annum and in his opinion the interest of the service warrants such abolition. After the Congress had passed this and given it to the President to determine upon the facts, without a hearing, without any testimony, without anything before the committee, the committee comes in here and by legislation attempts to do away with the public offices that have been necessary and proper in all the land administrations from the beginning up to the present time.

I can not see how you overlooked the fact that when we abolished the receivers, the testimony given by the Land Office at the public hearings when the bill was under consideration which I have just referred to, they admitted that in practically every instance a clerk would have to be hired at a salary all the way from $1,200 to $2,000, and that would add over $1,000 or $1,500 more to the Government expense and the flat salary of $500 the gentleman speaks of. You can not blow hot and blow cold on the same thing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, under the existing law there is a register and receiver at the land offices, each of whom receives a fixed salary of $500 a year, and in addition certain fees and commissions up to a possible salary of $3,000 a year. This item in the bill proposes to consolidate the two offices, so that the pay of both the register and receiver will be a fixed salary of $500 and a possible salary of $3,000; there shall be only one register and receiver who is to receive the salary that he now receives. The bill therefore abolishes a large number of surveyors of land offices. The rules provide that no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation, and so forth. Nor shall any provision in such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction in the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

This bill reduces the number of officers and reduces the compensation of all the officers who are abolished. That is perfectly patent on the face of the bill. The second proviso in the bill, if the Chair has carefully examined it, as I have no doubt he has, is a pure limitation upon the appropriation with certain exceptions which it has the right to state and says no money herein appropriated shall be expended for the maintenance of any land office other than provided in this paragraph, and so forth. That is just a limitation and nothing else, no legislation about it at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This section has really three proposals in it—first, to consolidate certain offices; second, a proviso to limit the expenditure of the fund appropriated; and, third, the abolishing of certain offices named in the section. The point of order may be decided, the Chair believes, by a reference to section 2 of Rule XXI of the House, a rule familiar to all of us. The rule provides, in part:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and the salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

It is very evident to the Chair that the number of officers to be provided for by this section is reduced by this consolidation; in fact, it would seem the number is practically reduced one-half. It is equally evident to the Chair that it does reduce the amount of money to be expended. The Chair finds by reference to the current law that the sum of $450,000 was appropriated for exactly the same purpose for the current fiscal year. For the same purposes this bill proposes to appropriate $372,000, or a reduction from current law of $78,000, a very substantial decrease. The second part of the section is evidently simply a limitation, and the Chair can see no reasonable point that can be made against it. The third part of the section could be properly comprehended within the same reasoning that is used as to the first part of the section, as it is nothing but a proposition to abandon certain offices.

We are not without precedents in this matter. In the Sixty-third Congress, second session, Chairman BYRNS of Tennessee presiding, the point of order was made against the following proviso:

Provided, That the offices of the Commission of the Five Civilized Tribes and superintendent of Union Agency, in Oklahoma, be, and the same are hereby, abolished, and in lieu thereof there be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, a superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, with his office located in the State of Oklahoma, at a salary of $5,000 per annum.

It was contended that the proviso was not in order under that portion of the second clause of the Holman rule which I have just read.

The Chair, on consideration of the matters that were urged at that time against the provision, held that the point of order was not well taken. Later, in the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill in February, 1920, in the House, Mr. LONGWORTH being Chairman of the committee, a point of order was made against the provisions of that act relative to surveyors general, the effect of which provisions was to abolish several offices of surveyors general. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] made a point of order at that time against the provision. The Chair in ruling upon it determined that the provisions of the bill did constitute a reduction in appropriation and was in order. He took the appropriation in the then current law and compared it with the expenditures to be made under the proposed bill, and finding it was a reduction, held on that comparison that because of that reduction the point of order would not lie. I think these precedents are sufficient. The section is plainly not subject to the objection made, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 5, after the word "Crookston," insert the word "and." Line 6, strike out the words "and Jackson," and in the same line, after the word "Minnesota," insert the words "Jackson, Miss."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this is simply to correct a typographical or clerical error in the provision.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, lines 2 and 3, after the words "El Centro," in line 2, strike out "and Susanville."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I will not take any of your time. I think a statement will be sufficient. Susanville is the county seat of the county of Lassen. It is the center of business over all of that country. Two men doing the work better than one, a competent man for register and a competent man for receiver. The work has been progressing for 40 years in fine shape. If you abolish the receiver you place in charge a clerk who is sent from some other place. He knows nothing about land-office law, practice, or procedure. For the life of me I can not understand where you economize when you fix the salary that is fixed for the receiver, who gets $500 and then depends upon commissions running up to $2,000, sometimes $2,500, and you fix the salary of the clerk at $2,200, which really runs more than the receiver's. Now, that is what is done by this legislation. It is to take away from the local people a competent receiver to do the work and place in charge a clerk. He has to act as a judicial officer, he acts in a judicial capacity, and I trust the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to agree with the amendment proposed by the gentleman. The fact of the business is the land office at Susanville under existing law is eligible to be abolished entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, because the expense of maintaining that office at this time exceeds the limit fixed by the law by reason of which discretionary authority to abolish is conferred upon the Secretary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, maybe right here I ought to say a few words touching the reason why this paragraph ought to pass in the way we have framed it. I remember reading a few weeks ago in one of the papers an observation of Abe Martin, in which he said this: "Lafe Bud has resigned as cashier of the Podunk Bank." He added, "The idea was not original with Lafe." [Laughter.] The fact of the business is that this legislation is to help the Department of the Interior to do that which, generally speaking, it has the authority to do right now and wants to do.

Let me tell you that during the last 15 years, possibly more, quite a number of land offices have gotten to the point where they ought to have been abolished, but the department found itself in this situation: Members of the House or of the other branch of the Congress, chambers of commerce, commercial clubs, and other organizations that could see great merit in economizing in somebody else's district, or in some other part of the country, impressed upon the department the idea that a great wrong would occur if the local land office should be abolished. The result is that we have to-day something like 44 land offices throughout the United States that fall beneath the ban that Congress has already enacted into law and are subject to being abolished because the land districts contain less than 100,000 acres of public lands or because the expense of maintaining the offices is greater than 33½ per cent of the receipts, this latter in the discretion of the administration.

Under the provisions of this section about 15 land offices will be abolished by July 1 next and in about 25 land offices the office of receiver will be abolished and the work be placed under a register.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would just like to make the suggestion that Members of the House and Members of the Senate and chambers of commerce and commercial clubs and others seem to have used the same sort of pressure on the General Land Office that the editors of the publication known as School Life must have used on the committee that framed this bill, because School Life has been shot in here to be retained, and a precedent is thus set for the reestablishing of Government publications which have been ordered discontinued. It is a form of pressure, to be sure. The gentleman stands here as a Member of Congress and objects to Senators and Congressmen having influence with the Land Office to save registers and receivers and land offices and yet recognizes the fact that the committee itself is subject to pressure along other lines.

Mr. FRENCH. In answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Washington, I will say that the item for the publication of School Life meets with my hearty approval and, I believe, the approval of the members of the committee, and we believe that that one publication, more than any other of the Bureau of Education, is the vehicle or medium through which the bureau can best be heard by the world. If you want to abolish that, you can do it; but if there is to be a Bureau of Education, there ought to be some way of informing the public concerning it—of interpreting its work, if you please, to the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. School Life has a circulation of 30,000 copies "to inform the world," as the gentleman says.

Mr. WALSH. "Curfew shall not ring to-night." [Laughter.]

Mr. FRENCH. I want to turn now, Mr. Chairman, to the subject we are discussing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Under this law, approved October 28, 1921, these offices are not to be abolished unless in the opinion of the President the interests of the service warrant such abolition. No President would deprive a large community of the opportunity to do business, would he?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has just restated what I have stated, that as regards the 33½ per cent under the law a discretionary responsibility is placed upon the department. But I want to say this, that as regards the law touching the abolition of the land offices, either whether they fall below in the number of acres to constitute a land district or because they exceed in expense the amount of receipts, the department has been exceedingly lenient, until we have reached this time where there are now 44 land offices that come under one or the other provision of the law, saving only the limitations that do not apply to the last land office in a State. Let me say that there are something like 15 land districts that do not have a township of surveyed and unsurveyed public land within them to-day. Let me tell you that there are seven land offices, I believe, that do not have one-fourth of a township of surveyed and unsurveyed public land within their jurisdiction and one with only 1,805 acres. Let me tell you that there are a number of land offices that cost not only more than a third of the income to maintain them, but cost more than the entire income. There are a number that cost nearly twice as much as the total income, and there is one that costs 280 per cent of its income for its maintenance, and yet we have been maintaining that office and going into the Treasury and paying approximately three times as much for maintaining the office as the receipts coming into it amount to.

Gentlemen, I say the amendment ought not to prevail, and this section ought to be adopted. The adoption of this section and the next will mean a saving during the coming year of $128,800.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why does an economical Congress and an economical administration maintain these offices?

Mr. FRENCH. We are now proposing to abolish those that ought to be abolished. We are proposing to cut down the number of offices by abolishing receivers in those offices where the work has gotten into such shape that both officers are not needed. By withholding appropriations we can strengthen the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses of land offices: For clerk hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the district land offices, including the expenses of depositing public money; per diem, in lieu of subsistence, of clerks detailed to examine the books and management of district land offices and to assist in the operation of said offices, and in the opening of new land offices and reservations, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for actual necessary traveling expenses of said clerks: Provided, That no expenses chargeable to the Government shall be incurred by registers and receivers in the conduct of local land offices except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $350,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAKER. Can the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Cramton] advise the committee how many new clerks are going to be added by virtue of the provision just passed?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is my recollection that this item is reduced $50,000 by reason of the action taken in the former paragraph. Instead of increasing we have reduced the amount to the extent of $50,000.

Mr. RAKER. But my dear friend did not answer my question, and that is, How many additional clerks will be required by virtue of the adoption of the former paragraph?

Mr. CRAMTON. There will be no additional clerks needed, but some will be dispensed with; and altogether there will be $50,000 saved in this paragraph by reason of the action taken in the former paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record at this place a statement made by a Land Office official, to the effect that there will be added in each instance from $1,500 to $2,500 in each office that is to be abolished.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman insert also a statement as to where they are going to get the money to pay? And, in addition to that, who is the official who made the statement?

Mr. RAKER. The statement was made by Mr. Finney before the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, in the House Office Building some months since. It is in the printed hearings.

Mr. WALSH. If it is already in print in a statement made by the Acting Secretary of the Interior to another committee, why dump it in here?

Mr. RAKER. What is the use of saying that we are economizing and going to abolish one office, and then in the next breath provide an officer to fill that place by another name? There is no distinction.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman asks what is the use. In that situation there is no use, but there is a little dispute as to whether that is the situation or not. Now, I do not see how it is going to help it any to print what somebody else said some six months ago before one of the gentleman's important committees. This matter was not under discussion.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; that was one of the questions, that if they abolished the receiver it would cost more in the long run for the clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 16, in line 3, after the word "offices," the words—and in the opening of new land offices and reservations, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 16, line 3, after the word "offices," strike out the words "and in the opening of new land offices and reservations, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if the situation with regard to land offices is as the gentleman from Idaho has stated, that such a large number of them are carried on at such an excess of cost over income, it does not seem necessary at this time, when we are undertaking to effect the economy indicated in the preceding paragraph, to make any part of this $350,000 available for the opening of any new land offices whatever.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I understand there are two propositions involved in the gentleman's motion. The first one pertains to opening new land offices. As to that I do not know that I would have any serious objection to the gentleman's proposition prevailing, provided it would not tie the hands of the department in their ability to move a land office from one part of a land district to another. I think we ought to leave the language to take care of that situation. There are land districts in which the land office is located where the lands near the office have passed into private ownership and there is no longer any need to have the land office there, and it might be a very desirable thing to move the land office itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly where there is no business, there is no reason for moving the land office. It should be discontinued. I refer entirely to the kind of offices that are not paying, the kind denounced by the gentleman from Idaho. If there is no business for them, why remove them at all?

Mr. FRENCH. It may be that none will be removed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am quite sure none will be removed.

Mr. FRENCH. That is a matter that we ought to leave to the discretion of the department. So far as the second part of the paragraph is concerned, with regard to permitting expenses for the travel of certain clerks, that is a very desirable provision, because it might save the placing of a permanent clerk in an office; for instance, if we could allow a little traveling expense, we could send a clerk for the rush season while a reservation was being opened.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. My proposed amendment does not touch the traveling expenses of clerks at all. The gentleman has partially indorsed the amendment to strike out that part of the amendment which covers the opening of new offices. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the idea of this appropriation—to make the opening up of this land easier or more difficult?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The whole paragraph is for contingent expenses of land offices. In the preceding paragraph we are striking down a lot of so-called unnecessary land offices on the ground that the expense runs as high as 200 per cent more than the income of the offices. Then, in the next paragraph, it is proposed to carry an appropriation for the establishment of new land offices under the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914.

Mr. WALSH. We all appreciate the fact that it is much easier to open up new land offices than it is to open up new lands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Now, what is the idea of the department in opening up this land? Is it to facilitate it or to make it more difficult?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The object is to provide a medium by which a man, if he takes a notion, may get onto some land where he may have to use a force pump to shoot seed into a hard stony ground, or weight the seed down with a stone in shifting sandy land. Homesteading these days consists of going on the public land and trying to do that thing, which is practically impossible on most of the lands of the public domain now left in the United States; that is, make a living without capital and without resources.

Mr. WALSH. That is one of the elements in the program to encourage thrift and industry, I suppose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have a case now where a man who was a soldier spent $2,000 in trying to perfect a homestead in Montana, and while he was away during the war, in cold weather, the neighboring homesteaders went onto his land and tore down his house and fences and took them away and burned them for fuel, and for that reason he is now without the required house on his homestead claim and may lose his homestead.

Mr. WALSH. That poor soldier needs a copy of School Life.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And a bonus.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 7, noes 12.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: For protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, $485,000, including not exceeding $35,000 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of agents and others employed in the field service and for operation, maintenance, and exchange of same and for operation and maintenance of a motor boat: Provided, That the compensation of the chief of field service employed hereunder, including his services in the District of Columbia, shall not exceed $3,500 per annum and the compensation of all others employed hereunder shall not exceed $2,700 per annum each, except in Alaska, where a compensation not to exceed $3,000 per annum may be allowed: Provided further, That agents and others employed under this appropriation may be allowed per diem in lieu of subsistence, pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 1, 1914, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, except when agents are employed in Alaska they may be allowed not exceeding $5 per day each in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman what is the general result of the sales of timber; how much money is taken and what is the cost of the supervision of these sales?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not the data at hand as to that particular item. This section provides generally as to the protection of public timber, public lands, and so forth.

Mr. SNELL. The information I want is not carried in this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not it at hand.

Mr. SNELL. What does "settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity" mean?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is a general item for caring for a number of different matters.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A motor boat is provided for in the same item, and I suppose that is to get around over the swamp lands.

Mr. SNELL. It costs $485,000, and I wondered what kind of service it was.

Mr. CRAMTON. The item last year cost $550,000. All the work of protecting the public lands and timber upon them is carried in this item.

Mr. SNELL. What is the "settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity"?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not familiar with it and have not anything in reference to it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 16, line 18, the figures "$485,000" and insert "$250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 18, strike out "$485,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were—ayes 8, noes 15.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITE of Kansas moves to strike out, in line 10, page 17, the figure "$5" and insert "$4."

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I make that motion simply because $5 is too much. Four dollars is enough. I do it in the interest of economy.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the expenses of travel?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Yes; all that is necessary. There is no excuse for this whatever. The cost of living has gone down. This is in lieu of subsistence, and $4 is sufficient—$3 is enough.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to call attention to the fact that $5 only has reference to travel in Alaska, and, as I understand, that is not an unreasonable amount.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the chairman if it is not a fact, with respect to all supply bills which we have considered up to this time and passed, including the one passed day before yesterday, and in this bill, every allowance for subsistence has not been over $4, and that this is the only instance where you make it $5.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not speak as to all the supply bills. In this bill before us there were several cases where they get $4 and they asked for $4.50 or $5, but were denied by the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I say, all the other supply bills have placed it at $4.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will not say as to all the bills, but in this particular one it has been carried heretofore at $5, and is recommended at $5, and it relates only to travel in Alaska. All the travel in the United States only gets $4.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know that it costs the natives in Alaska any more than it does here to travel?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not understand that natives are on the pay roll.

Mr. BLANTON. I think some of them are.

Mr. MANN. Wherever they go in Alaska it costs like everything—more than it does in Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. They get along here on $4 for subsistence.

Mr. MANN. They ought to get along for less.

Mr. CARTER. The only necessity for making this $5 is, as the gentleman in charge of the bill has said, that this applies only to persons traveling in Alaska where the travel is much more difficult and much more expensive than it is in the United States.

It seems to me that a dollar more than is usual to be paid in other parts of the country is very reasonable for subsistence in that frigid country.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. This is for subsistence.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. It has nothing to do with traveling expenses.

Mr. CARTER. I may have used the word "traveling" inadvertently. What I meant was that while a man was traveling his subsistence would cost more in Alaska than in other parts of the country.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I may have gotten this wrong, but as I read it the sense conveyed to me is that when they are traveling elsewhere than in Alaska they may be allowed not exceeding $5 per day. This is a small item. It may not be necessary to save money on small items of this kind, but I insist we might as well begin here and adopt this amendment.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will read the language carefully, he will notice that the exception is when they are traveling in Alaska. Those traveling in Alaska are to be allowed the $5 per day.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hearings in land entries: For hearings or other proceedings held by order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to determine the character of lands, whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law, and of hearings in disbarment proceedings, $20,000: Provided, That where depositions are taken for use in such hearings the fees of the officer taking them shall be 20 cents per folio for taking and certifying same and 10 cents per folio for each copy furnished to a party on request.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the proviso. That is new language, is it not?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is in the current law and has been carried for a considerable time.

Mr. RAKER. The 20 cents per folio, and the 10 cents per folio?

Mr. CRAMTON. Exactly.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Surveying public lands: For surveys and resurveys of public lands, examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, making fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $600,000, of which such amount as may be allotted for work in Alaska shall be immediately available: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied in whole or in part by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, and the acts approved July 3 and July 10, 1890, and to survey under such other acts as provide for land grants to the several States and Territories, and such indemnity lands as the several States and Territories may be entitled to in lieu of lands granted them for educational and other purposes which may have been sold or included in some reservation or otherwise disposed of, except railroad land grants, and including the survey, appraisal, and sale of abandoned military reservations transferred to the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and other surveys shall include lands adapted to agriculture and lands deemed advisable to survey on account of availability for irrigation of dry farming, lands subject to disposition under mineral land laws where survey thereof is not otherwise provided for, lines of reservations, and lands within boundaries of forest reservations, and including such retracements and re-marking of State boundaries as shall be found necessary in order to close the public land lines thereon. The surveys and resurveys provided for in this appropriation to be made by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, at such compensation, not exceeding $200 per month each, as he may prescribe, except in Alaska, where a compensation not exceeding $300 per month each may be allowed such surveyors, except that the Secretary of the Interior may appoint not to exceed one supervisor of surveys, whose compensation shall not exceed $300 per month, and not to exceed 10 surveyors who may be employed in a supervisory capacity, whose compensation shall not exceed $250 per month each, and per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, said per diem and traveling expenses to be allowed to all surveyors employed hereunder and to such clerks who are competent surveyors who may be detailed to field duty hereunder: Provided further, That the sum of not exceeding 10 per cent of the amount hereby appropriated may be expended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of metal or other equally durable monuments to be used for public land survey corners wherever practicable: Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 of this appropriation may be expended for salaries of employees of the field surveying service temporarily detailed to the General Land Office: Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation may be used for the survey, classification, and sale of the lands and timber of the so-called Oregon and California Railroad lands and the Coos Bay Wagon Road lands.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I just want to ask a question or two which will probably satisfy me on the point of order. What is the necessity for such a tremendous sum being carried in this bill every year for surveys and resurveys in the examination of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent? What is the matter with the surveying system that they have that makes necessary these reexaminations and resurveys?

Mr. CRAMTON. I suppose that surveyors are fallible. I am not advised as to how large a proportion of this is for the correction of errors, but the gentleman will note that this item not only covers those matters but also all of the surveys of the public lands which we have now in this country and in Alaska, nearly 800,000,000 acres yet to be surveyed. For many years they have carried for this item $700,000 a year. The committee felt, however, that there could be some retrenchment in that, and we made a reduction of $100,000 in the amount. We do not want to destroy the office or to disorganize it, but we thought there could be some economy made.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman state that there are 800,000,000 acres yet to be surveyed?

Mr. CRAMTON. In this country and in Alaska.

Mr. SNELL. How many years will it take to do that at the rate we are going?

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall have to leave that to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Are we really making any progress in getting definite information?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly. All of the land that is being taken for settlement, for reclamation, for mining in any event must be surveyed before it is taken. I could not state to the gentleman how much is surveyed in the year, but there is an immense area surveyed each year.

Mr. WALSH. About a million acres a year.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, more than that.

Mr. FRENCH. I have the figures right here.

Mr. TINCER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TINCER. I just wondered if we could not save this expenditure by transferring all of the public lands to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. WALSH. I think if we transferred them to the various States it would be much better.

Mr. SNELL. This paragraph provides that not exceeding 10 per cent of the whole amount may be expended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of metal or other equally durable monuments to be used for public-land survey corners wherever practicable. The gentleman does not mean that 10 per cent of that whole amount may be spent in that way?

Mr. CRAMTON. That seems to be the language, but there is no requirement that they must use it for that purpose. I think the gentleman will admit that there is not much use in surveying land without properly marking it.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to know how much land is surveyed, if you have to pay $60,000 a year for markers. I think we ought to have some information upon that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from New York is very ignorant of the scope of the country.

Mr. SNELL. I am asking for information from the source where I would expect to get it.

Mr. CRAMTON. There was expended in the last fiscal year $27,600 for iron posts, and they estimate for the current year $20,000, and for 1923, $20,000.

Mr. SNELL. Why not cut the amount down to 3 per cent instead of 10 per cent.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman wants to run the risk of hampering this department, it could be very easily done.

Mr. SNELL. They have three times as much as they expend.

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume the gentleman would give the Land Office credit for this, that they are not going to buy tons of iron posts and scatter them around the public domain except where they are needed to mark lands actually surveyed. When the land is surveyed they will use the posts.

Mr. SNELL. I never heard of any survey that took 10 per cent of the entire cost to buy the markers.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman sees that the figures indicate that it does not.

Mr. SNELL. It takes 5 per cent.

Mr. CLOUSE. I would like to know about what is the length of the life of one of these iron posts?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no acquaintance with them.

Mr. CLOUSE. It is true that they do corrode and rust out in a very short time. Why would it not be better to replace the iron with stone monuments, that are indestructible? Would it not be as economical?

Mr. ARENTZ. I can refer to a set of surveys made a number of years ago, the so-called Benton surveys, made by simply driving a wagon over the country and dropping a rock. These resurveys are now largely being made of those surveys.

Mr. CLOUSE. Why did not they drop a rock in a good place and—

Mr. ARENTZ. In many sections of the country they could not find a rock over a distance of 4 or 5 miles, and, in addition, your rock is moved by animals bumping against it, or a wagon comes along, or something of that sort.

Mr. CLOUSE. I have not yet seen a place where they could not find a rock.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 24, after the word "Interior," strike out "$600,000" and insert "$700,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, let me direct the attention of the committee to the fact that here is a reduction of $100,000 in a most necessary appropriation, made against the advice of the Director of the Budget and over the protest of the Interior Department. In the hearings the Commissioner of the General Land Office made this statement, which appears on page 83:

In fact, there was one estimate made for the surveying of public lands that the department suggested that we ask an increase for of $100,000 over what had been considered because of the fact of the crying need out through the West that the public lands should be surveyed correctly.

Again, Gov. Spry states, on page 145:

It might interest you to know that we asked for $800,000, and we could use every dollar of it properly, but Mr. Dawes's committee cut it down $100,000.

That is, Gen. Dawes left the amount at the same sum as is carried in the appropriation for the current year, or $700,000.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me finish quoting the commissioner:

So intense is the feeling in the West that the governor of Utah proffered to me an additional $50,000 for the State of Utah, as an appropriation in order that the public lands of the State might be surveyed so that the State itself might receive its school lands. Now, what is true of Utah is true of every other public land State. Being a lump sum, wherever we can save on one hand, we can get that much additional surveying on the other, and all that estimate can be used to advantage. The surveying is the basis of the entire scheme of the General Land Office. Without the surveying of the public lands you have nothing at all.

Gentleman should remember that some years ago, when the appropriations for this purpose were not what they should have been, that complaint came up from all over the West.

The western Members of Congress took the matter up with the Committee on Appropriations and received no relief. It was necessary for us, those directly interested in the matter, to confer with our friends in the House, and then the appropriation was increased to $700,000 on the floor of the House against the advice and over the protest of the Committee on Appropriations. I can not understand, in view of the absolute necessity for the continuation of this work of surveying the public lands, why the committee on its own motion makes this reduction.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SNELL. How long have these surveys been going on?

Mr. HAYDEN. Ever since the public-land policy of the Government was first established. That occurred when the thirteen original States turned over their surplus lands to the United States.

Mr. SNELL. How many acres do they survey each year?

Mr. HAYDEN. In 1916, 10,861,000 acres were surveyed; in 1917, 8,870,000 acres; in 1918, 10,535,000 acres; in 1919, 7,346,000 acres; in 1920, 12,237,000 acres; in 1921, 6,208,000 acres; and the work must go on. In my State there yet remain over 35,000,000 acres of public land to be surveyed.

Mr. SNELL. Are they going over this land a great many times? The chairman of the committee says there are 800,000,000 acres, so they must be going back over it again?

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman does not realize the enormous extent of the public domain and that in order that it may be developed and disposed of it must be surveyed. This work has to be done. It will cost no more to do it now than some time in the future, and we might as well carry out the well-established policy of taking care of the needs of the situation. The annual appropriation of $700,000 has been barely enough to do that, so why reduce it?

Mr. SNELL. According to the present plan it will take 80 years to finish it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Surveying must continue until the last acre is mapped and platted. The testimony of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is that he actually needs an additional $100,000; that approval was given to his request for $800,000 by the Secretary of the Interior, but the Committee on Appropriations, instead of giving him $100,000 more, has arbitrarily cut this appropriation $100,000, a most inconsistent and unjustifiable procedure. I would like to find out from somebody on whose motion and for what reason this cut was made. It certainly originated nowhere except in the Committee on Appropriations. There was no such request from any other source.

Mr. ARENTZ. If the gentleman will permit, we have a section in southern Nevada aggregating 10,000 square miles without a section corner, and has not been surveyed, and yet a bill or, rather, a report was made by the Bureau of Mines a short time ago on a mining bill, which is now H. R. 7136, requiring every man who selected a mining claim to find a section corner before he located. He would have to locate according to cardinal lines, and it is an absolute impossibility under the circumstances.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is simply another illustration of the fact, which has been so thoroughly demonstrated by remarks that have been made here to-day, that there are people who can not begin to appreciate the immense extent of our public domain and the necessity for mapping and platting it in accordance with the United States system of surveys, so that it can be disposed of as provided by law.

Mr. ARENTZ. It must be done, in any event, at some future time in order to complete the survey of the public lands in our country.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the information of the committee is that the demand for these surveys has been decreasing in recent years. Of course, there is no object in going out and surveying the public lands before there is a demand for the surveys. The survey must follow the demand. The demands were 5 per cent less this year than a year ago, and 15 per cent less than two years ago. There is in the gentleman's State of Arizona and in the State of Utah greater pressure than in any other place, but, generally speaking, the demand has lessened, and the committee felt that we should make that reduction in the appropriation.

Mr. HAYDEN. It is news to me that the demand for surveys is lessening. I have received repeated requests for surveys, and have communicated with the department, and I have received the same reply in most cases, to the effect that they have only so much money and they can cover only so many townships in a year, and that we must wait.

Mr. CRAMTON. As I stated, the demand in the gentleman's State is great, but, generally speaking, there has been a reduced demand.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that possibly these swamp lands and these cut-over lands that are to be given the ex-service men in the way of bonus will all have to be surveyed when that measure passes in the near future, and that unless these lands are surveyed, and accurately surveyed, of course, the ex-service men will be justified in considering that we have treated them very unfairly?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is a great deal in what the gentleman has said; but are we to understand that his speech is in favor of a larger appropriation here or in behalf of the bonus to the service men?

Mr. WALSH. No. Perhaps if you give them $100,000 this year, you will not have to make so large an appropriation later.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. They might get along by having these lands surveyed and giving them away, and so escape the necessity of coming with a request for a deficiency of $500,000 for that purpose later. I was just wondering whether the matter of these lands that were included in the bonus bill was given consideration by the committee in recommending this appropriation.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that any land that is now being taken up from the Government, regardless of the bonus bill—any land that is now being taken up on these reclamation projects is being taken up by former service men. They have the preferential right, and there are many of them making applications. There may be 30 applications for one available location, and, of course, as we do develop our reclamation system further, service men will take up those lands. But the remainder of the gentleman's question is rather, I should say, of an academic nature.

Mr. WALSH. Well, that is about as much information as we usually get when we make inquiries.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts know that the cut-over lands were surveyed before they were cut over?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. They will have to be surveyed again. They cut over the boundary marks.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. What authority has the gentleman for saying that?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], in response to a previous inquiry, said that these marks or boundary stones were obliterated or rusting, particularly in the swamp and cut-over lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has made a reference to the item for resurveys. In the way of explanation I wish to say that there has been very little land resurveyed in recent years. Prior to 1910 the surveying of the public lands was done by private contract with professional land surveyors, but the system was changed by legislation 11 years ago and the surveyors were placed on a salary basis. It was discovered that many of these surveys that had been made under the contract system were not accurate, or that the monuments had been obliterated, and the system was changed and the surveyors appointed as employees of the Department of the Interior. Under this method the surveys have generally proved satisfactory, and resurveys have not been found to be necessary excepting in rare instances.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think that the statement made by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] is conservative, perhaps overconservative. I doubt if any resurveys have been ordered on lands that have been surveyed in the last 25 years. I do not happen to know of any. The resurveys are in the main for the correction of surveys that were made 25, 30, 40, and 50 years ago, at a time when they were using stone markers and wooden markers as monuments of surveys. There were two faults in the olden days. One was the failure of the contract surveyor to do his work thoroughly. In some places, unfortunately, he never did it at all, except on the plats. But where the survey was made on the ground in those old days it was marked by stone monuments, small fragments of stone picked up in the vicinity, more or less crudely marked, or by small sticks driven into the ground. Those stones were easily removed. The wooden pins rotted and the monuments of the surveys were obliterated.

About 18 years ago, as I recall, we began to use iron markers for our land surveys, so that even under the contract system, which had been improved by that time, particularly in the matter of the investigation after the survey, our surveys were generally accurate and were well marked. I am quite sure that no resurveys have been necessary since we began to use the iron markers. In the main the necessity for resurveys relates to those old surveys before the day of the iron marker and before the day of the very careful examination of the contract surveys.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona ought to be adopted. In reply to the remark made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] a few moments ago, I should like to say that in most Western States—I know it is true in my own State—there are not sufficient funds now to survey the land as rapidly as the demand is made for it, not alone by ex-service men but by men who desire grazing homesteads and enlarged homesteads and other lands. Less than 25 per cent of the lands in my own State are on the tax rolls to-day, and whenever an attempt is made to get more land on the tax rolls and put it to beneficial use would-be settlers are met with the statement, "This land is not surveyed," and there is a real demand for increased surveys of the public lands in the Western States. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona will prevail.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee to the fact that some of the most valuable land in the United States to-day, when first located, was surveyed by surveyors who would attach the initial corner of a block of surveys to some permanent, natural object, on the bank of a river, for instance, and then start and run a base line 20 miles or more in one direction. Every 1,900 varas along the base line they would fix their section corner, either marked on the ground or merely called for by course and distance, and after running that base line they would then plat out that whole block of surveys on that base line, making the field notes for same in their office. To-day, 50, 60, or 75 years after the initial survey was made, if you have contests in court over boundary suits, the litigants must go back to that initial corner, fixed on some natural object like the bank of a river, to plat out those surveys, each survey depending upon that base line. Most of the resurveying is to establish the actual corners and fix up artificial objects for corners of each survey for the convenience of owners, and that is done privately by the original owners or the subsequent owners. It is just a matter of convenience. It is unnecessary that the Government should do that. Some of the most valuable surveying has been done by office plats on fixed base lines. I think we certainly ought not to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], because it would be a waste of $100,000. There ought to be a stop to this waste some time.

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman understands that if this motion prevails the money will not be used altogether for resurveying. A large part of it will be used for original surveys.

Mr. BLANTON. So far as this bill limits it, it could all be used for resurveying if they wanted to. If you appropriate money for several different purposes and place it in the hands of some agent of the Government to spend for any of those different purposes, the gentleman from Utah knows that the agent of the Government, if he wants to, is authorized by that legislation to spend all of it for one of those purposes.

Mr. COLTON. That is very true, but the gentleman is aware of the fact that the great majority of this money will be spent for original surveys.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I know; but to show the inconsistency of the Committee of the Whole, on an amendment a while ago we almost put back into the bill a provision to retain the surveyor general in a State that last year did not survey more than 5,000 acres of land. Yet the gentleman from Utah knows, if he has had any experience with surveying, that there have been instances where first-class surveyors have fixed sufficient corners to survey accurately as much as 6,400 acres in less than a week, and have the field notes approved by the Land Commissioner. They have done the surveying and had their field notes filed and approved inside of a week. I can cite the gentleman to many such instances. Why, the big blocks of land that the Texas & Pacific Railway Co. has had surveyed under the alternate section law, the big blocks of public land that the Santa Fe Railway Co. has had surveyed, the big blocks of land that the Southern Pacific Railway Co. has had surveyed under various laws, have been surveyed so rapidly that you will find cases where their surveyors have surveyed over 5,000 acres in one day and designated the corners accurately and had their field notes approved by the land commissioners, and their work stood the test in courts. It is foolishness to keep increasing this expense year after year when your Land Commissioner before your committee testified that the work had decreased to such an extent that we ought to do away with 13 of these surveyor general's offices entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I feel that something ought to be stated in reply to the gentleman's statement that the money can be used for resurveys. The item in the bill does not fix any limitation. I am not surprised that the gentleman should be inaccurate when he says that any part of it or all of it may be used for resurvey. The fact is that the permanent law fixes it at 20 per cent that may be used in the discretion of the Secretary for resurvey work.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. As a matter of fact the 20 per cent is never reached.

Mr. FRENCH. Probably not; it is a matter for the good judgment of the Secretary.

Mr. HAYDEN. The demand has been so great for the expenditure of money for surveys of new land that it is a difficult matter to get a resurvey, and there must be a very good reason for it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to this item. The statement in regard to the surveyor general of the State has nothing to do with it. They do not do the surveying at all. In the second place, this money, if the law is enforced, is supposed to be all reimbursable. Just stop and think a moment. Here is the public land scattered all over the public-land States and in Alaska that ought to be in the hands or ownership of private individuals. There are many ex-service men to-day who are trying to get land surveyed, so that they can get homesteads on this land. The sale of the land and the handling of it is supposed to pay all these expenses.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Where is there any provision in this paragraph making the expenditure reimbursable?

Mr. RAKER. All the money that comes from the sale of public lands goes into the Public Treasury. This is an expenditure by the Government for handling its own land, and if the Government expends $10,000, thereby bringing back $100,000, it is $90,000 to the good. It is surveying its own property to the end that its citizens may go out and locate on the land in a proper way and know where their homes are to be.

Mr. WALSH. Does not most of the money that comes from the sale of public lands go into the Reclamation Service?

Mr. RAKER. It is public money and the Government gets the benefit of it. It is not a donation to anyone; it is not a contribution to anyone; this is not a new enterprise.

Mr. WALSH. It takes $600,000 out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. RAKER. It is merely surveying the land that it owns, that is intended for its citizens to have and make their homes upon. The sooner you put them in the hands of private ownership, in the hands of ex-service men and others, the better; it then becomes taxable and goes upon the tax roll and serves to build up the cities, towns, and school districts.

Mr. WALSH. That is what the gentleman means by reimbursable?

Mr. RAKER. It is reimbursable; the Government does not lose the money; it does not contribute it to anything.

Mr. ROACH. Can an entry be made on land before it is surveyed?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Here is $600,000 that goes for surveys taken out of the proceeds of the land sales.

Mr. RAKER. What is the difference?

Mr. SNELL. It comes out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. RAKER. The money is received for the sale of timber, stone lands, desert lands, swamp lands, and every dollar the Government receives for land goes into the Public Treasury.

Mr. SNELL. I supposed it went into the reclamation projects.

Mr. RAKER. That is the Public Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAYDEN) there were 8 ayes and 23 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYING AND ALLOTTING INDIAN RESERVATIONS.
(Reimbursable.)

For the survey, resurvey, classification, and allotment of lands in severalty under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stats. L., p. 388), entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," and under any other act or acts providing for the survey or allotment of Indian lands, $58,000, reimbursable, to be immediately available: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the survey, resurvey, classification, or allotment of any land in severalty on the public domain to any Indian, whether of the Navajo or other tribes, within the State of New Mexico and the State of Arizona, who was not residing upon the public domain prior to June 30, 1914.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the language just read is for the survey, resurvey, classification, or allotment under the act of 1887, and it is under the head of reimbursable. I think it is very likely that this is the item that the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] had in mind when he was endeavoring to convince the committee that the $600,000 appropriated in the previous paragraph was a reimbursable item. This is the only reimbursable item, and the gentleman from California, who is always enthusiastic about appropriations from the Public Treasury and quite frequently accurate in the arguments he advances, had evidently this paragraph in mind. This is the appropriation which is reimbursable by the language of the bill, and the other appropriation of $600,000 has nothing in it which either requires it to be reimbursable or in the administration of the law even is reimbursable. The gentleman has a unique definition of money being reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States when the appropriation is made for it if it results in the development of the country, the building of schools and churches, grocery stores, and homes, and thinks thereby that the Treasury is being reimbursed by some sort of a revolution of the fund. However, I think the gentleman is in error, and I feel quite sure that before he left his place in the well and took his seat he had discovered that he had created an erroneous impression in his own mind and that he regretted he sought to create a like impression in the minds of the other members of the committee. Because I asked him a few questions, I take the floor now to assure the gentleman from California and the other members of the committee that he did not lead me into an erroneous interpretation of the paragraph under consideration at that time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has said. Ordinarily he gets pretty close to the point, but it seems to me that this time he has gone somewhat far afield with the item now before the committee and the one we just passed. This item is the expenditure of public money for the purpose of surveying lands that belong to the tribes of Indians, from which the Government gets no return. It is advancing them the money, but they claim repayment out of that fund after the Indian sells his land or the Government sells it for him. On the other hand, it is not that with respect to the other item at all. We have property. We do not know the value of it. We survey it, and then after the sale of the land we pay back the expense we have been put to in its survey, and then have on hand, say, 90 per cent of it, so that as a matter of fact we pay it back to the Government and have in the fund 90 per cent more than when we started. That is clearly a returning of the expense money, a recompensation, and the one is of considerable importance for the purpose of development. I would not attempt to mislead if I could, and I could not if I would, the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any record where any of this money has ever been returned to the Treasury in Washington?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes; millions of dollars.

Mr. SNELL. When?

Mr. RAKER. Every year.

Mr. SNELL. Earlier in the bill there is a provision that it goes into the reclamation projects.

Mr. RAKER. Originally, before the reclamation act, it went into miscellaneous receipts or the general fund, and now it goes into the reclamation fund.

Mr. SNELL. That is a revolving fund used in these same States?

Mr. RAKER. Why, sure.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. As I understand it, all of the appropriations we made in the Bureau of Indian Affairs come out of the Indian fund?

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, no; they do not. They come from two sources, but under different conditions. Some of the money comes from Indian tribal funds, but the larger proportion comes from the Federal Treasury. Of that which comes from the Federal Treasury some is reimbursable and some is not.

Mr. SNELL. Are these the same items that are always carried in the Indian Bureau under the old system of appropriating, or practically the same?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I had always understood that all comes from the treasury of the Indians.

Mr. CRAMTON. That never has been the case.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary miscellaneous expenses incident to the general administration of Indian irrigation projects, including salaries of not to exceed five supervising engineers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In general debate on this bill making appropriations for the Interior Department, members of the Appropriations subcommittee in charge of the measure were quite complimentary to each other. I think they were justified in exchanging the compliments, because this committee seems to have found a way for the reestablishment of Government publications. Members of the House will note a line or two in one of the first few paragraphs of the bill, at the bottom of page 6, authorizing the publication of School Life and Glimpses of Our National Parks. These two may be printed to the amount that their respective editors can induce their chiefs to give from the appropriation, which is $145,000. I will not undertake to say which publication will drag down the most money, but I know to a certainty.

However, my purpose in taking the floor is to suggest to the other appropriating subcommittees that if they are being pressed by those who would have certain of the various Government publications reestablished, this committee has pointed the way by which it can be done. We all know that persistence, propaganda, and back fire, properly applied, will make Congress yield, as a rule, and here we have a sample. School Life and Glimpses of Our National Parks have come back. Now, then, why should not the other publications come back by the same method? Shall the Journal of Agricultural Research stay dead, while School Life lives and breathes to the extent of 30,000 copies per issue?

Is there no hope for the Monthly Labor Review, while Glimpses of Our National Parks resume their bright pages to lure the rich to the wonders of the far West? Is it more important to know about Old Faithful geyser than it is to know the cost of bread?

If the Government magazines are to come back one by one, what incentive is there for the Committee on Printing to wrestle with a plan for uniformity in printing and distribution of certain ones which can be shown to be desirable and necessary?

I do not say that School Life is not intrinsically good, as far as it goes. The trouble is the matter of distribution. School Life may be a very fine publication, and I have no doubt that its editor and its assistant editor know that it is a fine publication. However, it has a circulation of only 30,000 copies. It was said a few moments ago that School Life is necessary to spread the information gathered by the Bureau of Education. Thirty thousand copies will not spread that information very far.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; it was to interpret it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, then, even to interpret it, 30,000 copies are not enough, and two editors can hardly make a start.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman mentioned the complimentary speeches that have been made. Would they be reproduced in these publications?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They may be and perhaps might well be. I wish, however, that everyone would understand that the Sixty-sixth Congress provided that periodicals and journals and magazines of the Government should not be continued unless specifically authorized by Congress. These publications had come into existence literally by the hundred, and the date set for the death of the unauthorized magazines was set at June 1, 1921. That Congress lost heart somewhere and extended the time of execution until December 1, 1921. That was done in the other legislative body. On that date they died, and great was the lamentation. Since then, so far as I have been able to ascertain, instead of being the man who struck them all down, I am the Member who is trying to get some of them back in a legitimate and proper manner, and I am confronted all of a sudden by a device here on the part of a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations that slips in a couple of them and thus lets down the bars so that they can all be started up again. Now, then, if those who know how to handle propaganda and back fire will get busy with the Committee on Appropriations, instead of putting all of their time on the Committee on Printing, they can probably get a whole lot of these publications restored. I say this with earnestness and in good faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In this very bill, where are the friends of the Indians, that they have not sought here to revive the Indian school publications which were struck down? What good does it do the members of the Committee on Printing to go before the Committee on Agriculture with a plan by which desirable Federal publications may be restored? What will the public think when they see the 30,000 copies of School Life restored, while so valuable a publication as the Journal of Scientific Research is still dead?

Mr. WALSH. Who gets these copies of School Life? Where is it distributed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As far as I am able to ascertain it goes largely to the higher educational institutions. It was a little eight-page sheet paper, full of good, light school matter that might be really desirable for the country school-teacher. The big colleges, the big places get it. When the poor little country school-teacher writes in for a free copy, she is informed that the appropriation is not sufficient. The Bureau of Education writes that they would like to send it free, but Congress is so stingy that they can not, but that it can be sent for 30 cents a year. They ask these country school-teachers to subscribe. The paid subscription list is, I believe, about 600.

Mr. WALSH. It goes to the higher institutions of learning? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and to exchanges. I do not particularly criticize School Life. It has a mission. One of its duties is to sustain its editor and his assistant. He is endeavoring to get high-school pupils to subscribe for it. One school has subscribed for about 200 copies, and thus education is advanced.

But I call attention to the solution of the Government magazine problem. If Members of Congress are receiving letters calling for the reestablishment of the Journal of Agricultural Research, the Agricultural Experimental Record, or the Monthly Labor Review, do not write back to your constituents that you are helpless. Just go to one of these subcommittees and have them restored. Do not turn your complaints over to the members of the Committee on Printing. Go to the Appropriations Committee, which legislates as it doles out the dough. There is now no excuse for any Government magazine which anybody thinks is as good or better than School Life to stay dead. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that all of these items for irrigation of Indian lands are reimbursable. I want to ask the chairman of the committee to what extent are items of this character being reimbursed?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not offhand tell the gentleman the amount, but I will say that very largely these items are not being reimbursed while the lands are in Indian ownership. Although they are reimbursable, I do not think that a large percentage of the money has come back.

Mr. SNELL. Well, I understood earlier that they are very largely returned. I have also understood, as has the chairman, that none of this money ever comes back.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a lien on the land and sometime will come back. In some cases the Indians upon these lands in the first place are not familiar with irrigation propositions and it is difficult to get them to work the land. There are some cases where there has been quite desirable progress in that direction, and in some other cases not so much. I think the hearings give an idea of the amount that has come back, but I can say to the gentleman that in large part it is not being reimbursed as yet.

Mr. SNELL. I notice this covered a wide area, and I was wondering if it paid to have as many new projects as this bill actually carries unless the Indians are taking advantage of it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The bill does not contain any proposition for the beginning of a new project. Some of them are for maintenance only of existing projects and others for some extensions of existing projects.

Mr. SNELL. It will be the policy of the committee to continue this forever regardless of what advantage the Indians take of it? I do not mean the committee, but I mean the department.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can say this: This year the department did not ask for a new project, and it is my understanding, and in this I may be wrong, because I am not any too familiar with these matters, but it is my understanding that there has been a cutting down on these irrigation developments on these Indian lands as the result of the work of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. SNELL. I feel there should certainly be a beginning of it if there is ever going to be any benefit from it.

Mr. CRAMTON. In some cases progress is being made.

Mr. SNELL. As far as the gentleman knows they were not making much progress on them?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not even say that, but in a majority of the cases they are not in a position apparently to pay this money back.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make this observation. As the chairman of the subcommittee has said, this money is reimbursable and the land itself is security for construction charges. Now, the Government to some extent is coerced in the matter of carrying forward irrigation work where possibly there is not as satisfactory farming of the lands by the Indians as we would like. This comes about for the reason that unless we develop irrigation projects for Indian lands, the water that could be used for irrigation of these lands in another 10 or 25 years will be appropriated by white settlers, and then the Government might need to indemnify the Indians because it can not carry out the treaties it has entered into with them, or, if not indemnify the Indians, leave a situation of great hardship for the Indians to meet.

Mr. SNELL. To what extent are we under obligation to furnish water?

Mr. FRENCH. It depends upon the particular reservation. Take the Yakima Reservation.

The Government a few years ago had to appropriate a million dollars in order to develop an irrigation system to carry out a treaty that it had made 40 or 50 years ago. Again, in many of the public land States, in fact, in all of them, where irrigation prevails, the law does not prevail touching water rights that prevails in the gentleman's State. You have the riparian right, but in arid and semiarid States the right of use prevails, and the first person who appropriates the water for legitimate use has the water.

Now, then, shall we, who, you may say, are the guardians of the Indians, preserve necessary and adequate water for Indian lands, or shall we let it be diverted for some other use now, and let the Indians in another 15 or 20 years wake up to find that the Government, which had been supposed to protect their interests, had not protected them, but on the other hand had permitted them to be the possessors of worthless and barren land, because no water source was left from which irrigation could be had?

Mr. SNELL. Are we obliged to do this without being reimbursed for it?

Mr. FRENCH. For all construction work at least it is planned we will be reimbursed, but whatever reimbursement occurs will be spread over a long period of years. We are meeting the situation in a way that may not be perfectly satisfactory, but still it is the best way we can adopt now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] ought to remember that most of this money is purely for operating expenses. While it is theoretically reimbursable, it never will be reimbursed. But we can not abandon the construction of the irrigation plant.

Mr. SNELL. The construction cost has not been reimbursed?

Mr. MANN. As to the construction cost, that will probably be reimbursed, but we are spending money to operate them. We are not getting back the money to pay the operating expenses, and that seems just like throwing money away, but we can not quit it.

Mr. SNELL. We must keep it up?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I suppose we must keep it up.

Mr. CRAMTON. On this point Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, says in the hearings:

The appropriations requested are largely for maintenance and operation and repairs of present projects; these projects are small and are on the reservations where the Indians have no great amount of money to their credit, and we use Indian labor very largely in doing the work on these projects, so as to give employment to the Indians.

Otherwise we would probably spend as much money in taking care of them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the discussion on that item ended?

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it has been my understanding—perhaps I ought not to use that word—it has been my thought from certain things said to me that the House would not sit later than this to-day. It is perfectly evident that you can not conclude the consideration of the bill this afternoon, and I do not understand that the business of the House is in such condition as to require us to sit longer. Would it not be agreeable for the gentleman to move to rise?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would be glad if the gentleman will defer that for a little time. I have no knowledge of any understanding or expectation that we should rise as early as this. Personally I would be glad to have the committee run as long as we can, but at any rate a little later than this.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wish to reiterate, because I always want to be fair about it, that there was no understanding, but there was a belief that this is about as long as we would want to run.

Mr. MANN. Wait a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of 1 chief irrigation engineer, $4,000; 1 assistant chief irrigation engineer, $3,000; 1 field cost accountant, $2,250; and for traveling incidental expenses of officials and employees of the Indian irrigation service, including sleeping car fare, and a per diem not exceeding $3.50 in lieu of subsistence when actually employed in the field and away from designated headquarters, $5,500; total, $14,750.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TEMPLE). The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 24, line 12, after the word "traveling" insert the word "and."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, that is simply to correct an error in the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all for irrigation on Indian reservations, $149,500, reimbursable as provided in the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stats. L., 582): Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation project for which public funds are or may be otherwise available: Provided further, That the foregoing amounts appropriated for such purposes shall be available interchangeably in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for the necessary expenditures for damages by floods and other unforeseen exigencies: Provided, however, That the amount so interchanged shall not exceed in the aggregate 10 per cent of all the amounts so appropriated.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. What is the necessity for this interchangeable provision in the discretion of the Secretary as to damages by flood, and so forth?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, simply that in the event that on an irrigation project a flood should do very large or serious damage, of course they could not wait to come to Congress for an appropriation to take care of the situation. Possibly you will notice that all these amounts are small, two or three thousand dollars or $4,000 or up to $10,000. This is simply to give them discretion to interchange the amounts in the event of such a catastrophe or emergency.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RELIEVING DISTRESS, ETC.

For the relief and care of destitute Indians not otherwise provided for, and for the prevention and treatment of tuberculosis, trachoma, smallpox, and other contagious and infectious diseases, including transportation of patients to and from hospitals and sanatoria, $370,000: Provided, That this appropriation may be used also for general medical and surgical treatment of Indians, including the maintenance and operation of general hospitals, where no other funds are applicable or available for that purpose: Provided further, That out of the appropriation herein authorized there shall be available for the maintenance of the sanatoria and hospitals hereinafter named, and for incidental and all other expenses for their proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, equipment, and improvements, not to exceed the following amounts: Blackfoot Hospital, Montana, $12,500; Carson Hospital, Nevada, $10,000; Cheyenne and Arapahoe Hospital, Oklahoma, $10,000; Choctaw and Chickasaw Hospital, Oklahoma, $35,000; Fort Lapwai Sanatorium, Idaho, $40,000; Laguna Sanatorium, New Mexico, $17,000; Mesquite Hospital, New Mexico, $10,000; Navajo Sanatorium, Arizona, $10,000; Pima Hospital, Arizona, $13,000; Phoenix Sanatorium, Arizona, $40,000; Spokane Hospital, Washington, $10,000; Sac and Fox Sanatorium, Iowa, $40,000; Turtle Mountain Hospital, North Dakota, $10,000; Winnebago Hospital, Nebraska, $18,000; Crow Creek Hospital, South Dakota, $8,000; Hoopa Valley Hospital, California, $10,000; Jicarilla Hospital, New Mexico, $10,000; Truxton Canyon camp hospital, Arizona, $5,000; Indian Oasis Hospital, Arizona, $10,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the bill at this point, to follow the item just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: On page 26, after line 13, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, and to remain available only until June 30, 1922, for the relief of destitution among Indians, to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the furnishing of food, clothing, and other supplies: Provided, That where able-bodied Indians have no means of support this appropriation may be used to pay such Indians for work performed in the construction of roads or other improvements on the reservation, or for the purchase of necessary seeds and implements to enable them to cultivate their farms: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purchase of food, clothing, or other supplies that can be furnished by the War or Navy Departments or by the United States Shipping Board from surplus stock in time to meet the present emergency; and the War and Navy Departments and the United States Shipping Board shall, upon receipt of formal request therefor, and without charge, turn over to the Indian Service at the point of storage any such surplus food, clothing, or other supplies: And provided further, That a sum equal to the total value of all supplies furnished by the other governmental agencies shall be reserved from the appropriation made herein and be covered back into the Treasury: And provided further, That where relief is given under this resolution to any tribe of Indians having available tribal funds held in trust for such tribe in the Treasury of the United States the expenditure for such relief shall be reimbursed from such tribal funds to the extent that they may be available."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this is more than an appropriation. It is more than making available certain funds to be reimbursed from tribal funds. It is extending the authority of some of the departments of the Government, and providing that certain men may be put to work in return for money to be paid from this appropriation. As I caught it, it contains several features of legislation that this committee does not have jurisdiction to report.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the one made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], which is good and should be sustained, I make the further point of order that it is an amendment providing an appropriation of money to be expended during the present fiscal year, and is not an appropriation of money to be expended during the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, I will speak first of the point raised by the gentleman from Texas. The bill before us makes appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, and a number of rulings were made by the various occupants of the Chair a year ago when the various appropriation bills were up, that inasmuch as the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of deficiency appropriation bills it is in order in one of the regular appropriation bills to include an item for the current year. In the rulings last year that was well established.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will find that in every such instance that was where the Committee on Appropriations itself incorporated the item into the bill when preparing it. This is an entirely different proposition, where the chairman of the subcommittee, unauthorized by the committee, seeks to impose on an appropriation bill for the next fiscal year an amendment from the floor appropriating money to be spent during the present fiscal year. It is not something that has been brought here in an appropriation bill by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. The amendment offered is, in substance, the same as the resolution that was reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and the action of the gentleman from Michigan is only following out the instructions of the Committee on Appropriations. But, further, I do not know of anything in our parliamentary law that gives any greater parliamentary status to a provision in a bill put in by the committee before the bill is reported than to an amendment to that same bill offered on the floor. The gentleman admits impliedly that if this had been put in the bill before it was reported it would have been in order. If so, it is in order when offered as an amendment from the floor either by myself or by the gentleman from Texas or anyone else.

As to the matter suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], on the ground that it is legislation, I wish to say, in the first place, that it is an appropriation of $100,000 and in so far as there is anything in the item that the gentleman from Massachusetts would class as legislation, it is largely in the nature of a limitation. That is to say, it is true that it authorizes the use of certain surplus property instead of cash; but I do not think the gentleman would urge seriously that that renders it subject to a point of order. We provide further that if any Indian tribe have funds available for this use and money is spent for their relief under this resolution, in that case the money expended shall be reimbursable out of the funds of that tribe; and I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts will object to that, either on its merits or on a parliamentary basis. The fact is that Congress by proper legislation, in the act of November 2, 1921, gave specific authority to the Bureau of Indian Affairs to do certain things, and if the appropriation is once granted, then the Bureau of Indian Affairs have authority to do the things necessary to accomplish these purposes. It is provided that the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes: General support and civilization, including education; for the relief of distress and conservation of health; for industrial assistance and advancement and general administration of Indian property.

Those authorizations absolutely warrant the amendment that is offered. Everything sought to be done under that comes under the heads suggested, and is necessary for the proper and economical performance of that function.

Mr. WALSH. What jurisdiction has the Committee on Appropriations over surplus supplies for the War and Navy Departments?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am frank to say that I can not speak positively, but I assume that you can appropriate property of the Government as well as you can appropriate dollars of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. That may be true; but when the Committee on Appropriations starts out on the business of appropriating property, it is legislating and not appropriating. The Committee on Appropriations may appropriate money and that is all.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not admit the gentleman's point; but if that is his most valid parliamentary objection to the bill, and the Chair sustains his point, then I will offer the amendment with that language eliminated. I dare say the gentleman would not care to have that done. If that is the only thing in the amendment that makes it subject to the point of order, then I shall offer it without the language.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. I just want to make this suggestion to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], with reference to his statement concerning the appropriation of tribal funds.

Prior to the year 1915, as I now recall, these tribal funds could be used by the Secretary of the Interior without appropriation by Congress. In the Indian appropriation bill passed during that year there was a limitation placed upon that matter which required the Secretary of the Interior to come to Congress for an appropriation before he could spend tribal funds, and that limitation carried with it the authorization of Congress for the committee to appropriate tribal funds.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his statement, which certainly clears up that portion of the language. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will withhold his point of order temporarily—

Mr. BLANTON. I want to be heard on one point that will cover the other phase of the case.

Mr. CRAMTON. I was going to say that if the gentleman from Massachusetts will withhold the point of order and permit me to place in the Record the statement of Commissioner Burke, I am willing that the committee shall rise.

Mr. BLANTON. And the point of order will be pending?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; the amendment and the point of order will be pending. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record at this point on the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment and the point of order are pending, and the gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the merits of the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. This is the item for immediate emergency relief which was offered as a separate resolution on last suspension day. At that time, while it received a substantial majority of the votes on the roll call, it did not receive the necessary two-thirds, and did not pass.

At that time it was urged upon the floor that at least so far as the Blackfeet Indians are concerned there is no need of this relief. In so far as the remarks of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. RUDICK] referred to the highly colored and sensational newspaper reports of wholesale starvation among those Indians, he was no doubt quite correct in denouncing such reports as exaggerations. But, of course, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Budget office, the President of the United States, and the Committee on Appropriations of this House, each of whom have in turn indorsed and urged the item here proposed of $100,000 for general relief wherever needed among the Indians, who are the wards of the Government, have not been led to such action by such newspaper propaganda and irresponsible exaggerations.

There is an immediate and pressing need for relief among the Blackfeet of Montana and 30 other tribes scattered well through the West. That this is true is well established by thoroughly reliable and competent evidence. No one has starved to death or frozen to death, and no such fatalities in wholesale number are expected in any event. But if this appropriation is not made there is good reason to believe that many will suffer from cold and hunger, want of food and clothing. The amount is not large, considering that the Indians to be aided will number many thousands.

The amendment provides that the able-bodied Indians must work in return for whatever is supplied them. It is also provided that so far as available the surplus stores of the War Department, and so forth, shall be utilized, cutting down the cash expenditures half or two-thirds. Further, that if a tribe has any available tribal funds in the Treasury any relief given such tribe shall be reimbursed to the Federal Treasury from such tribal funds.

I called to the attention of Hon. Charles H. Burke, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the questions raised concerning the need for this item, particularly among the Blackfeet, and have the following letter from him in thorough support of the item. It will be noted that Commissioner Burke says he spent five days on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana last August and made a thorough investigation and found conditions then "were such as to convince me of the need of additional help in order to prevent hardship and actual suffering this winter." His statement covers the situation thoroughly in a conservative and explicit way and makes apparent the need of the item. He writes the following letters of February 8 and February 9:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 8, 1922.

Hon. L. C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: This will refer to H. J. Res. 264, providing for the relief of destitution among Indians. The original estimate, based on reports from the field, was $155,992. Of this amount, $114,297 was intended for the Indians of the Papago and San Carlos Reservations in Arizona and the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana, as follows:

Papago	$25,000
San Carlos	25,000
Blackfeet	64,297
Total	114,297

The remainder of the amount requested ($40,625) is required in various smaller amounts for similar purposes on different reservations. The Papago and San Carlos Indians have no tribal funds to their credit, but the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation have tribal funds to the amount of approximately $65,000 on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, which, however, is not available for expenditure without specific authority of Congress.

The situation on the Blackfeet Reservation is the most serious owing to the extremely severe winters which prevail in that section. I spent five days on the reservation last August and made a thorough investigation. I found no starving Indians, and do not believe there have been any. However, the conditions were such as to convince me of the need of additional help in order to prevent hardship and actual suffering this winter. The superintendent—one of the best men in the service and in whom I have every confidence—reports that it will be necessary to ration 1,500 Indians for five months, at an estimated cost of $27,640, in addition to the supplies already authorized. This represents a reduction of 500 as compared with the number receiving rations last winter—2,000. Besides the food supplies, additional clothing and blankets will be necessary, at an estimated cost of $20,732. In order to assist the able-bodied Indians in their efforts at self-support by the cultivation of their land, thereby reducing the number on the ration roll, it will be necessary to furnish them with seed and implements next spring, at an estimated cost of $15,925.

The tribal funds of the Blackfeet Indians now in the Treasury—$65,000—are being drawn upon each year for general support and civilization purposes under authority of Congress, $39,000 therefrom being included in our regular estimates for the fiscal year 1923. This amount must come out of the $65,000 mentioned above, leaving only $26,000 for future authorization, which at the present rate of annual expenditure will not be sufficient for another year.

All the Indians to be furnished aid are wards of the Government. The supplies on hand will soon be exhausted and no money is available for the purchase of the additional supplies necessary. The need is immediate and the quantity of supplies that can be furnished by other governmental agencies in time to meet the present emergency is problematical. While as above stated there have thus far been no starving Indians on the reservations mentioned, there will undoubtedly be considerable distress and suffering during the present winter unless means for relief are provided as contemplated by the resolution.

In view of the fact that part of the winter has already elapsed, the total amount of the estimate has been reduced to $100,000.

Cordially, yours,

CHAS. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 9, 1922.

Hon. L. C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: Referring to H. J. Res. 264, to provide funds for the relief of destitute Indians, I have just received the following telegram from Mr. F. C. Campbell, our superintendent at Blackfeet, where the situation is the most serious:

"Great Falls Tribune, February 8, carries Washington dispatch, February 7: 'Opposing the proposed appropriations, Representative RUDICK, Republican, of Montana, declared he personally had investigated the situation at the Blackfeet Reservation, in Montana, where the Indian Service had reported the situation especially bad, and found there was no need for Government relief.' As the office knows, we are now using rations that were originally intended for about 500 old and indigent Indians. Since December 1 the ration roll has increased from 425 to 900. In all probability it will be necessary to issue to about 1,600. We now have sufficient supplies to take care of the situation for about four weeks, after which time either Congress or some other agency will have to provide, or else there will be serious destitution." This telegram will serve to show the urgency of the situation and the necessity of funds being made available at once.

Cordially, yours,

CHAS. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TEMPLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10329, the Interior Department appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, THE CONGRESSMAN.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing a talk I gave last night by wireless telephone on Abraham Lincoln, the Congressman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by printing an address on Abraham Lincoln, the Congressman. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The address is as follows:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, THE CONGRESSMAN.

Mr. CABLE. Throughout this broad land of ours and in many remote spots in the Eastern as well as the Western Hemisphere, I doubt if there is a person living who does not know of Abraham Lincoln, the greatest character of his age. We all know of him as the great emancipator and the foremost thinker of his time, but how much do we know of Lincoln as a Member of Congress? In fact, how many of us even remember that he ever served in the House of Representatives?

All sides and periods of Lincoln's life are worthy of study, but inasmuch as the great work which he did in later years was so magnificent it totally eclipsed his political life from young manhood until he came into national prominence.

Lincoln, always a man of the people, the truest type of American statesman, served one term in the Thirtieth Congress of the United States. He did not seek reelection by reason of a friendly understanding that existed in his district among the members of his party, the Whigs. Although but 37 years of age at the time of his election, he came to Congress skilled and proficient in the art of politics and statesmanship, acquired by experience and his keen insight of human nature.

By no means was Lincoln an amateur at holding public office. In addition to being captain of a company of Sagamon County Rifles, he had served two terms in the Illinois State Legislature and was the Whig candidate for speaker each term; he was deputy county surveyor; postmaster at New Salem, Ill.; he had made two campaigns for Congress before being successful; he had served as a member of the Whig State central committee, and in addition was on the Harrison electoral ticket in 1840 and on the Clay ticket in 1844.

But little has been recorded of his life in Washington as a Member of the House, but it is known that he occupied a seat in the Chamber in the center of the last row on the left-hand side. With eight other Members he boarded with a Mrs. Spriggs, whose house was located on the spot now occupied by the fountain in front of the Congressional Library.

He served on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of which Joseph M. Root, of Norwalk, Ohio, was the chairman. He also was a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

Abraham Lincoln is best known for his untiring and successful fight against slavery. He will always be known as the Great Emancipator. He carried this fight into the halls of Congress. Fifteen days after the session began a memorial against slave trade in the District of Columbia was presented to Congress by residents of the District. A motion to lay the memorial on the table, or, in other words, to kill it, was made. Lincoln by his vote saved it, as the result of the roll call stood 97 to 97, the Speaker also voting in the negative, thus permitting it to be considered by the Judiciary Committee.

Following this Lincoln introduced a bill to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia. It provided that the question should be determined by a vote of the white male citizens over 21 years of age who had resided in the District for more than a year. The owners of the slaves were to receive full cash value for their loss from the United States Treasury and the slaves a certificate of freedom. A board consisting of the President, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury were to pass upon the value of the slaves. Also Lincoln's bill provided that all persons born of slave mothers were to be free.

Lincoln's record in Congress showed that he also favored adjusted compensation for soldiers. At the time he took his seat in the House all the battles of the Mexican War had been fought, but the American Army was still in Mexico. The records show that Lincoln voted for all measures favorable to the soldiers and their families. At one time he introduced an amendment after obtaining the floor to grant bounty lands to men who had served as privates in the Mexican War. He also suggested that bounties be given to all volunteers of the War of 1812.

Lincoln also favored Federal aid for the construction of highways. In his single term as Congressman he made less than a dozen speeches, and one of his most important talks was a reply to the President's veto message against improvement by Federal aid.

"If the Nation refuses to make improvements of the more general kind because their benefits may be somewhat local," said Lincoln, "a State may for the same reason refuse to make any improvement of a local nature because its benefits may be somewhat general. A State may well say to the Nation, 'If you will do nothing for me, I will do nothing for you.'"

In the same speech he said: "This Capital is built at the public expense and for the public benefit; but does anyone doubt that it is of some peculiar local advantage to the property owners and the business people of Washington? Shall we remove it for this reason? And if so, where shall we set it down and be free from the difficulty? To make sure of our object shall we locate it nowhere, and have Congress hereafter to hold its sessions, as the loafer lodged, 'in spots about'?"

Lincoln was always active for the party workers. Then, as well as now, there were men who deserved reward for their efforts, and Lincoln was always ready to see them rewarded, as he was a good party man. He often reminded Cabinet members in his persistent, good-natured way that a vacancy should exist in various departments, as the place was now held by one who had failed in the proper discharge of any of the duties of his office. Then, again, the records show that Lincoln would call the department head's attention to the fact that some Democrats under their employ were distinctly partisan and openly opposed the election of Gen. Taylor. Lincoln also brought charges against the Democratic postmaster of Springfield, Ill., on the grounds of political activity. He also insisted, inasmuch as he and a Col. Baker were the only Whigs from Illinois, that they be consulted before any appointments were made in that State.

Even in his single term in Congress Lincoln gained great popularity, and his wit, his command of the English language, and his ability to attack his political enemies on the floor of the House brought him much attention. The Congressional Globe tells us that "he was able to obtain the floor amongst many competitors." At one time Lincoln stated that he wanted to make a general talk, but he would give way to take up the question which was pending. However, for fear that he would not talk there were cries throughout the House of "No! No! Go on."

His unflinching frankness and honesty at one time brought him a rebuke from a Member of the House when the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had reported out a bill which authorized the Postmaster General to enter into a contract with the railroads to carry the mails. This was but a month after the session began. Lincoln rose and said: "I have made an effort for some few days since to obtain the floor, but have failed. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is composed of five Whigs and four Democrats. The report has met the approval of all Whigs and all Democrats except one. I want to say further than this."

At this point he was interrupted by a Member who gave Lincoln to understand that it was not in order to ever mention on the floor of the House what had taken place in the committee.

Lincoln then said: "If I have been out of order in what I have said, I take it all back so far as I can."

At this there was much laughter. He then continued: "I have no desire, I assure you, gentlemen, to be out of order, although I can never keep long in order."

Some Members of Congress, if mentioned in history at all, are known by a law that bears their name. Not so with Lincoln. No such law exists, as far as I can find; neither is one needed. His fame will be perpetuated long after the laws of his Congress are repealed or forgotten. The services he rendered in the House aided in his broad comprehension of the needs of the Nation that followed. His bills were few. They chiefly dealt with the problems of the Post Office Department. He prepared reports on other bills reported out by the committee. One permitted the postmasters at county seats to take subscriptions for newspapers and periodicals.

Lincoln recognized the power of the press and the need of newspapers, for he said in his report: "Our republican institutions can best be sustained by the diffusion of knowledge and the due encouragement of a universal spirit of inquiry and discussion of public events through the medium of the public press."

The logic of his debates in the House could not be answered. Courage, honesty of purpose, just dealings with his fellow men, both in Congress and out, made him the one great figure of the age.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 13, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

522. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of leases granted by the Secretary of War during the calendar year 1921; to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 13, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee this morning for the men who have given luster and character by devotion and consecration to the highest influences that make for the country's welfare. We thank Thee for him and his present influence continuing through the years whose natal anniversary has been so close to us. The Lord enable us to understand the high purposes and the singular devotion and the noble patriotism which distinguished his career. May the days as they come and go better express to the world at large as to the people of our loved land that patriotism pays in the highest sense and to the glory of Thy name. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, February 3, 1922, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

INCREASE OF SALARIES IN PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, while I am perfectly conscious that no Senator by giving a notice can secure any additional rights, nevertheless, in behalf of the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I desire to give notice that immediately upon the disposition by the Senate of the pending unfinished business the Senator from California will move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7077) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes.

This is a very important measure, known as the Lampert bill. A similar bill was passed by both branches of the Congress at the last session, but failed in conference, owing to the inclusion of a matter not closely related to the question of increasing salaries.

I wish to say that there is the greatest interest throughout the country in saving the Patent Office from total disruption. I have rarely been connected with a measure in which there has been such widespread interest and to which there appears so little opposition as there is to the question of giving sufficient pay to the very high-class employees of the Patent Office.

I hope that at last, inasmuch as the subject has been pending for several years, the Senate, before it gets implicated in the great questions of the treaties and the tariff, will take up this measure and dispose of it.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I present a telegram from the State of Washington Tax Investigation Committee, by Nathan Eckstein, chairman, protesting against the proposed Federal tax on gasoline, which I move be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented seven petitions of sundry citizens of Creston, Wilbur, Rocklyn, Peach, Dayton, Spokane, Hood River, Yakima, Huntsville, Turner, and of Columbia County, all in the State of Washington, and of Moscow, in the State of Idaho, relative to the condition of agriculture, and praying for the enactment of legislation fixing the minimum price on wheat at $1.50 per bushel at Pacific coast terminal points for a period of three years or more, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KING. I present a letter signed by L. C. Montgomery, chairman of the Utah Cattle and Horse Growers' Association, inclosing a petition praying that the live stock owners of the West who hold permits to graze stock on the national forests be relieved from the payment of grazing fees for the year 1922 and for other relief. I move that the letter and petition be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have received a number of letters, some of them in the form of petitions, which I have not brought to the Senate this morning, protesting against the alleged monopoly of the Standard Oil Trust and its subsidiary organizations, and praying that certain resolutions now pending before the Committee on Commerce may receive attention and that the alleged activities of the Standard Oil Trust and its subsidiary corporations, which, it is alleged, are destroying independent companies, be investigated.

I ask that the Committee on Commerce take notice of these communications, which informally I thus bring to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. FERNALD. I present a resolution adopted by the National Cannery Association at their annual meeting at Louisville, Ky., representing an organization with an output of $800,000,000 per year, favoring the policy of extending administrative freedom in the execution of the tariff laws so as to meet the rapidly changing foreign tariff situation requiring prompt action in emergencies. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LADD presented the petitions of Charles A. Wales and 35 others, of Van Hook and vicinity; Carl S. Hillestad and 4 others, of Esmond and vicinity; Elbert M. Pedersen and 17 others, of Brady and vicinity; N. B. Garnas and 245 others, of Oberon and vicinity; Oscar Strand and 83 others, of Plaza and vicinity; C. Mathson and 8 others, of Williston; S. L. Jordahl and 26 others, of Regan and vicinity; David Gallaway and 13 others, of Epworth; Alfred J. Egli and 19 others, of New Salem and vicinity; Nels Ronon and 9 others, of Rolla; Mrs. R. H. Joos and 16 others, of Wimbledon; Charles Serr and 26 others, of Upham and vicinity; C. E. and G. S. Anderson, of Souris; and Fred Speak and 20 others, of New Rockford, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation reviving the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of H. P. Kayser, of Cathay, N. Dak., praying for extension of relief to the suffering peoples of Austria by deferring payment of Austria's debt for 20 years, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1734) to correct the military record of William B. Johns, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to erect and maintain a hotel upon the Fort Monroe Military Reservation in Virginia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 492) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8924) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved March 30, 1920, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 493) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3046) to donate the gates at the head of West Executive Avenue, in the city of Washington, D. C., to the Hayes Memorial Museum, Fremont, Ohio, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 494) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 854) to reimburse J. B. Glanville and others for losses and damages sustained by them through the negligent dipping of tick-infested cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 495) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KELLOGG:

A bill (S. 3142) amending an act entitled "An act to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes," approved November 23, 1921; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 3143) making an appropriation to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station in the Lake States; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 3144) granting a pension to Annie M. Biggs; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3145) providing that certain vessels in certain circumstances may be documented and admitted to the coastwise trade; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. DIAL:

A bill (S. 3146) to amend section 5 of the United States cotton futures act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

APPOINTMENTS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. SWANSON. I introduce a resolution which I ask may be read and go over under the rule.

The resolution (S. Res. 236) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate be directed to investigate and report to the Senate to what extent the Post Office Department has violated acts of Congress and Executive orders of the Presidents in making appointments of postmasters and rural carriers in the following particulars:

To what extent have results of examinations held by the United States Civil Service Commission and the results thereof certified to the Post Office Department been ignored and acting postmasters been appointed in lieu of regular appointees?

To what extent have acting postmasters been continued in office after eligibles have been secured as the result of examinations held by the United States Civil Service Commission and certification made to the Post Office Department?

To what extent have eligible registers been set aside before the legal termination of the eligibility of the individuals and examinations held to create a new list of eligibles?

To what extent has the intent of Congress been ignored as expressed by act of Congress approved July 11, 1919, granting preference to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines in making appointments of postmasters and rural carriers?

To what extent have the Executive orders of the President dated April 13, 1920, and October 8, 1920, been violated in making appointments of postmasters of the first, second, and third class?

To what extent have appointments been made of postmasters to offices of the fourth class of persons failing to pass required examination, or whose standing on the eligible register was fourth or lower?

To what extent have postmasters and rural carriers been removed from office and vacancies created under charges of political activity?

To what extent have acting postmasters been appointed to offices of the first, second, and third class while Congress was in session and such appointments not reported to the Senate, the person so appointed discharging the duties and receiving the compensation of postmaster without being confirmed by the Senate; also whether such appointments are not in violation of or an evasion of existing law?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

EX-PRESIDENT WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record, following the statement I am about to make, an editorial that appears in the last issue of Collier's Weekly entitled "The man they can not forget." It seems to me it might be appropriate in view of the fact that three years ago he laid before the Senate certain treaties, and there are now pending treaties covering in part the same situation as was covered in the former treaties. I ask that the editorial be printed in the Record in the regular 8-point type.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

THE MAN THEY CAN NOT FORGET.

[From Collier's Weekly, Feb. 18, 1922.]

One of the permanent possessions of a human heart is the memory of its great enthusiasms. You may have come to disdain and even despise them, but they are never uprooted. Then you reached your highest, and you know it.

When a noble ideal kindles such enthusiasms, that ideal becomes one of those things that without warning, at rare intervals, flares up. And you sit in the light of the flare and ponder. Why did it fail? Not because it was not beautiful, right, desirable. Was it because you were not fit for beauty, righteousness, desirability?

Peoples are like men. They may lay aside their great hopes, but to the end there are hours when they sit with them and ponder.

Perhaps that is the explanation of the persistent, mysterious, unconscious way in which men to-day draw together around Woodrow Wilson. It requires explanation. Why, in Washington for months now, has the sight-seeing wagon followed his car? Why do the chattering tourists inside grow silent as they pass it? They don't peer. They lift their hats and sigh, and it sometimes takes minutes and striking sights to break the mood the fleeting glimpse of that drawn, long, white face has stirred.

Why is it that on Sundays and holidays men and women and children, most of them busy through the week, walk to his house and stand there in groups, speak together in hushed tones as if something solemn and ennobling moved in them? Curiosity? Men chatter and gibe and jostle in curiosity. These people are silent, gentle, and orderly. You will see them before the theater on nights when it is known that Mr. Wilson is within, quietly waiting for him to come out. There will be fifty, a hundred, even sometimes a thousand.

They cheer him as he passes, and there are often chokes in the cheers, and always tenderness. Why do they do it? Nothing more instinctive, more unplanned, goes on in Washington. Let it be known that he is in his seat in a theater, and the whole house will rise in homage. Let his face be thrown on the screen, and it will draw a greeting that the face of no other living American receives. And that is not true in Washington alone.

Why should the vast throng that packed Pennsylvania Avenue from end to end on armistice day have stood reverently, with heads bared in silence as the bier of the unknown soldier passed, attended by all the official greatness of the moment—the President, his Cabinet, the Supreme Court, the House, the Senate, the Diplomatic Corps, Pershing, Foch—why should this great crowd have watched in silence until, quite unexpectedly, a carriage far down the line came to view? Why should this crowd, unconscious of what it was doing, have broken into a low cry of sympathy and grief, "There's Wilson!" The cry flew down the long Avenue.

They saw him as the man who had called into service the boy they honored, who had put the wonderful light in his eye, that light of which a great French surgeon said, "The American soldier is different from all others. I don't know what it is, whether it is God, the Monroe doctrine, or President Wilson; but he has something in his eye." Yes; Wilson's place was by the dead soldier, and the people knew it, and told him so by their unconscious outburst.

Woodrow Wilson means something to the people of the United States; something profound, something they can not forget. People think of him now as the man who was behind the inspiration of their greatest moments; who stirred them to a fresh understanding of the meaning of words that had become mere patter on many tongues—"democracy," "union." He made them realities, personal, deep—showed them as the reason of all that is good in our present, all that is hopeful in our future, the working basis on which men may strive to liberty or soul and peaceful achievement. He made them literally things to die for, lifting all of our plain, humble thousands who never knew applause or wealth or the honor of office into the ranks of those who are willing to die for an ideal—the highest plane that humans reach.

People are thinking also of his work in that afterwar period, when the hate, revenge, and bitterness that war has loosed have none of the restraints that war compels, and we must, by reason and good will and patience, restore our controls—that terrible period we speak of as reconstruction. There, too, he kindled enthusiasms. "Now," he said, "let us do what men have long dreamed—give to each people its chance, cut down the foolish barriers of trade, limit our armaments, enter into a union of all nations pledged to cooperation and peace."

The peoples of the earth rallied to his plan, pledged themselves. And then the loosed passions began their war on him. Those who wanted peace and believed it easy; those who hated peace and believed it impossible; those who envied his place, differed with his judgments, failed of his favor—these and many more joined in an attack such as few men have ever faced in the history of this earth. He fought to a finish that he might secure the pledge of the nations to the ideal of world cooperation.

He won—won with the peoples of the world, if not with all of their Governments. They look to him as the man who drove that ideal so deep into the souls of the nations that no man or men can ever destroy it. It has become an asset of tormented humanity, a possible way out of slaughter and hate. Through all the future men will be building upon it, adapting, expanding, as men have built on Washington's work, on Lincoln's work, knowing that their efforts rest on something essentially sound and secure.

They are simple people, remember, those thousands whose hearts he had enkindled. They are the people who do the work of the world, and their minds are easily bewildered. "He has deceived you," they were told. "He has given you dreams. Dreams are not for men. You live by realities, not ideals. Out with him! Down with him! As a great nation, you have strength, you have gold. Keep them. Stand alone. Do not forget that you do not live by ideals."

And the people withdrew—bewildered. But the shouting over, they remembered their long days of exaltation, of sacrifice, of freedom and boldness, of worthwhileness. Was it only a deception? Was all they had felt a mere magic of words on their untrained minds, the stir of a fleeting passion in their lives? Was there no sense, no reality, in it all?

That is what thousands upon thousands have been asking in these past days. And slowly they are turning to him who led them. His suffering face and palsied side are a symbol of their crippled hopes. "How is it with him," they ask, "a living sacrifice to that faith and that vision? Does he still believe? Has he lost faith as well as strength?"

And so they seek him. He means something to them; they don't quite know what. He is a living link with their noblest phase. Those who destroyed that phase are giving them nothing in its place. What does it all mean? And so they follow his carriage, gather before his house, stand in rain and snow and cold before the theater to get even the most fleeting glimpse, something that will bid them live again as they did in those great moments.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The calendar is in order under Rule VIII.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar begin where we left off the last time, at Order of Business No. 420.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have a bill pending which is the first bill on the calendar, which I am very anxious to have disposed of. I ask the Senator from Kansas if he will not so modify his request as to enable me to have that bill first considered?

Mr. CURTIS. I have asked unanimous consent that the procedure which I have suggested be followed because I know that there are on the calendar a number of bills preceding the Order of Business which I have indicated which, if taken up, will occupy the entire morning hour. As there is unfinished business coming up at 2 o'clock, I thought we might save time if we agreed, by unanimous consent, that the calendar be proceeded with where its consideration was last left off, and that we might go through the calendar from that point. There are a number of bills on the calendar subsequent to Order of Business 420 to which there will be no objection and which ought to be disposed of. I am told that the bill referred to by the Senator from South Carolina will be opposed; that there are a number of Senators who wish to make speeches upon it. So if that bill be taken up this morning it will occupy the entire morning hour and we shall in all probability have no other business considered at all. It is merely in the interest of what appears to be the best and most orderly procedure that I have made the request.

Mr. McNARY. I have been informed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] that he would object to unanimous consent for the consideration of Order of Business 22, being Senate bill 384, to which I understand the Senator from South Carolina refers.

Mr. DIAL. As I understand, the question of unanimous consent is not involved, as to-day is calendar day. However, I shall not now insist on the consideration of the bill to which I have referred, but I do hope to have the bill disposed of at an early day. I am interested in at least one bill farther down on the calendar than is the bill to which I have referred which I should like to have passed to-day. Therefore I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. NEW. I ask what is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the request of the Senator from Kansas.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with where the Senate left off when the calendar was last under consideration, namely, at Order of Business No. 420.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I do not know that I can very well object to that request, and I am not disposed to object to it, but there are a number of bills on the calendar immediately preceding that referred to in the request, which I am very anxious to have considered. I wonder if the Senator from Kansas would modify his request to some extent, so as to make it possible to secure their consideration?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I made the request in order to save time. I am satisfied that if the Senate takes up the bills to which the Senator from Indiana refers the morning hour will be consumed without any business practically being disposed of on the calendar. I should like to see the calendar gone through with. When that shall have been done, if there is any time remaining before 2 o'clock it could be devoted to other measures that might be taken up by unanimous consent or even by motion.

Mr. NEW. Of course, I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will state Order of Business No. 420.

CHARLES S. FRIES.

The bill (S. 2445) for the relief of Charles S. Fries was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before giving consent to the consideration of that bill, I should like to ask whether, under existing law, compensation would not be provided for the proposed beneficiary? My understanding is that, under existing law, certain employees of the Government who suffer injuries within the scope of their employment are entitled to compensation. If the employment of the beneficiary of this bill comes within that category there would apparently be no necessity for the bill. If not, what is there to distinguish this case from cases of employees of the Government who do receive compensation for injuries?

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] is familiar with the bill, and I suggest that he may be able to answer the question of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I regret to say that I am not familiar with the circumstances of the bill. I did not report the bill.

Mr. KING. I suggest that the bill be passed over temporarily until some Senator comes into the Chamber who is familiar with it. I am not urging any opposition to it, but I think we ought to have some explanation of it.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I regret that I can not give a definite answer to the question of the Senator from Utah. I understand, however, that this bill has been pending for some time, and that it is a very worthy case. Of course, it has been favorably reported by the Committee on Claims, which I think made a very thorough investigation of the facts in the case. I trust the Senator from Utah will not object to the bill, because I believe it to be a meritorious measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no doubt the Senator believes the bill is meritorious, and quite likely it is. Unfortunately, however, the report gives us no information relative to the case. I have propounded the inquiry whether under existing law this claimant might not receive compensation; and if not, why not?

Mr. CAMERON. I am unable to answer that question.

Mr. KING. The report on the bill is very incomplete. I suggest the bill be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF FRANK R. TOBIN DECEASED.

The bill (S. 2323) for the relief of Anna M. Tobin, independent executrix of the estate of Frank R. Tobin, deceased, was announced as next in order, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Anna M. Tobin, independent executrix of the estate of Frank R. Tobin, deceased, the sum of $1,000, in full settlement for damages to said estate by soldiers of the United States Army in 1916 and 1917, near El Paso, Tex.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask for an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I ask that the report on the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report on the bill.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the report (No. 419) submitted by Mr. CAPPER on January 16 (calendar day, January 17), 1922, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2323) for the relief of Anna M. Tobin, independent executrix of the estate of Frank R. Tobin, deceased, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in Senate Report No. 407, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 407, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1533) for the relief of Anna M. Tobin, independent executrix of the estate of Frank R. Tobin, deceased, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with an amendment.

In line 4, strike out the figures "$2,238.60" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,500."

In the years 1916 and 1917 the United States Government had, at and near the city of El Paso, Tex., a great many of the State militia, they having been encamped at Fort Bliss and in the neighboring country. Near these camps is a place known as Tobin, Tex., same being about a mile or two from the place where the Pennsylvania Militia were encamped. This town of Tobin is owned by the Frank R. Tobin estate, and this estate is being administered by his widow, Mrs. Frank R. Tobin, or Anna M. Tobin, as independent executrix. There are, or were, several houses at this small place and also a pumping plant, including gasoline engine, well, etc.

While the militia was encamped in this county they literally destroyed the property at Tobin. The pumping station was broken, a fire engine was torn to pieces, and the houses were mutilated and almost ruined.

Your committee, after carefully considering the evidence submitted, is of the opinion that the claim for damages is a meritorious one and that the estate should be reimbursed in the sum of $1,500.

The facts in detail are fully set forth in the following correspondence which is appended hereto and made a part of this report:

INSPECTOR, SEVENTH DIVISION, N. G. U. S.,

The COMMANDING GENERAL DIVISION,

Camp Stewart, El Paso, Tex.:

Returned with report. This day, in company with J. F. Woodson, Esq., counsel for Mrs. Tobin, of El Paso, Tex., and Mr. Coles, of the same place, I visited the premises alleged to have been damaged, and found marked evidence of wanton damage to the several buildings in the nature of broken windows, doors, plumbing fixtures, damaged and defaced interior and exterior woodwork; some of the plumbing fixtures and woodwork are missing, the fire engine has been stripped of all metal parts detachable, and in many cases parts have been knocked off, thus breaking the fixtures, and the same is true of the water pump. If all this damage was done by the militia, their injury to Mrs. Tobin would be substantial, and Mr. Coles estimates the cost of restoring the same to its former condition at not less than $1,000. From pencil marks on the walls and woodwork it appears that it was not alone boys from Pennsylvania, but from Rhode Island, Massachusetts, North Carolina, and Kentucky who took part in this destruction, and that some of the visits to the premises have been up until shortly before this investigation. At the time of the original damage and complaint Gen. Clements did offer to have the parties found upon the premises make restoration, but in the presence of the offenders the representation was made on behalf of Mrs. Tobin that she did not care that the boys should do this, but was anxious that a guard should be established about the premises for the protection thereof from further injury. Gen. Clements is of the opinion that had he been permitted to handle this matter as he thought best all future trouble should have been avoided and Mrs. Tobin saved the damage to her property and the expense of maintaining a civilian guard. As shown by the draft attached to Mr. Woodson's letter, it will be seen the premises in question are at least 1 mile distant from our nearest troops and is on the opposite side of the railroad and beyond the limits of Camp Stewart. To-day Mr. Woodson stated his intention to make claim for the damage done, and in this connection further stated he thought the burden should rest upon the United States. In addition, he asks a guard be furnished from this division, and from reasons apparent from the above report Gen. Clements declined to do this.

M. M. TAGGART,

Major, Inspector Seventh Division, N. G. U. S.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not ask that any more of the report be read, for I see that it embraces several pages. I have hurriedly read through the report, and I submit to the Senate whether, under the circumstances of this case, the Government is liable. The facts seem to be that some members of the militia committed acts of vandalism upon the property of Mrs. Tobin. After something had been done by way of destruction, and before all of the destruction had been wrought by the militia, one of the officers of the Army went to Mrs. Tobin, ascertained what the damages were, detected who the offenders were, and offered to have payment made by those who had committed the wrong; but Mrs. Tobin, apparently, indicated that she had no desire that the militiamen who had done this wrong and committed the acts of vandalism should be made to pay and, apparently, was satisfied to let the matter rest, provided a guard was furnished in the future, which was done. So far as I can discover, no other acts of vandalism were committed for which any compensation is claimed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I desire to call his attention to the fact that it appears further on in the report that the depredations continued and grew to such an extent that Mrs. Tobin was compelled to place a private guard over her property at an expense of $75 per month, who remained until after the militia had left the place.

A study of the report will show that what Gen. Clements promised was to restore the bricks and doors taken, that Mrs. Tobin and her attorney did not understand that he promised payment; that Gen. Clements stated he would court-martial the men who did the damage, but that Mrs. Tobin and her attorney said they did not want this done, that what they wanted was protection; that no property was restored and that after the interview with Gen. Clements the depredations continued as heretofore stated.

Mr. KING. I notice on page 7 of the report a letter signed by H. L. Scott, major general, Chief of Staff, Acting Secretary of War, in which it is stated:

From these facts as set forth in the papers referred to it is shown that the damages incurred to Mrs. Tobin's property were due to the wanton acts of individual soldiers for which they alone could be held responsible, and it is considered probable that had the offer of Gen. Clements to require the soldiers found guilty of the acts of vandalism to make reparation therefor further depredations to the property of Mrs. Tobin would have ceased. Claim for the damages incurred as set forth in the papers can not be favorably considered by this department, the damage being in the nature of torts committed by individual soldiers.

Those are the facts, apparently. Acts of vandalism were committed by individual soldiers. An officer of the Army offered to compel payment, and the owner of the property refused that course. Later, as suggested by the Senator from Texas, further acts of vandalism were committed; and an investigation, as reported by Gen. Scott, discloses the fact that if his offer had been accepted no further acts of damage would have been committed. The acts were those of individuals. They were torts of individuals. If the Senate feels that under those circumstances the Government should pay, I shall make no further objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the last paragraph of the report of Col. Carter, the Army inspector, who seems to have gone into the whole matter very thoroughly; and he concludes his report with this recommendation:

In the absence of sufficient evidence to fix the responsibility for the damage suffered by Mrs. Tobin on particular individuals or organizations of the Army, it is deemed but just that Mrs. Tobin should be reimbursed by the Government. If no funds are available for the purpose, I recommend that Mrs. Tobin be asked to submit a detailed statement of the amount of damage done, and when this has been verified Congress be asked to appropriate the money.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. Suppose that a number of soldiers who come to Washington from their camps surrounding the city should commit acts of arson or assaults upon individuals, or should steal property, acting individually. They are not drilling. They are not under command of an officer. They are here temporarily, furloughed or released for the day, and they commit the acts to which I have just referred. Does the Senator think the Government should pay?

Mr. CAPPER. That is a pretty close question; but the difficulty here seems to have been in placing the responsibility. This inspector admits that they have not been able really to place the responsibility on the particular unit or organization or soldiers; and yet the Army admits, through its representative who was placed in charge of this investigation and who evidently has gone into it very thoroughly, that there is an obligation there upon the part of the Government, and this is the only way in which it can be met.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that if we pass this bill without some restrictions, we are going to establish a precedent the effects of which can not be foretold. If the Government is to be responsible for the tort of every soldier, not while he is in the line of duty, not in service, but when he is on furlough, or when he is released for the day, when he is outside of the reservation, when he is away from the camp—if the Government is to be responsible for all acts of wantonness and vandalism or for all torts committed under those circumstances, we are going to impose upon the Treasury of the United States, possibly, a considerable sum.

I hope that there are but few soldiers who would be guilty of acts of vandalism and wanton destruction such as those referred to in this report. If that is to be the principle, the only security lies in the fact that there probably will be few soldiers guilty of acts of wanton destruction of property; but I submit that it ought not to be the law that the Government is responsible for acts of soldiers or officers when they are not in the line of duty, when they are not at post, when they are about their own business, when they are under furlough, when they are away from camp. If we pass this bill and establish this precedent, and soldiers away from camp, released for the day, go out and destroy property, we shall be establishing a precedent that will impose very heavy burdens on the Government.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair suggest that Rule VIII limits Senators to one speech on a bill. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the entire report be incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 419) submitted by Mr. CAPPER on January 17, 1922, is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2323) for the relief of Anna M. Tobin, independent executrix of the estate of Frank R. Tobin, deceased, having considered the same, report favorably thereon, with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

For consideration in connection with any claim for damages that may be submitted in this case.

FREDERICK FUNSTON,
Major General, Commanding.

EL PASO, TEX., October 3, 1916.

Gen. FREDERICK D. FUNSTON,
Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Tex.

DEAR SIR: Under date of September 5, 1916, I wrote you in regard to damage to the property of Mrs. Frank R. Tobin, at what is known as Tobin, Tex., the damage having been done by the Pennsylvania National Guard. I have had no reply from your office, but about 10 days after my letter had been mailed Maj. Taggart, of the Pennsylvania Guard, notified me that he desired to meet me at Tobin to investigate the damage. I met him and we went over the property rather carefully, at which time he admitted to me that the improvements had been practically ruined; but I have had no further information in regard to the matter, although he seemed to think a guard should be detailed there and that such would be done within a few days after he was there.

Mrs. Tobin is still at the expense of keeping a guard to protect this property against the militiamen, and as I wrote you before she is not financially able to continue this seemingly unnecessary expense, and yet she does not care to have her houses absolutely ruined and carried away. She has also suffered considerably more than $1,000 damages at the hands of these boys, and it seems to her and to me that there should be some way of being paid for this damage. While I do not like to bother you about these matters, yet I have used every way I know of to prevent the conditions, but without success, and if you can suggest to me the manner in which I should proceed, as the representative of Mrs. Tobin, to have the Government make recompense for her loss I shall be greatly obliged to you.

If your quarters are not the proper ones at which to make claim and complaint, please advise me and I will take it up with the proper department.

Trusting that I may hear from you, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

J. F. WOODSON.

Major General, N. G.REPORT OF INVESTIGATION OF DAMAGE DONE TO THE PROPERTY OF MRS.
FRANK R. TOBIN, TOBIN, TEX.HEADQUARTERS EL PASO DISTRICT,
El Paso, Tex., October 26, 1916.

This ranch is located on the El Paso & Southwestern Railway, about 1 mile north of the camp of the Pennsylvania troops. On October 23 I called on Maj. Gen. Clements, commanding the Pennsylvania (Seventh) Division, for the purpose of ascertaining what information he had as to the damage done to the Tobin property. Gen. Clements stated that some time ago a man claiming to represent Mrs. Tobin came to him with an attorney and represented that damage had been done to the property at Tobin and stated that the amount of the damage was $30. Gen. Clements offered to pay this amount, but the man refused to take it and stated that he did not desire reimbursement, but wished to have some protection against further damage.

Later further injury was done to the property, but there was no proof that the injury was committed by Pennsylvania troops. Many soldiers had written their names, together with their companies and regiments, on the walls of the houses on the Tobin property. Some of these names were of men belonging to Pennsylvania and many to other State troops. Gen. Clements stated that he had declined to put a guard over this property, as it was at some distance from his camp and the troops of his command were not the only offenders. He caused an investigation to be made by an officer of his command with a view to determining the amount of the damage and responsibility therefor (a copy of the report of this officer, Maj. M. H. Taggart, Inspector Seventh Division, hereto attached).

I then visited the property which had been damaged, and found there Mr. Charles Phillips, who is now employed by Mrs. Tobin as caretaker. He states that he took charge of the property on August 7, 1916, and that considerable damage had already been done. He has confined his efforts to stopping further damage, but since he has been in charge soldiers have come while he was away and broken into the houses and committed other depredations. Mr. Phillips states that while he is present on the ranch he is unable to prevent depredations, as soldiers come daily and he can not be at all places at the same time. He has devoted himself to protecting the main ranch house and the well.

On the walls of the ranch house and other buildings and on the boiler of the steam fire engine a great many men have written names and organizations. These are principally from the First, Second, and Third Pennsylvania Regiments. Some are from Massachusetts and Rhode Island regiments and a few scattering names from Kentucky and South Carolina regiments. Mr. Phillips states that a great majority of the damage was done before the Kentucky regiments arrived. I took the names of a number of these men and found that the organizations of most of them had been ordered home for muster out. Those that I was able to interview claimed that they merely visited the ranch while out walking, and finding the names of many men written on the wall, added theirs to the list. They knew nothing as to who committed the depredations other than defacing the walls by writing on them.

Most of the destruction that I observed appeared to be pure vandalism—articles that were removed having no value and no conceivable use. Windows have been smashed and doors torn off the hinges. A steam fire engine, housed in an outbuilding, has had all removable parts wrenched from it. The pump at the well had been dismantled and many of the parts broken. Judging from the appearance of the steam fire engine it was not in a serviceable condition when the National Guard came to El Paso, but numerous parts of some value have been removed. A number of school benches were removed from the schoolhouse and carried away. Five dwellings, a store, and a schoolhouse have been damaged as has been indicated. Some of the smaller outbuildings have had doors torn off but have suffered no other substantial damage. Two of the dwellings and some of the houses and the store are apparently old buildings, the board flooring having rotted, but three of the dwellings and the schoolhouse are substantial stone or brick buildings of one story, practically new, and evidently until recently in good state of repair.

The caretaker, Mr. Phillips, states that he visited this ranch last spring, before the militia arrived, as census enumerator for the school district; that he then entered each of three houses then occupied, and that they were then in good repair in every respect.

I am unable to report as to the exact value of the damage done to this ranch, but I do not believe an estimate of $1,000 is excessive.

Mr. J. F. Woodson, attorney for Mrs. Tobin, states that he is unable to give the names of the organizations of the men who committed the depredations on the Tobin property. He first reported the matter to Gen. Clements about August 1, 1916. Shortly after the Pennsylvania troops arrived he noticed upon visiting the ranch that the pump had been dismantled and several pieces broken. He then caught soldiers taking away in a wagon brick and some doors which they had wrenched from one of the houses. The men gave fictitious names, but Mr. Woodson was convinced that they were from the Pennsylvania division, then the only organization camped near the Tobin property. He reported the matter to Gen. Clements, division commander, who sent an aide with Mr. Woodson to the ranch, where they again found some soldiers carrying away brick. The aide arrested these men and took them back to camp. Mr. Woodson asked Gen. Clements not to try them. Gen. Clements offered to pay for the damage done shortly after the Pennsylvania troops came to El Paso. Mr. Woodson told him that he did not want pay, but he did want a guard detailed to prevent further damage. Gen. Clements refused to detail a guard to protect the property. Report of the matter was not made to Gen. Bell, Maj. Taggart, of the Pennsylvania division, on investigation made a few days afterwards, promised that a guard would be established. The material part of the damage to this property was done before any other than the Pennsylvania troops arrived.

There seems to be no doubt that the injuries complained of in the letter of Mr. Woodson were committed by soldiers. I am unable to obtain convincing evidence as to the command to which these men belong, but from the fact that the Pennsylvania division has for more than three months past been camped nearer this property than any other organization, that the majority of names found written on the walls and other places in the ranch are of men belonging to Pennsylvania troops, and that members of this command have been arrested while committing depredations on the ranch, I am of the opinion that by far the larger part of the injury was done by Pennsylvania troops.

On October 25 several soldiers who claimed to be members of Company F, Eighteenth Pennsylvania, were caught carrying away property, and their names were reported to the chief of staff of the Pennsylvania division, whereupon a guard from that division was established over the property and is now maintained.

In the absence of sufficient evidence to fix the responsibility for the damage suffered by Mrs. Tobin on particular individuals or organizations of the Army, it is deemed best just that Mrs. Tobin should be reimbursed by the Government. If no funds are available for the purpose, I recommend that Mrs. Tobin be asked to submit a detailed statement of the amount of damage done, and when this has been verified Congress be asked to appropriate the money.

J. MCL. CARTER,
Colonel of Cavalry, District Inspector.

NOVEMBER 11, 1916.

Mr. J. F. WOODSON,
Attorney at Law, El Paso, Tex.

DEAR SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of October 3, 1916, addressed to Gen. Funston, wherein you make mention of certain damage having been done to the property of Mrs. Frank R. Tobin, at what is known as Tobin, Tex., by members of the Pennsylvania National Guard, and in replying thereto it is suggested that in case you so desire, that you, as representative of Mrs. Tobin, or Mrs. Tobin herself, submit a detailed statement of the amount of damage claimed to have been done to the property in question, and forward same to these headquarters for consideration of the War Department.

Instructions have been issued from these headquarters which it is hoped will preclude the necessity of further complaint from you in connection with this matter.

By direction of the department commander.

OMAR BUNDY,
Colonel, Adjutant General, Department Adjutant.

EL PASO, TEX., November 17, 1916.

Col. OMAR BUNDY,
Adjutant General, United States Army, San Antonio, Tex.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 11th instant in reference to the matter of damage to property of Mrs. Frank R. Tobin, at Tobin, Tex., received, for which you will accept my thanks.

I feel quite sure that Gen. Funston, as well as you, will do all that can be done in the premises, and as soon as I can find time to do so I shall make out a list of the damages and send to that department.

Very truly, yours,

J. F. WOODSON.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
Washington, October 7, 1916.

From: Quartermaster General.

To: Mr. J. F. Woodson, attorney at law, El Paso, Tex.

Subject: Claim of Mrs. F. R. Tobin for damages.

1. Your letter of the 5th ultimo to the commanding general, Southern Department, in which you set forth the claim of Mrs. F. R. Tobin for damages incurred to her property at Tobin, Tex., by soldiers of the Pennsylvania Militia, stating that the pump to the pumping plant was knocked to pieces with a hammer and the gasoline permitted to run into the ground, all tools stolen, the doors taken off the houses, the windows broken out, walls ruined, fire engine broken and all parts taken away that were capable of being taken, and that you personally saw the Pennsylvania boys carrying the doors away, and stating that the damage to the property is at least $1,000, and requesting that action be taken to see that right is done in the premises, has been referred to this office with a report of the inspector of the Seventh Division, National Guard of the United States, who reports that in company with yourself as counsel for Mrs. Tobin and Mr. Coles he visited the premises and found marked evidence of wanton damage to the buildings and property as described by you; that from pencil marks on the walls and woodwork it appears that it was not alone Pennsylvania boys who committed the depredations, but also those from Rhode Island, Massachusetts, North Carolina, and Kentucky; that after the original damage and complaint Gen. Clements offered to have the parties found upon the premises make restoration, but this offer was not accepted, representation being made on behalf of Mrs. Tobin that she did not care that the boys should do this but was anxious that a guard should be established about the premises for the protection thereof from further injury; that Gen. Clements is of the opinion that had he been permitted to handle this matter as he thought best all future trouble could have been avoided and Mrs. Tobin saved the damage to her property and the expense of maintaining a civilian guard, whom she had employed to protect her property.

2. The damage sustained to the property of Mrs. Tobin is in the nature of torts, the depredations referred to being committed by individual soldiers without authority, and a claim for compensation for such damages can not be favorably considered by the department, the individuals who committed the depredations alone being responsible for the damages incurred.

3. The War Department has no jurisdiction in the settlement of claims for damages incurred to private property. Congress alone can grant relief in such cases. If the claim is presented to Congress it should be supported by an itemized statement of the damages incurred and definite information as to the cost of repair for each item claimed for. The papers in the case will be retained upon files of this office and will be furnished to Congress, or any committee thereof, upon due call therefor.

HENRY G. SHARPE,
Quartermaster General, United States Army.
By F. W. COLEMAN,
Captain, Quartermaster Corps.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 3, 1916.

Mr. J. F. WOODSON,
Attorney at Law, El Paso, Tex.

Sir: Your letter of the 28th ultimo, requesting that Mrs. Frank R. Tobin be given speedy redress by the War Department for damages incurred to her property in the town of Tobin, Tex., by troops of the Pennsylvania Militia, alleging that the troops destroyed her pumping plant and removed from her houses many of the doors, broke practically all the windows in the houses, removed every piece of the fire engine which could be removed, and ruined the walls of the buildings and damaged the property in excess of $1,000, has been received and considered.

It appears from the records of the office of the Quartermaster General that under date of September 5, 1916, you communicated with the commanding general Southern Department, advising him of the damages incurred to the property of Mrs. Tobin, and requesting that he arrange to have Gen. Clements, commanding the troops in the vicinity of Tobin, detail a guard to protect the property from further molestation and damage. In response to your communication the division inspector, Headquarters Seventh Division, Camp Stewart, El Paso, Tex., was instructed to investigate and report upon the case, and his report dated September 20, 1916, states that in company with yourself as counsel for Mrs. Tobin and a Mr. Coles, of El Paso, Tex., he visited the premises alleged to have been damaged; that he found marked evidence of wanton damage to the several buildings in the nature of broken windows, doors, plumbing fixtures, damaged and defaced interior and exterior woodwork, some of the plumbing fixtures and woodwork missing, the fire engine stripped of all metal parts detachable and in many cases parts knocked off, thus breaking the fixtures, and the same also true of the water pump; that Mr. Coles estimated the cost of restoring the property to its former condition at not less than $1,000; that from pencil marks on the walls and woodwork it appears that it was not alone the boys from Pennsylvania but also from Rhode Island, Massachusetts, North Carolina, and Kentucky who took part in this destruction; that complaint had been made to Gen. Clements, who offered to have the guilty parties make restoration, but in the presence of the offenders the representation was made on behalf of Mrs. Tobin that she did not care that the soldiers should do this, but was anxious that a guard should be established about the premises for the protection thereof from further injury; that Gen. Clements is of the opinion that had he been permitted to handle the matter as he thought best all future trouble would have been avoided and Mrs. Tobin saved the damage to her property and the expense of maintaining a civil guard.

From these facts as set forth in the papers referred to it is shown that the damages incurred to Mrs. Tobin's property were due to the wanton acts of individual soldiers for which they alone could be held responsible, and it is considered probable that had the offer of Gen. Clements to require the soldiers found guilty of the acts of vandalism to make reparation therefor further depredations to the property of Mrs. Tobin would have ceased. Claim for the damages incurred as set forth in the papers can not be favorably considered by this department, the damage being in the nature of torts committed by individual soldiers. Congress alone can grant relief in such a case, and in the event of an appeal to Congress for relief by Mrs. Tobin all the papers of record in the department will be furnished to Congress, or to any committee thereof, upon due call therefor.

Respectfully,

H. L. SCOTT,
Major General, Chief of Staff,
Acting Secretary of War.

EL PASO, TEX., July 15, 1918.

HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senator for Texas, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your very kind letter of the 10th instant, in regard to the matter of damage to property of Mrs. Tobin, received by me last evening, and I am grateful for your consideration of this matter, as is Mrs. Tobin.

Complying with your request, I am handing you the following letters: From Quartermaster General's Department, of date October 7, 1916; from Acting Secretary of War, of date November 3, 1916.

You will observe from each of these letters that I was advised that no action except through Congress could be had and no relief other than through that body given.

In each of these letters you will also notice that it is suggested that Gen. Clements offered to have the parties found upon the premises make restoration of the damage, and that the representative of Mrs. Tobin refused to accept the offer. I deem it proper that you should know the facts in regard to this matter. The Pennsylvania Militia camped very near this property, and practically all the damage was done by the Pennsylvania Militia. What happened as regards Gen. Clements's offer was this: I went to Tobin one day and found the Pennsylvania wagons loading brick from that place, which I had them unload, and told the drivers and men the property was private property and to leave it alone. I went back that evening and found the Pennsylvania wagons again doing the same thing, and I again had them unload. The next morning, in company with Mr. Frank Coles, whom you no doubt know, I drove out toward Tobin and passed a Pennsylvania wagon headed in that direction. We drove on beyond Tobin and gave them time to enter the place, and then we returned to Tobin and there found the wagons again loading. We reported to Gen. Clements, and he sent his aid to meet the returning wagons and had the men placed under arrest. They were returned to headquarters. The general, in the presence of Mr. Coles and myself, stated that he would court-martial the men. It was not the desire of Mrs. Tobin or myself to have these men imprisoned or disgraced, and I told Gen. Clements that we did not desire such action, but that we desired our property protected. Gen. Clements stated that he would ascertain the names of all the men who had been committing depredations at Tobin and that he would have every brick and door searched for in his camp and returned to Tobin, and promised us we would have no further trouble at that place. No bricks nor any doors, or other property, were ever returned to Tobin. At no time did I suggest or state to Gen. Clements that any damages were waived by Mrs. Tobin or would be so waived; and to show that he never so understood, you ought to find from the records in the War Department that within a short time after this incident above mentioned the major of Gen. Clements's militia visited Tobin, made an inspection of the damage done, and probably made a report thereof.

At any rate, this major, in the presence of Mr. Coles and myself, stated that the Tobin property had been practically ruined. But even after this the depredations continued, and grew to such an extent that Mrs. Tobin was compelled to place a private guard over her property at an expense of $75 per month, who remained until after the Pennsylvania Militia had left this place; and even with this guard present they continued to take and damage property until leaving Texas. I requested Gen. Clements to furnish us a guard, but he, in an abrupt manner, told me he would do no such thing. So far as the War Department is concerned, we got no relief until report was made to Gen. Funston, after which Col. Carter appeared here, and on October 7, 1916, Col. Bundy wrote me as follows:

"Instructions have been issued from these headquarters which, it is hoped, will preclude necessity of further complaint from you in connection with this matter."

And about that time a guard was placed at Tobin by some department of the Army—very likely not by Gen. Clements or with his sanction. In fact, Gen. Clements never at any time offered to pay for the damage sustained by Mrs. Tobin, but my understanding was that he would locate in his camp the brick and doors that had been taken from the Tobin property and have them returned to Tobin, and perhaps make restoration in that way. It was never understood that Gen. Clements offered to pay for the damage which had been done by his men; and even if he had, the depredations continued long after my conversation with Gen. Clements, and a great portion of the damage was done after that time. Gen. Clements was antagonistic all the way through and apparently made no effort to protect the property or to control his men. To show his attitude, he made a speech at a banquet here in which he stated publicly that he and his men had been charged with destroying a whole city (Tobin), but that he had settled the entire matter for $6.25. This was an unqualified falsehood. Unfortunately, I was not present at the banquet, or the public would have received the true facts in regard to this $6.25 item, which are as follows: Long after the arrest of the men, as above mentioned, the guard at Tobin caught the Pennsylvania boys removing an inside partition from one of the buildings and hauling it off in wheelbarrows. There were six of these men, one of them at least being an officer. Our guard compelled them to haul the partition back to where they got it, and detained the wheelbarrow and some of the men for a while. When the wheelbarrow was sent for it was let go only with the agreement that the wall was to be restored. An officer came to me and agreed that his company would pay for the damage to the lumber and that his company would then replace the partition wall. We agreed upon $6.25 for the damage to the lumber; and the check which his company issued will show by recitation thereon the limitations of its payment and the entire transaction; but the wall was never replaced by the Pennsylvania Militia, but as they left here before request that it be done we have no complaint on that account.

I write you rather fully in regard to these matters, because I am under the impression that you should have the entire history of the case before you. All I have said can be verified by copies of correspondence by Mr. Coles and by others.

I find that Col. Bundy did write me for a detailed statement of the damage, as suggested in your letter, and I find that I did write him I would furnish same when I had time. I do not believe this statement was ever furnished. Likely it was overlooked by me. Gen. Funston died early in 1917, and during the spring of that year the war came on. After the entry of our country into the war I had in mind taking up with you this matter, but concluded that at the beginning of the war by our country our Senators would have a great many serious problems to contend with and that they should not be worried with private claims, and for this reason the matter was dropped for the time being, I being of the opinion that after some of the great problems had been disposed of would be time for consideration of this private claim, and hence the delay. A statement can and will be furnished you at any time if needed.

It always struck me as rather queer that either Gen. Clements or the War Department would question the payment of a claim which is shown to be legitimate, simply on the ground that Mrs. Tobin, in her kindness, did not insist upon imprisonment or disgrace of certain soldiers. The position of the War Department and Gen. Clements no doubt was that had Mrs. Tobin insisted upon the punishment of these men it would have been an object lesson to the others and would have prevented further depredation. This may be the proper way to look at it; but it does seem to me that a United States army should not be permitted to go on and continue the destruction of private property simply because the owner, through her goodness of heart, has seen fit to ask that the soldiers be not imprisoned. At any rate, the damage has been done, and largely in excess of the amount found by Col. Carter, as indicated in your letter. However, I am disposed to accept what the Regular Army inspectors have determined, and Mrs. Tobin feels likewise. We have always taken this position, and from the beginning of the trouble have always been willing, and so stated, to leave the adjustment of the matter of damages to the determination of the Regular Army.

As above suggested, it is rather strange that Gen. Clements concluded that no damages were to be claimed, after he detailed a major in his militia to investigate the damage and to make report thereof, but Gen. Clements never so understood, and if he did he had no reason for so understanding, as I can readily verify by Mr. Coles, who was present with me at the conversation with Gen. Clements, and who will no doubt state to you that the court-martial of the men caught was abandoned at my request simply through a feeling of sympathy for the men who were serving the country and in the hope that an act of kindness would have as much influence in stopping depredations as would an imprisonment.

If I can be of any further aid in connection with this matter, or furnish any other information, statements, or other evidence, I shall be exceedingly glad to do so upon request from you.

Again thanking you, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

J. F. WOODSON.

WATSON B. DICKERMAN, ADMINISTRATOR.

The bill (S. 1539) for the relief of Watson B. Dickerman, administrator of the estate of Charles Backman, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am not going to ask for the consideration of this bill at this moment, or request the Senator from Utah to withdraw his objection; but the bill is the result of a recommendation of the Court of Claims, and in the course of a few days I am going to ask the Senate, during some morning hour, to take it up and consider it. It is a measure that ought to be passed, in justice to the finding of the Court of Claims and the people who are entitled to this money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah objects, and the bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM E. LEWIS.

The bill (S. 159) for the relief of William E. Lewis was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William E. Lewis, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,106.25, representing loss of Liberty bonds, fourth issue, having a face value of $1,000, plus accrued interest of $106.25, said bonds having been stolen by an employee of the Immigration Service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what, if anything, was done by the Immigration Service toward apprehending the criminal and punishing him for his larceny?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, at the request of the chairman of the committee and because I happen to be familiar with this case, I should like to answer the Senator from Utah.

For a long while the guilty party could not be found. Finally a clerk in the department by the name of Gale pleaded guilty. He has been arrested, and is now under bond pending his trial. The man who stole the bonds was found and he is now in custody.

Mr. KING. Was he bonded?

Mr. SPENCER. I can not say whether he was or not. That brings up the question that we have discussed before—that he ought to have been bonded.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator, in view of the fact that we are having so many cases of defalcation upon the part of Government officials, that the Committee on Claims or some other committee should report a bill requiring the bonding of these officials, because the Government ought not to be compelled to meet all these obligations resulting from the thefts and defalcations and embezzlements of its officials.

Mr. SPENCER. I think there is a great deal of merit in the suggestion of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA H. RIDLEY.

The bill (S. 1540) for the relief of Emma H. Ridley was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 to Emma H. Ridley, widow of Dr. George V. Ridley, who lost his life January 7, 1907, in the discharge of his duty in the Canal Zone while in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH W. SKILL.

The bill (S. 1603) for the relief of Joseph W. Skill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the provisions of the act approved September 7, 1916, "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States receiving injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," are hereby extended to Joseph W. Skill, who was permanently disabled while employed by the Department of the Interior at Imperial Valley, Calif., and that he be paid such sums as would properly be due him within the provisions of section 4 of the said act of September 7, 1916. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to make payments in compliance with the terms of the said act of September 7, 1916, and in accordance with the rules and regulations of said commission. Any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated is hereby appropriated for the purpose of this act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, how much does this bill appropriate? It seems to me it is a very strange bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands the bill, it does not appropriate any amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. I could not understand, from the reading of the bill, what the report of the committee is. Unless an explanation can be made, I shall ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator desires, the bill will be reported again.

The READING CLERK. The original bill provided:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Joseph W. Skill, who was permanently disabled while engaged in the employment of the Department of the Interior at Imperial Valley, Calif., the sum of $5,000.

The committee amendment proposes to strike out that portion of the bill, and to insert the following:

That the provisions of the act approved September 7, 1916, "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States receiving injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," are hereby extended to Joseph W. Skill, who was permanently disabled while employed by the Department of the Interior at Imperial Valley, Calif., and that he be paid such sums as would properly be due him within the provisions of section 4 of the said act of September 7, 1916. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to make payments in compliance with the terms of the said act of September 7, 1916, and in accordance with the rules and regulations of said commission. Any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated is hereby appropriated for the purpose of this act.

Mr. CAPPER. It will be for the United States Employees' Compensation Commission to determine how much is due him under the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1861) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I ask for an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Yes; unless I get an explanation of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2372) for the relief of Alfred Sjostrom was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. FRED S. JOHNSTON.

The bill (H. R. 927) for the relief of Capt. Fred S. Johnston was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill be read. I would like to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Capt. Fred S. Johnston, supply officer One hundred and eighth Regiment Infantry, United States Army, the sum of $68 in full payment of all claims against the Government for reimbursement on account of newspaper advertisements of proposals for bids for forage supplies for the use of the Third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, National Guard, United States Army, at Rochester, N. Y., from April 26 to May 8, 1917, said advertisements having been published on the order of said Capt. Fred S. Johnston without specific authority of law or departmental orders.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SIX MINUTE FERRY CO.

The bill (H. R. 1268) for the relief of the Six Minute Ferry Co., of Vallejo, Calif., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Six Minute Ferry Co., of Vallejo, Calif., the sum of $1,500, the total cost of repairing the damages caused to the ferry slip of the Six Minute Ferry Co. during the launching of the U. S. S. California in November, 1919.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge whether there has been any recommendation by the Navy Department in favor of this claim.

Mr. CAPPER. There has been. The Senator will find on page 3, in the last paragraph of the report of the committee, a report made by Secretary Daniels, in which he said:

As the Navy Department has no authority to pay the claim, the claimant was advised that relief could be secured only through a special act of Congress.

The responsibility for the damages caused to the ferry slip owned by the Six Minute Ferry Co. clearly rests with the Navy, and it is believed that the claim of the company in the sum of $1,500 is reasonable and just and should be paid. It is therefore respectfully recommended that bill H. R. 15555 receive favorable action by Congress.

The bill has already passed the House.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I am very sure that this is a meritorious bill. The damage was suffered in the way inlicated. The bill was carefully considered; it comes to us from the House, and I hope it will meet with no objection here.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. FEITEL HOUSE WRECKING CO.

The bill (H. R. 1372) for the relief of the M. Feitel House Wrecking Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the M. Feitel House Wrecking Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $292.41, same representing a shortage of 236 cords of wood sold by the Government, but never delivered, to said M. Feitel House Wrecking Co., on August 18, 1920.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUFFALO HOUSEWRECKING & SALVAGE CO.

The bill (H. R. 1721) to authorize the refund of a part of the purchase price of Camp Mills to the Buffalo Housewrecking & Salvage Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Buffalo Housewrecking & Salvage Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., the sum of $1,800, as refund to said company because of the sale of certain buildings at Camp Mills by the Government, after inspection of the camp by the above-named company, which purchased Camp Mills, and after the said company had been informed that said buildings were included in the sale of said camp.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES S. FRIES.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate recur to Senate bill 2445, for the relief of Charles S. Fries, and that it be considered at this time. The objection to it has been withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the Senate take up at this time Senate bill 2445. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2445) for the relief of Charles S. Fries was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles S. Fries the sum of $1,248, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for injuries received while employed as a decorator in the United States Capitol on October 24, 1911.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. R. GRACE & CO.

The bill (H. R. 1733) for the relief of W. R. Grace & Co., was next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. R. Grace & Co., of 7 Hanover Square, New York City, the sum of $263.73, the amount which said W. R. Grace & Co. paid as customs duty on 180 bales of caraway seed, which was imported on May 15, 1918, the entry on which was liquidated on August 10, 1918, and which was reported for exportation by the Department of Agriculture on November 13, 1918, after the expiration of the 30-day period provided by law for the filing of protests after liquidation of entry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOONER "CHARLOTTE W. MILLER."

The bill (H. R. 2144) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Charlotte W. Miller, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Charlotte W. Miller for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said schooner and the United States steamship D-2 in the forenoon of Tuesday, July 31, 1917, about 2 miles east of Cornfield Shoal lightship, in Long Island Sound, and subsequently on the afternoon of the same day and thereafterwards further injured so that she became a total loss, because the U. S. S. Ontario took charge of the sunken schooner, relieving the salvors of the owners then in charge thereof, and herself attempted to tow said sunken schooner to New London, Conn., may be sued for by the owners of the said schooner Charlotte W. Miller in the district court of the United States for the district of Rhode Island sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owners of the said schooner Charlotte W. Miller or against the owners of said schooner Charlotte W. Miller in favor of the United States and upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 3270) for the relief of Estella Barnett was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 5965) for the relief of the owner of the vessel Urania Artau was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over. I have no objection to the claim being referred to the proper court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CLEVELAND TRINIDAD PAVING CO.

The bill (H. R. 6437) for the relief of the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $775.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. In the first place, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the committee report on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 433, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

CLEVELAND TRINIDAD PAVING CO.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 6437:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6437) for the relief of the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The facts in the case are fully set forth in House Report No. 457, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, which is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

[House Report No. 457, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6437) for the relief of the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass with the following amendments: Strike out all on pages 1 and 2. In line 6, page 3, strike out the figures "$3,017" and insert in lieu thereof "$775."

Attached herewith is a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, giving the full facts in the case:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 9, 1921.

Hon. GEO. W. EDMONDS,
Chairman Committee on Claims,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. EDMONDS: Referring to copy of H. R. 6437, for relief of the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co., I find, from examination of the records of the Indian Office, that on February 7, 1910, permit was granted to the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co. to remove sand from a tract of land reserved for the Cheyenne Indian School on certain conditions, including the payment of $100 per acre for the privilege. The tract embraced 10.95 acres, and the company thereafter paid the sum of $1,095 to the superintendent of the Cheyenne and Arapaho School, who placed the same in the fund, "Miscellaneous receipts, class 4," and expended the money for the Cheyenne Indian School.

The permit given by the department to the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co. was to expire by limitation on December 21, 1912. The act of June 17, 1910, provided for the sale of certain tracts of land no longer required for use in connection with the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indian School, and by some misunderstanding as to the proper description of the tracts covered by the permit of the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co., the greater part thereof was sold under the act recited, as is fully set out in the accompanying papers. The company was therefore deprived to a very large extent of the privileges for which it had paid the sum of $1,095, and has heretofore made claim upon this department for the return of a part of the money paid by it to the Government. The record shows that the company could reasonably anticipate procuring some 100,000 cubic yards of commercial sand from this tract, while, due to the circumstances, slightly over 6,000 yards were obtained. A railroad spur was put in and expensive machinery purchased and installed. It is represented that the actual loss has been $3,017, exclusive of the depreciation of machinery, and this statement appears correct. However, the company has heretofore expressed through its attorneys a desire to have returned to it the sum of $775, which represents the amount paid for the use of 7.75 acres sold from the tract covered by its permit. As the record will show, it was the intention of the department to withhold from sale the tract of land covered by the permit to the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co. in order to protect the rights of the company under its permit.

I have considered the matter and am of the opinion that the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co. is equitably entitled to the return of a part of the consideration paid by it under the permit, and recommend the enactment of H. R. 6437, provided it is first amended as follows:

In lines 1 and 2, page 2, after the word "Interior," strike out the words "the greater part" and insert in lieu thereof "7.75 acres."

Strike out all of page 2 after the word "deprived," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the words "of the use of land for which it had paid the sum of $775; therefore."

In line 6, page 3, after the word "of," strike out the sum of "$3,017" and insert in lieu thereof "$775."

A copy of H. R. 6437 with the suggested amendments incorporated therein is inclosed. Indian Office file No. 60744-09 is also inclosed for your information. Please return to the Indian Office as soon as practicable.

Sincerely,

E. C. FINNEY, Acting Secretary.

Mr. WILLIS. The report, which is very clear, shows the following facts: On or about February 7, 1910, the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co. bought from the Government of the United States the right to take sand from a certain Indian reservation. It paid for that right, which covered some 10.95 acres, at the rate of $100 per acre. As a matter of fact, the company was able to take from the tract only about 6,000 cubic yards of sand, whereas it had been expected to be able to get something like 100,000 cubic yards. The reason for that was because two years after that a law was passed by the Congress providing for the sale of certain of this land, and the land was sold, the very land covered by the permit issued to this company. Not all of the land was sold, but about 7.75 acres.

Meanwhile, the company had put in switches and made arrangements to exercise its rights under the terms of its permit. It therefore brought in a claim of some $3,000, covering the various losses. The committee, in its wisdom—and I think the committee was right—decided that all the Government could properly do was to make a refund to the company for the 7.75 acres which it had sold of the land covered by the company's permit. So the bill provides for a payment to the company of $775.

Mr. KING. That is the proportional part of the entire purchase price?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes. If the Senator will figure a moment, he will see that they bought 10.95 acres at $100 per acre, and the bill provides simply for the portion taken out of their permit by the act of Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was the claim referred to any department for a report?

Mr. WILLIS. It was; and I have asked that the departmental report be printed in the Record. Let me read just a sentence to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the department favors it, I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. The department favors it and recommends the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GAETANO DAVIDE OLIVARI FU FORTUNATO.

The bill (H. R. 6622) for the relief of Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato, managing owner of the Italian bark Doris, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said bark and the United States collier Jupiter in Chesapeake Bay on the 17th day of October, 1916, may be sued for by the said Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato, or against Gaetano Davide Olivari fu Fortunato in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF N. FERRO.

The bill (H. R. 8217) to authorize the payment of $872.96 to the Government of Italy for the relief of the heirs and assigns of N. Ferro was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, upon the request of the Secretary of State, to the Italian Government, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $872.96 to reimburse the heirs and assigns of N. Ferro, deceased, formerly Italian consular agent at Gulfport, Miss., for expenses incurred in repairing the damages to the Italian bark Penice, caused by collision with the United States barge No. 15.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COL. HERBERT DEAKYNE.

The bill (H. R. 1370) for the relief of Col. Herbert Deakne, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, was read and considered in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit the accounts of Col. Herbert Deakne, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, the sum of $45.85 disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN LIGHTHOUSE EMPLOYEES.

The bill (H. R. 3249) for the relief of certain employees of the Bureau of Lighthouses was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would like an explanation in regard to the bill. Let me premise my inquiry by asking the view of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] with respect to obligation on the part of the Government, morally or legally, to care for the private property of individuals who may be employed in the Government service.

Mr. SHEPPARD. As a general rule, I do not think there is any obligation, either legal or moral, to care for their private property. In this case, however, the employees of certain lighthouses exhibited unusual heroism through two of the most terrific storms that ever afflicted the Texas coast, and on account of their heroism and because they remained at their posts when their own lives were imperiled, they lost certain articles of property which they were compelled to possess, compelled to purchase themselves in order to perform their duties. They were cut down by the committee to only that property which they were required to possess in the ordinary performance of their duties. I think, in view of all the circumstances, an exception should be made in this instance.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the following employees of the Bureau of Lighthouses, Department of Commerce, stationed at Bolivar Point Lighthouse, Tex., the several sums appropriated herein, the same being in full payment for the losses suffered by the said employees by loss of personal property needed at the station for lighthouse purposes or reasonably necessary in connection with official duties, namely:

To Mrs. H. C. Claiborne, widow of H. C. Claiborne, keeper, for losses in the storm of September 8, 1900, $234.48; for losses in the storm of August 16, 1915, $191.50.

To J. P. Brooks, first assistant keeper, for losses in the storm of August 16, 1915, $125.87.

To C. T. Morris, second assistant keeper, for losses in the storm of August 16, 1915, $47.50.

In all, $599.35.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM HOWARD MAY AND OTHERS.

The bill (S. 2746) for the relief of William Howard May, ex-marshal of the Canal Zone; William K. Jackson, ex-district attorney of the Canal Zone; and John H. McLean, ex-paymaster of the Panama Canal, now deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection until I can make a brief statement.

Mr. KING. I withhold my objection for that purpose.

Mr. SWANSON. These men were the first officers on the Panama Canal Zone. Mr. May was the first marshal there. When he went to the Panama Canal Zone he occupied Government quarters, but under the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury the Government charged him for the use of the Government quarters and it was deducted from his salary. The other employees expected to have their quarters furnished to them by the Government. Marshals in the United States have quarters furnished them in the United States courts without cost to them.

The Secretary of War has recommended that the bill pass because the money was paid by Mr. May for the occupation of governmental quarters in the Panama Canal Zone. I hope the Senator will not object. There is no objection to it from any source.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether it was for residence or for offices?

Mr. SWANSON. It was for offices, not for residence. He paid $282 at the time he was marshal there for rent of Government quarters where, as I understand, everybody else had them furnished free of cost. The other officers were likewise charged for occupying governmental quarters. In the United States proper the marshals and district attorneys have quarters given them free. It was simply an interpretation of the law by the Comptroller of the Treasury that prevented them from having the quarters free in the Canal Zone. It is not a question of money furnished him to pay for quarters outside of a Government building.

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Senator again, because the bill is very ambiguous, whether, for instance, the former United States attorney, John H. McLean, is asking reimbursement of $470 collected from him for rent of quarters or whether that was collected for rental of a house?

Mr. SWANSON. All of it, as I understand, is for rent of offices. I do not know the details of all the cases, but I understand all the items are for quarters which are given free to officers ordinarily. I do not think it was for residences, but I could not state positively. Secretary Weeks recommends the passage of the bill. It is simply to extend to Mr. May and the others the same privileges that are given to similar officials in the United States in the furnishing of Government quarters, as I understand.

Mr. KING. With the understanding that it is for rent of quarters, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. SWANSON. That is my understanding of it. I do not know anything about it except that Mr. May's case came to me, and the others were put in by the committee, but I understand it was simply for quarters that were furnished these officers in the Canal Zone and for which they paid this rent.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the bills should be made to read in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SWANSON. The Secretary of War had charge of Government quarters and the officers down there, and he recommends the passage of the bill. I know in Mr. May's case it is to reimburse him for rent which he paid for quarters that are ordinarily furnished to such officials without cost.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in line 10, page 1, to strike out $37.13 and insert $77.13, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to William Howard May the sum of $280.32, being the amount collected from the said William Howard May for rent of quarters while holding the office of marshal of the district of the Canal Zone.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to William K. Jackson the sum of $77.13, being the amount collected from the said William K. Jackson for rent of quarters while holding the office of district attorney of the Canal Zone, said refunds to be made out of the appropriation for maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal.

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reopen the accounts of John H. McLean, former paymaster of the Panama Canal, and allow credit to the said John H. McLean for payments made by him, as follows: Four hundred and seventy dollars and twelve cents paid to Charles R. Williams as a refund of the amount collected from him for rent of quarters while holding the office of district attorney of the Canal Zone, $403.33 paid to Miguel A. Otero as a refund to him of the amount collected for rent of quarters while holding the office of marshal of the Canal Zone; $214.83 paid to Burt New as a refund of the amount collected from him for rent of quarters while a land commissioner in the Canal Zone; and $114.68 paid to George A. Connolly as a refund of the amount collected from him for rent of quarters while a land commissioner in the Canal Zone.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN W. WILLEY.

The bill (H. R. 5659) for the relief of Ellen W. Willey, widow of Owen S. Willey, was read and considered in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws the late Owen S. Willey, who served in the United States Navy from July 11, 1860, to April 16, 1863, as an acting master's mate, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the naval service of the United States as an acting master's mate on April 16, 1863: Provided, That no pay, bounty, pensions, or other emoluments shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was just passed until I have a chance to examine the record further. I have seen this observation made by the Secretary of the Navy:

The object of the bill is to afford relief in an individual case as distinguished from all other cases of like character, and in the absence of special or meritorious circumstances the department is opposed to this class of legislation as not being for the best interests of the service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will read the first part of the report he will see that the man was punished inadvertently upon charges made against another man whose name was spelled W-i-l-l-e-y.

Mr. KING. I enter the motion to reconsider, and if upon an examination of the record I find it is a just bill I shall withdraw the motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think if the Senator examines the first part of the report he will be satisfied to let the bill stand passed.

OPERATION OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED RADIO STATIONS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 7) to amend section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to authorize the operation of Government-owned radio stations for the use of the general public, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire if the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] desires to have the joint resolution taken up at this time?

Mr. HALE. I think it better to have it passed over temporarily.

Mr. KING. I suggest that it be passed over temporarily. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], who reported the joint resolution, is not present at the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

OFFICERS IN SUPPLY CORPS OF NAVY.

The bill (S. 2390) to redistribute the number of officers in the several grades of the Supply Corps of the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NAVAL TITLES ON TABLETS AND MEMORIALS.

The bill (H. R. 5013) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to sanction the use of certain titles on tablets and other memorials was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sanction the inscription upon any monument, tablet, or other memorial erected to any person who has died or may hereafter die from wounds, injuries, or disease incurred in the line of duty while a member of the naval service, of the rank for which the deceased qualified and to which he would have been appointed in due course except for his death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF DESTITUTE DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

The bill (S. 2935) to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish free transportation and subsistence from Europe and Siberia to the United States for certain destitute discharged soldiers and their wives and children," approved June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish free transportation and subsistence from Europe and Siberia to the United States for certain destitute discharged soldiers and their wives and children," approved June 30, 1921, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. That the authority conferred by this act shall cease and determine on June 30, 1922."

"Sec. 2. That the appropriation 'Pay of the Army, 1922,' shall be available to pay the expenses incident to carrying into effect the provisions of the act approved June 30, 1921, as amended, under such regulations as have been or may hereafter be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY P. COLLINS, ALIAS PATRICK COLLINS.

The bill (S. 2380) for the relief of Henry P. Collins, alias Patrick Collins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to having that bill considered at the present time. It involves a very simple case.

Mr. KING. A reading of the report indicates that this man twice deserted from the Army, and it is now proposed to put him on the list so that he may get a pension.

Mr. HALE. The first charge of desertion was removed under the act of Congress, approved July 5, 1884, which provided that if the soldier, within a reasonable time, after such charge of desertion was made, voluntarily returned to his command and served faithfully to the end of his term of service he should be relieved from the charge of desertion. This soldier did follow that course; he did reenlist within three months in the same command. He was wounded twice before his first desertion and served in Libby Prison. After his second enlistment he was again wounded, was sent to the hospital, and deserted from a hospital in the latter part of March, 1865, immediately before the close of the war.

In view of his record, the fact that he was three times wounded, and that he was imprisoned in Libby Prison, I think it perfectly reasonable that the charge of desertion against him should be removed.

Mr. KING. If there were only one charge of desertion I should not object, but as there is a second charge of desertion I do object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

ALMOND S. ROOT.

The bill (S. 2654) for the relief of Almond S. Root was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that the bill, the title of which has just been stated, has been reported adversely by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LEXROOT], I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator think that he should do that in the absence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]? I think the Senator's colleague asked that the bill remain on the calendar, though I am not sure about that?

Mr. KING. I had supposed that there being an adverse report on the bill, it would pursue the usual course.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The action which the Senator indicates is usually taken when a bill is reported adversely, but the bill has been retained on the calendar at the request of the senior Senator from Utah, I think, although I am not sure.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Washington is of that opinion, I shall withdraw my request and merely ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FRANK FERRIN.

The bill (H. R. 2004) for the relief of Frank Ferrin was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. PHIPPS. I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of this bill, which has received the approval of the other House. It is a very meritorious case, of a boy less than 16 years of age who went into the service of his country, was wounded, and was imprisoned in Libby Prison, where he was sick. At the age of 18, while recuperating, his father induced him to go away to his home. He was kept there for a time under his father's influence; and when it became rumored that he would possibly be run down because of having deserted, which he had no intention of doing, he reenlisted in the service under an assumed name and faithfully performed his duty as a soldier in the United States Army. I think, if the Senator from Utah will read the details in this case, he will have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Colorado whether or not this soldier obtained a bounty when he reenlisted?

Mr. PHIPPS. There is no record in the papers which shows that he obtained a bounty at any time, and I think I have gone over the papers very carefully.

Mr. KING. I ask the attention of the Senator for just a moment. The first part of the report states:

The record of the War Department shows this soldier enlisted August 20, 1861, and was mustered into service August 23, 1861, as a private, Company H, Third New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, to serve three years; that he was captured at Pinckney Island, S. C.; that he was sent to Richmond, Va., for exchange October 6, 1862, and confined there October 10, 1862—that he was paroled at Aikens Landing, Va., October 12, 1862; that he reported at Camp Parole, Md., October 31, 1862; and that he deserted from the last-named place January 20, 1863.

That is, four days—

The report does not state that he deserted because of any opportunities of the father, but continues:

While absent in desertion from this organization he again enlisted August 12, 1864, under the name of Cyrus F. Dunby, and was mustered into service on the same day as a private, Company C, Fourth Massachusetts Heavy Artillery Volunteers, to serve one year. It appears that he served faithfully in this organization until June 17, 1865, when he was mustered out and honorably discharged the service with the company as a private.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that when this soldier originally enlisted he was but 16 years of age; he was a mere boy. When he was captured and paroled and came home and was stricken with typhoid fever, as the Senator will see from the report, his father said that, being under 18 years of age, the Government could not keep him, and the boy stayed at home; but the moment he had recovered from the typhoid fever, in 1864, the boy reenlisted and served until the end of the war. The committee felt that certainly there was no intentional desertion in the case of a boy like that. A deserter does not return for reenlistment. When this boy had recovered from typhoid fever he came back into the Army.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator that the record does not quite bear out his statement. The report states that—

In an affidavit by the soldier on September 7, 1891, he states: "He was transferred from the Naval to Camp Parole Hospital at Annapolis, Md., having been treated in said hospital for chronic diarrhea, and while in said last-named hospital he was solicited by his father to return to Manchester, N. H., his home, his father assuming that inasmuch as he, the said Frank Ferrin, was under the age of 18 years, that he, the said father, would and could compel the United States authorities to release him, the said Frank Ferrin, from the service of the United States."

This is a mere affidavit of the boy himself, and it appears that there is nothing to indicate even the truthfulness of the statement that while there suffering from diarrhea his father importuned him to return. Let me say to the Senator—

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator has not got that quite accurately. In the letter at the close of the first paragraph it is shown that the date when the boy deserted was January 20, 1863. That appears at the close of the first paragraph. The time when he was sick of the typhoid fever, as stated at the close of the paragraph on the second page of the report, was January 20, 1863. His desertion was synchronous with the attack of typhoid fever, and when he recovered from that, in 1864, he reenlisted. I submit to the fairness of the Senator—and it is not a bill in which I am interested personally, except from the mere standpoint of justice—that there is no shadow of foundation for a charge of desertion, and all this bill does is to remove the charge of desertion against this 16-year-old soldier.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows, of course, that the bill is the basis for the granting of a pension; that is what it is for. I shall insist on my objection until I have a chance to confer with the War Department about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The bill will be passed over. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2632) to correct the military record of Martin Cletner was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2179) for the relief of Richard Parke was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2674) to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think I shall ask that that bill go over. I am not willing, with the information which is in our possession, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make settlements for so large a sum without any judicial inquiry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I recognize that this is rather an important bill and ought not to be passed if any Senator has any doubt about it. I hope, however, the Senator from Utah will examine into the matter. I believe it would save the Government a great deal of money to give this authority to the Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

INCREASE OF SALARIES IN PATENT OFFICE.

The bill (H. R. 7077) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is evident that that measure can not be taken up under the five-minute rule. Notice has been given that upon the conclusion of consideration of the unfinished business the Patent Office measure will be pressed for consideration. I have no doubt it will be, and that there will be no objection to it being taken up then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PHILIP S. EVEREST.

The bill (S. 1730) for the relief of Philip S. Everest was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $300, to be paid to Philip S. Everest, superintendent and special disbursing agent Bad River (Wis.) Indian Reservation, in full compensation on account of moneys expended by him for the benefit of an Indian allottee upon that reservation whose allotment had been erroneously located by said agent through misinformation given to him as to the location of a reservation corner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMER MAYFLOWER.

The bill (S. 1813) for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower and for the relief of passengers on board said steamer was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments on page 1, line 3, after the name "Mayflower," to strike out "and the claims of the passengers aboard said steamer"; in line 10, after the name "Mayflower," to strike out "and by the passengers on said steamer by reason of personal injuries and property damage sustained in said collision," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the steamer Mayflower rising out of a collision between said steamer and the United States submarine L-10 in President Roads, Boston Harbor, on the 11th day of August, 1917, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said steamer Mayflower through damage to and detention of said steamer Mayflower may be submitted to the United States Court for the District of Massachusetts, the district in which said collision occurred, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty: Provided, That the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Washington what, if any, steps are being taken by the Committee on Commerce—and I should like to know whether they can take any steps—to reduce the number of collisions for which the United States is being held responsible? It seems as if half of our vessels are guilty of some neglect in operation, as the result of which we are having hundreds of suits to defend and hundreds of claims for prosecution against the Government owing to the alleged negligence of those in charge of the vessels.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the committee has not been doing anything. We have our navigation laws which cover these matters, and regulate how vessels shall be run, and provide for inspection, and provide for the licensing of officers, and so forth; and I have had no complaints with reference to the enforcement of those laws. I have assumed that they are being carried out as fully as possible. Of course, with the large number of vessels that we have, coastwise as well as otherwise, it is not impossible that some men get to be officers who are careless, and act in an irresponsible way, and bring about trouble; but I will say to the Senator, as I said a moment ago, that there has been no complaint made to the committee and the committee has not been giving the matter any consideration. We assume that the Bureau of Navigation and the Steamboat-Inspection Service are looking after these matters as fully as they possibly can.

Mr. KING. What I had in mind was whether or not the laws are being enforced, because it would seem that there ought not to be so many of these suits against the Government; so many claims for damages owing to the alleged unskillful or negligent operation of Government vessels.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, it may be true that during the exigency of the war a good many officers who had not the requisite skill were put on vessels. A great many officers were taken in under a certain license system because of the necessities of the war. It may grow somewhat out of that condition, but I can not say.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in the merchant marine act of 1920 we made certain provisions with regard to admiralty suits and claims arising against merchant vessels of the United States. This claim is based on a collision with a naval vessel, and, of course, we have not had anything to do with the operation of naval vessels, Army transports, and things of that sort. This was a collision with a vessel of the Navy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was not giving any attention to the bill that was under consideration; but I want to suggest to the Senator from Utah that, as I understand, under the law every claim for damage caused by collision with a naval vessel must come to Congress. It can not be settled outside. That was one of the very purposes of the bill that came up just a moment ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the owner of the steamer Mayflower."

PACIFIC COMMISSARY CO.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent to consider Order of Business 367, Senate bill 34, for the relief of the Pacific Commissary Co.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think we ought to go on in the regular way. We are getting along pretty well. I do not think we ought to take up something out of order now. We are proceeding under unanimous consent at the present time.

Mr. STANFIELD. I do not believe it will take more than a moment; and inasmuch as there are parties interested in this bill who have been detained by its being passed over I hope the Senator will not object. It will take only a moment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Was it included in the list to-day? We began to-day at No. 420 by unanimous consent, and I do not think we ought to go back of that number. We can take up this bill when we get through with the rest of the calendar, but we began to-day where we left off before, at No. 420. It would not be fair to take up bills back of that, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the unanimous-consent agreement for to-day was that there should be considered to-day only bills commencing with No. 420 on the calendar, and proceeding from that point, it would bar the request of the Senator—

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. KING. That was the agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Because unanimous consent has already been given to consider only bills after Order of Business 420. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

STEAM LIGHTER "CORNELIA."

The bill (S. 1814) for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia rising out of a collision between said steam lighter and the U. S. destroyer Bell in Broad Sound, Boston Harbor, Mass., on the 9th day of August, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said steam lighter Cornelia by reason of damages to and detention of or the loss of said steam lighter, her boats, engines, boilers, tackle, apparel, furniture, and supplies, may be submitted to the United States Court for the District of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOONER "HORATIO G. FOSS."

The bill (S. 1817) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss, arising out of a collision between said schooner and the United States collier Jupiter off Winter Quarter Light Vessel on the 18th day of May, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said schooner Horatio G. Foss by reason of damages to and detention of said schooner; may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court, sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2885) to authorize the acquisition of lands for military purposes in certain cases and making appropriations therefore, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN KANSAS.

The bill (H. R. 9060) to authorize the Secretary of War to lease a certain tract of land to the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 11, after the word "said," to strike out "company" and insert "city," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease to the city of Leavenworth, a municipal corporation in the State of Kansas, the following-described tract of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas:

Beginning at the northwest corner of the 20-acre tract of land formerly in said military reservation granted to the Leavenworth Coal Co. by the act of Congress approved July 20, 1868; thence north in extension of the west line of said 20-acre tract 500 feet; thence east parallel to the north line of said 20-acre tract 820 feet, more or less, to the railroad right of way; thence southerly on the west line of said right of way 503 feet, more or less, to the north line of the said 20-acre tract; thence west on the said north line to the place of beginning, containing 9½ acres, more or less, reserving to the United States, or assigns, the coal, or royalty for the coal, underlying said lands, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining thereon a reservoir and such other works as may be necessary to enable said city to supply the troops at Fort Leavenworth and its other patrons with pure water: Provided, That the said city shall have the free and uninterrupted use of said tract of land for the purposes above named, under the direction and control of the Secretary of War, so long as it is so used, and that when it ceases to occupy and use it for such purposes the lease shall be null and void.

That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire the reason for not selling the land? If we are to lease the land, apparently, for permanent occupation by the city, and it is to construct a reservoir upon it, why not alienate it completely?

Mr. CAPPER. The bill simply authorizes the city of Leavenworth to take over the land on the same terms on which it is now being used by the Leavenworth City Water Co., because the city of Leavenworth is to handle the waterworks hereafter. There never has been any arrangement of that kind, and the city of Leavenworth does not seem to want to purchase the land. There seems to be no reason why there should be any change in the arrangement that has existed there for quite a long while.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether the fee-simple title to the property is in the Government, or are they merely tenants?

Mr. CAPPER. No; I think the title is in the Government. There is a very brief report here from the Secretary of War.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that if the city is to acquire the land for the construction of a reservoir, and it is not needed by the Government, the best thing to do would be to dispose of it entirely and not take two bites of the cherry.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I understand that a company, a corporation, now has a lease of this land for the purpose of supplying water to the city, and the city has acquired all the rights and interests of that company. This bill simply authorizes the city to take the place of the company that has had a lease of the land heretofore for the purpose of acquiring the water, and when it ceases to be used for that purpose it goes back to the Government.

Mr. CAPPER. The city of Leavenworth has simply undertaken to take municipal ownership of its water plant, and this transfer to the city of Leavenworth is a formal matter.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CAPPER. There is one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIO CARRAZCO.

The bill (S. 156) for the relief of the heirs of Julio Carrazco, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay $2,000 to the dependents of Julio Carrazco, a citizen of Mexico, who was killed by United States troops near Los Adobes, in the district of El Indio, Tex., on January 18, 1918, which said sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the conduct of this Government, as revealed in the bill before us, is in singular contrast with that of the Mexican Government. This bill indicates that a Mexican was killed, without fault upon the part of the Government of the United States, by a soldier. We appropriate to compensate the family of the deceased, owing to his death.

Mexico treats with contumely the claims made upon her Government growing out of the butchery and assassination of hundreds of Americans upon Mexican soil as well as a large number of Americans who were killed by Mexicans when they were upon American soil and under the American flag. Approximately 800 Americans have been killed, as shown by the recent investigation by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, either within Mexican territory or upon United States soil along the Mexican border.

Mexico has refused to make reparation for these wrongs. Wives have been made widows and children have been made orphans through the wanton attacks of Mexican soldiers and Mexican nationals. Hundreds of millions of dollars of American property has been confiscated or destroyed since 1912, and no steps are being taken to compensate Americans who have sustained these losses. The Mexican Government has exhibited, and still exhibits, a most cynical and callous disregard of the outrages committed upon American citizens. The Government of Mexico, whether under Huerta, Carranza, or Obregon, has shown the same indifference when its attention has been challenged to the murders, assaults, and robberies committed, and the acts of expropriation which have taken place.

Thousands of American citizens were driven out of Mexico during President Taft's administration; tens of thousands were compelled to leave Mexico when Mr. Wilson was the Chief Executive; and the situation in Mexico to-day gives no substantial promise that protection to American citizens will be provided. Indeed, a number of American citizens have been killed during the administration of President Harding. Only recently a friend of mine was killed upon Mexican soil by Mexicans. Thousands of American citizens, despoiled of their property, are found along the border States, where for years they have been waiting for redress for the wrongs to which they have been subjected and for opportunity to enter Mexico that they might, if possible, save some of the remnants of their former holdings. Hundreds, if not thousands, of men and women who have been robbed of their possessions by the Mexican Government and the Mexican nationals have gone to their graves, their last days being days of poverty, sorrow, and want. Thousands of American citizens are now anxiously waiting for compensation and for relief from their condition of penury and want resulting from the larcenies and brutal and exploiting policies of the Mexican Government.

Our Republican friends denounced the Wilson administration for its policy of "watchful waiting." Complaints were made that a vigorous policy in dealing with Mexico was lacking. May I invite the attention of our Republican friends to the fact that this administration is pursuing a policy of "watchful waiting"; that Americans are still being murdered by Mexicans on Mexican soil; and that American property is still being confiscated or destroyed, and that tens of thousands of Americans who have interests in Mexico are unable to reenter Mexico or to attempt to repurchase whatever property, real and personal, may have escaped the destructive forces that have operated, apparently, without restriction in most parts of Mexico for many years last past? More than $500,000,000 of property owned by Americans has been seized or destroyed in Mexico since 1912. The Obregon government is doing nothing to compensate Americans for their losses. Property belonging to Americans is still being expropriated, and there seems to be no genuine reform or no change in the internal conditions of our southern neighbor.

It is time for Mexico to clean house, to mend her ways, to afford protection to American citizens lawfully within her borders, and to make reparation for the crimes which the Government and Mexican nationals have committed against American citizens.

And let us hope the "virile and vigorous" foreign policy promised the country by the Republicans will be adopted in dealing with Mexico.

I am glad this Nation can do justice to Mexican nationals, though Mexico may be deaf to the cries of justice and heedless of the obligations which every civilized nation must observe.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, Mexico does not even return the church property which she has seized from citizens of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAX B. BALDENBURG.

The bill (S. 462) for the relief of Max B. Baldenburg was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Max B. Baldenburg, formerly employed as civilian clerk, Engineer Department at Large, United States Army, on duty with the American Expeditionary Forces, the sum of $789, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum being the difference between the amount due the said Max B. Baldenburg as per diem allowances while so employed, under the terms of his employment and as established and authorized by the Chief Engineer, Base Section No. 3, and the amount allowed for such purposes by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. GATTIS.

The bill (S. 1917) for the relief of John H. Gattis was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over. I want to look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BLANCHE WINTERS.

The bill (S. 2024) for the relief of Blanche Winters was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. In view of the precedents which we have established, I could not consent to the consideration of this bill, carrying such a large amount. If the $25,000 be stricken out and $10,000 inserted, I shall not object to its consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. A similar bill has passed the Senate three times carrying this amount, but if the Senator is going to insist upon his objection I would rather change the amount than to have the bill delayed.

Mr. KING. I suggest that the Senator do that.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000."

Mr. CURTIS. That is agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, to strike out "$25,000" and to insert "$10,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Blanche Winters, widow of Charles F. Winters, of Kansas City, State of Missouri, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 as compensation and relief for the loss, by death, on January 11, 1918, at Camp Funston, in the State of Kansas, of her husband, Charles F. Winters, who, while engaged in the discharge of his duty, in conducting the camp bank at Camp Funston, in the State of Kansas, and in protecting the money and funds of the Government of the United States of America and of the soldiers of the United States Army, was killed by Louis R. Whistler, a commissioned officer and captain of Company E, Three hundred and fifty-fourth Infantry Regiment, Eighty-ninth Division, of the Army of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. B. WATERMAN.

The bill (S. 1059) for the relief of J. B. Waterman, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator not withhold his objection, and let me make a statement about the bill?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. A similar bill has already passed the Senate once. Indeed, I inherited the bill from my illustrious predecessor. The matter was gone over very carefully, and after full investigation the Senate decided that it was a meritorious measure.

The facts of the case are simply these: The postmaster at Belpre, Ohio, kept the funds, as he was authorized to keep them, in a safe in the post office. There is no question but what the safe was properly locked by the employees of the office.

The office was broken into and this sum of money, $418.25, was stolen from the office. It does not seem to me that the Senate of the United States would want to reverse itself in a case which has been carefully investigated, and where the claim is so just as this evidently is. I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of the measure.

Mr. KING. We have a number of these cases before us where postmasters, for one reason or another, have presented claims growing out of alleged burglaries, and so on. The evidence has shown in many of the cases that they were negligent, that they did not lock the safes, or that they had imperfect safes, which was known to them. I find on the first page of the report the statement:

The Post Office Department objected to the allowance on the ground that the postmaster, J. B. Waterman, had allowed the lock of the safe to get in bad condition.

Mr. WILLIS. Will not the Senator just read on a little?

Mr. KING. It continues:

However, the sworn evidence of several competent witnesses goes to establish the postmaster's claim that the lock was in good enough order to be as near proof against burglary as a new lock would have been. No witness testified otherwise, but the inspector thought the lock defective.

That was the report of the Government inspector, that the lock was defective. May I inquire of the Senator what report Mr. Burleson, the Postmaster General, made?

Mr. WILLIS. It is specifically stated in what the Senator has read. Postmaster General Burleson thought the bill should not pass; in other words, he made an unfavorable report. With great respect, I suggest that the distinguished Postmaster General had not gone into the facts as to this particular case at all. While it was reported that the lock was not in good condition, the affidavits show, peculiar as it may seem, that the difficulty they had was not in locking the safe, but in getting it unlocked. It was more difficult to get it unlocked in the condition in which they found it than when it was working all right, so that instead of its condition aiding the burglar it impeded him. The affidavits, which I have read, and which the Senator has perhaps read, show that they had great difficulty in getting the safe unlocked, so that the alleged defect in the lock could not have aided the burglar in any way.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me, in my time, if not in his, to read from the report of the Postmaster General, which says:

The evidence in this case shows that burglars entered the post office and opened the safe therein, both without the use of force, and took from said safe the Government property for which credit is claimed. The postmaster's safe was defective and he had removed a part of the lock, so that in turning the combination around the lock closed in such a manner that the door could be opened only by turning the lock to a certain number. The inspector was able to open the safe without any difficulty and without previous knowledge of the number.

It was concluded from these facts that the postmaster was not affording to the funds and stamps in his custody that degree of protection required by section 356 of the Postal Laws and Regulations of 1902, which reads in part as follows:

"4. Where stamps and funds are kept in iron safes with 'combination locks,' such safes must be carefully and completely locked at night or when the office is left without occupants for any considerable length of time. The common practice of closing safes with what is termed a 'day lock' or 'day combination' affords no protection against experienced burglars; and in case of loss resulting therefrom no credit will be allowed."

Conforming to the practice of the department in such cases, this claim was disallowed under date of December 6, 1912.

It is not a new claim. He continues:

The evidence in this case has been reviewed, but the department does not feel warranted under the law in changing the conclusion already reached.

In the face of that recommendation of the Post Office Department, and that full review by them, I hope the Senator will justify me in making my objection.

Mr. WILLIS. I trust the Senator, who never is unfair, will not do a thing which would seem to be unfair in reading the statement of the Postmaster General, who was not there, without at the same time permitting the reading of the statements of the men who were there, and who know the facts. Will he not permit me just now to read into the Record what those men said about this very thing? They were there, they saw it and they know about it. The Postmaster General's testimony, as the Senator well knows as an able lawyer, is third or fourth hand. This is the testimony of the men who were there.

Mr. KING. The Postmaster General's report would, of course, be based upon the investigation made by inspectors. We will be compelled to discredit our inspectors if we support this claim. Of course, the Senator can properly read what he wants to, but I hope he will let the bill go over, so that I can make further investigation, and next Monday, during the morning hour, I shall be glad to have the Senator call the bill up. This course will facilitate its passage.

Mr. WILLIS. With that statement of the Senator I am glad to give him plenty of time to look into the matter, but the next time we have a calendar day I would like to get the bill passed.

Mr. KING. I will join with the Senator in getting it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JESSIE M. WHITE.

The bill (S. 643) for the relief of Jessie M. White was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator's attention to the bill? In this case I hope the Senator will not insist on his objection.

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator withdraws his objection?

Mr. KING. Temporarily. Let the bill be read.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is the case of a locomotive engineer in the Panama Canal Zone, who was injured by a stone which was dislodged by blasting on the canal, by the authorities there, and as a result of the injury the man died. The bill carries the precise amount which was recommended by the department.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether under the compensation act provision would not be made for the family of the deceased?

Mr. FLETCHER. This amount is the amount which would be paid under the compensation act, but under the rules it is necessary to have a special act passed. It is set out in the report that—

Under the decisions of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor it has been held that the year for which compensation is payable under the act begins to run on the date on which the injury results in incapacity for work and terminates with the anniversary of the date of beginning of incapacity.

Then it recites when he was injured and when he died, so that technically he would be ruled out of compensation, but the bill allows him just what he would have been allowed under the law.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$2,797.20," and to insert in lieu thereof "$2,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Jessie M. White, widow of the late Mark White, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 in compensation for injuries sustained in the discharge of his duties while employed in the Canal Zone, and which resulted in his death.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. SPATES.

The bill (S. 1352) for the relief of Benjamin F. Spates was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask the Senator from Utah if he will not allow the bill to be considered now?

Mr. KING. No; I will not.

Mr. ODDIE. A similar bill has been before the Senate for a great many years, and it has passed the Senate once.

Mr. KING. It is hoary with age, providing for payment of a claim for an alleged injury suffered away back in 1885. If we began reviving cases of that kind the Government would never get through paying.

Mr. ODDIE. The Government is not doing justice unless it pays this claim.

WILLIAM COLLIE NABORS.

The bill (S. 1405) for the relief of William Collie Nabors was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JESSE GOODIN.

The bill (S. 2664) for the relief of Jesse Goodin was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator's attention to the bill before he insists upon his objection? There are three of these cases—Senate bill 2664, Senate bill 2665, and Senate bill 2666—and they all arise out of the same circumstances. I am sure the Senator will appreciate the situation and will allow these bills to pass.

The facts are that many people were on a wharf near Pensacola when one of the air machines, operated by an aviator connected with the naval air station there, swooped down on them and killed a number of them.

The Secretary of the Navy reported as follows on the bill:

The facts and circumstances connected with the accident are incorporated in the findings of the naval board which investigated the case, a copy of which, together with the opinion and recommendation of the board, is inclosed herewith.

The bill provides for the payment to the father of the deceased a sum of $2,500. The department has no means of determining whether this amount is reasonable and just under the circumstances, but it is of opinion that it is not excessive.

In each of these cases the precise amount recommended by the department has been fixed by the committee.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator whether, under the usual rules of pecuniary liability, the claimants would be entitled to anything? The Senator knows very well that in some instances where a son is killed and he makes no contribution whatever to the father, the father would not be entitled to compensation in an action at law, even where negligence was proven.

Mr. FLETCHER. The claim arose out of the death of his daughters, Alice and Lillie Goodin, on March 1, 1921, as a result of being struck by the United States Navy airplane near the wharf at Pensacola, Fla. There were two daughters killed.

Mr. KING. There are three cases?

Mr. FLETCHER. There are three cases altogether.

Mr. KING. What is the aggregate amount involved?

Mr. FLETCHER. Five thousand dollars was the amount claimed in the bill as introduced and $3,000 was allowed by the committee. One of the others is $2,500 and the third is $2,000. From $5,000 the committee reduced the latter to $2,000.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in line 5, to strike out $5,000 and insert $3,000, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Jesse Goodin, of Pensacola, Fla., the sum of $3,000 as full compensation for the death of his daughters, Alice and Lillie Goodin, on March 1, 1921, on account of having been struck by United States Navy (N-10) seaplane (A-2458) while piloted by John W. Alcorn, ensign, United States Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HATTIE TOLBERT.

The bill (S. 2665) for the relief of Hattie Tolbert was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Hattie Tolbert, of Pensacola, Fla., the sum of $2,500 as full compensation for the death of her mother, Mary Goode, and her sister, Irma Dean, on March 1, 1921, on account of being struck by United States Navy (N-10) seaplane (A-2458) while piloted by John W. Alcorn, ensign, United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ED THOMAS AND PAULINE THOMAS.

The bill (S. 2666) for the relief of Ed Thomas and Pauline Thomas was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Ed Thomas and Pauline Thomas, of Pensacola, Fla., the sum of $2,000 as full compensation for injuries received and suffered by their daughter, Pauline Thomas, on March 1, 1921, on account of having been struck by United States Navy (N-10) seaplane (A-2458) while piloted by John Alcorn, ensign, United States Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 3076) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

N. MAY JERNEGAN.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, before the unfinished business is taken up, will the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] kindly allow me to ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5597) granting an increase of pension to N. May Jernegan? I probably will not be in the city next Monday when the calendar is called. I do not think there is any objection to the bill. It is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there be no discussion of the measure, I have no objection. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the bill to which the Senator refers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, the bill referred to by the Senator from South Carolina is a very meritorious bill. It is the only one of several of its kind that has not been passed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that the bill be read. However, if it leads to any discussion, I shall not consent to its present consideration.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of N. May Jernegan, widow of Warren G. Jernegan, late of the Hospital Corps, United States Army, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $125 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That one-third of the pension allowed by this act shall be for the benefit of the child until he shall reach the age of 21 years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. FINE & SONS.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1362) for the relief of M. Fine & Sons. I make the request in the belief that it will entail no discussion and that it can be disposed of very promptly. If it does encounter discussion, I shall withdraw the request.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it will lead to no discussion, I have no objection to its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13,473 to M. Fine & Sons, of New York, N. Y., to reimburse them for the purchase of 10,000 yards of flannel shirting which was returned to the depot quartermaster, Jeffersonville, Ind., on account of being 8½ ounces instead of 9½ ounces.

Mr. NEW. I would like to make just the briefest kind of a statement with reference to the bill, if I may be permitted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there is no objection to the bill, let it be put on its passage.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not object to it personally. I can not speak for anyone else on this side, but I would like to hear what it is about. I am not advised myself as to the circumstances in connection with it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it leads to discussion, I shall have to object. The unfinished business has been delayed three or four days and there are one or two very important bills to follow it, so I am very anxious to proceed with it.

Mr. NEW. It will not take me longer than two minutes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield for two minutes.

Mr. NEW. The Government made a deal with M. Fine & Sons to furnish some wearing apparel to the Government for the soldiers. It was to be made at the Government depot at Jeffersonville, Ind. The Government was to furnish the cloth, and the cloth was to weigh 9½ ounces to the yard. The Government sent the cloth to M. Fine & Sons, and they paid the Government for it. They took off 2 yards of that cloth to start filling the contract and found that instead of weighing 9½ ounces it weighed 8½ ounces. That fact was reported to the Government. The Government said, "We will not accept the manufactured goods as of that weight." The cloth was returned to the Government, but M. Fine & Sons have never been reimbursed and the Government simply has thirteen thousand and some dollars of M. Fine & Sons' money, which it has had two years, and through no fault of M. Fine & Sons.

That is the whole story. The purpose of the bill is to return to M. Fine & Sons the $13,473 which they paid the Government for something the Government did not furnish. The department recommends the passage of the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government still has the cloth?

Mr. NEW. The Government has the cloth. That was returned to the Government; and the Government has the money as well.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is a report by the committee in favor of it and the department itself favors it?

Mr. NEW. Yes. The bill passed the House. The department favors it and the committee favors it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3076) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the bill may be read.

The reading clerk read the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] has a bill which he thinks may be passed without any discussion. If so, I am willing that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside and that the request for the consideration of his bill be submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

PACIFIC COMMISSARY CO.

Mr. STANFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 34, which has been pending here for some time, may be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let us have the bill reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill by title.

The READING CLERK. A bill (S. 34) for the relief of the Pacific Commissary Co.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the bill been reported favorably by the committee, Mr. President?

Mr. STANFIELD. It has been reported favorably.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of," to strike out the figures "$38,262.02" and to insert "$31,847.87," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Pacific Commissary Co., of Seattle, Wash., or to its receiver, trustee out of court, or other legal representative, the sum of $31,847.87, in settlement of the claim of said company against the United States under an understanding and agreement between the officers of said company and the officer in command of the Army cantonment at Camp Lewis, Wash., whereby said company was to be compensated by the United States for any losses that should be sustained by said company in furnishing meals to Army officers at said camp during the months of August, September, October, and November, 1917, at the price fixed by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Hale	Lenroot	Simmons
Brandegee	Harris	McNary	Smith
Bursum	Harrison	New	Spencer
Calder	Hedlin	Newberry	Stanfield
Cameron	Hitchcock	Norris	Sutherland
Capper	Johnson	Oddie	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Trammell
Culbertson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Warren
Cummins	Kellogg	Pepper	Watson, Ga.
Curtis	Kendrick	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
Dial	Keyes	Pomerene	Weller
Fletcher	King	Ransdell	Williams
Glass	Ladd	Sheppard	Willis

Mr. RANSDELL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BROUSSARD] is unavoidably absent on official business. I should like to have this announcement stand until he is able to return in the course of the next two or three days.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] are unavoidably detained on business of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR VETERANS OF WORLD WAR.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the so-called adjusted compensation bill, more popularly known as the bonus bill, is not immediately before the Senate, but the subject is one which is perhaps entertaining the consideration of the Members of Congress more than any other question now on the calendar or to be on the calendar in the immediate future. I think, therefore, it not inappropriate to discuss the subject.

There are two features of the question which immediately present themselves for consideration. The first is the economic feature of it; the other involves a fundamental principle of government. The former question is, perhaps, the more immediate and vital, although the latter should in the end be more controlling. I shall not undertake to discuss the latter question at the present time, but, as the debate proceeds, it will undoubtedly give rise to discussion.

Mr. President, the disabled soldier stands out and apart from the rest of the citizens of the country, and is entitled to receive and does receive and will continue to receive the gracious consideration of his Government at all times. There is no difference of view, so far as I know, as to the obligation of the Government to equalize as nearly as it can the chances of the disabled soldier in the struggle of life. What we are doing and what we propose to do with reference to the disabled soldier is a matter of much concern and has its bearing upon the proposal of a bonus. The legislation which is proposed with reference to the soldier who has returned unimpaired in body or in mind will have its immediate bearing upon the ability and the willingness of the Government to discharge its obligations to the disabled soldier. It is, therefore, important to inquire what is the obligation which the Government assumes and which the Government must assume with reference to the disabled soldier and how will that obligation be affected by the legislation which is proposed with reference to general compensation. We can not dissociate the questions. One necessarily must have its bearing upon the other.

I call attention to some figures bearing upon the question of appropriations for the disabled soldier up to this time.

In 1918 we appropriated $179,287,800 for allowances or benefits on account of soldiers and sailors who participated in the World War.

In 1919 we appropriated $89,253,833.

In 1920 we appropriated $305,193,993.

In 1921 we appropriated $271,619,400.

In 1922 we appropriated $330,250,400.

Making a total for those five years of $1,175,605,426.

On Saturday last we passed a bill carrying an appropriation, in round figures, of $406,038,844. I am not sure that that is the exact amount for which the bill passed the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator need add 45 cents only to the figures he has quoted to make the amount exactly correct.

Mr. BORAH. That appropriation will have to be increased later; and it is perfectly safe to say that appropriation bills passing and those which are to be taken care of in the immediate future will carry at least $500,000,000 for the disabled soldiers and sailors of the late war.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, we already have estimates for a deficiency bill of $93,000,000 to complete the fiscal year 1922, and, judging by the past, there will be more asked for 1923 through one or more deficiency bills.

Mr. BORAH. Then, there should be added to the figures for 1922, in addition to the $330,250,400, about $93,000,000, making in all for that year about $423,250,400.

Mr. WARREN. About $93,000,000; not less than that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me? I think, in addition to the figures stated by the Senator from Idaho and those just given by the Senator from Wyoming, there are a great many other items that are found in other appropriation bills, but the amounts ought to be directly chargeable to this branch of the service.

Mr. WARREN. I did not mind the 1922 figures quoted, because we had one or two large appropriations in deficiency bills, but I assume that the Senator already had those figures. I desire to say, however, that there is quite a good deal of expense in the Public Health Service and other such services, as the Senator from Utah has stated, which, while it can not be enumerated and brought down to exact figures to add to this, is appropriated for the support of our veteran service.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. I think, therefore, it is a very conservative statement when I say that we will appropriate $500,000,000 for the coming year to take care of those who were engaged in the late war, and who suffered disabilities.

Mr. President, of course, that is only the beginning. The amount which we are now appropriating will continue to grow very rapidly for the next 30—possibly 50—years. I venture to say that within the next 10 years we will be appropriating $1,500,000,000 a year for the disabled soldiers and sailors of the late war. No one will complain so long as the appropriations are based upon the necessities and the requirements of the disabled soldiers; and I call attention to the matter only that we may know something of the burden which we are compelled to assume and which we will be under obligations to take care of from year to year. We will not shirk the duty, I trust, but we ought not to place ourselves in a position where it may become practically impossible for us to meet it as we should.

These young men who came home, many of them, thousands of them, and it may run into hundreds of thousands of them, supposing that they were in good health, uninjured, and unimpaired in mind or body, find and will find that subtle diseases were contracted or injuries received or the hardships they were compelled to undergo have undermined their health and many times shattered their minds.

Day by day the number we will have to take care of is increasing, and for years will increase. I think it is perfectly reasonable to say that this sum will increase from year to year until it will reach at least $1,500,000,000 a year in a few years. Even this amount may be greatly increased.

As an illustration, I go back a moment and review the increase of pension appropriations for the Civil War veterans. When we compare the appropriations made for the Civil War veterans and the percentage of increase and the number of years through which the appropriations increased it is perfectly safe to say that before this Government shall have discharged its obligation to the wounded or disabled soldiers the taxpayers of this country will have met an obligation of at least $75,000,000,000. Conservative experts have estimated it at $100,000,000,000. That sum seems so staggering and so stupendous that I hesitate to prophesy that we will reach that sum, but I do not know by what process we can reason it down below $75,000,000,000.

Look for a moment at the Civil War pension appropriations. In 1875, 10 years after the close of the Civil War, our appropriation bill for pensions was $29,980,000. That was 10 years after the conflict. We are now appropriating $500,000,000 within four years after the World War. In 1898, and prior to the Spanish War, we appropriated for the veterans of the Civil War $141,263,880. From 1875 to 1898 there had been this large increase; and in 1921, 56 years after the Civil War, we appropriated $279,150,000 for pensions. If, therefore, we compare the rate of increase, taking into consideration the larger number with whom we shall have to deal and the greater seriousness of the war as to injuries and wounds, we shall arrive readily at the conclusion that the amount of money which I have suggested as the probable amount which the taxpayers will have to meet is a reasonable figure.

One of the reasons why I am opposed to the bonus bill is because even with the large sums which we are now appropriating I do not believe that we are doing all that we ought to do by the disabled soldiers, and this bonus will make it more difficult to discharge that duty.

I am perfectly aware that the subject of neglect of the disabled soldier is one which is calculated to create much feeling and possibly some undue sentiment, and therefore facts and figures may be exaggerated; but after all these things are taken into consideration I entertain no doubt at all but that those who are in charge of this service—and they are faithful and efficient—could utilize altogether to the benefit and advantage and happiness and welfare of the disabled soldier $200,000,000 a year more than they are now receiving.

I know by personal observation, as every Senator here knows, there are many cases which call for consideration at the hands of the Government not now being cared for. We know that those who are in close touch with the disabled soldiers are constantly presenting to the Government the fact that the situation has not yet been met. Only a short time ago a letter was addressed to the President of the United States calling attention to the fact that the neglect of the disabled soldier was a smirch upon the good name of the United States, and stating facts and circumstances which seem to have warranted the conclusion which the writer drew. Among other things, they say:

For example, in the Longview Asylum, at Hamilton County, Ohio, there are 42 gallant soldiers who broke down mentally under the stress of war, although Longview is so overcrowded that 240 of the inmates sleep on the floor like cattle.

I never have heard that statement controverted. Other instances are given, many of them. Other statements have been made which seem to be well founded; and those things, taken in connection with the personal knowledge which every Senator has, either through letters or through observation, lead to the belief that owing to the fact that the Government is now apparently bearing every burden in the way of tax gathering that it can, we are not meeting the situation with reference to the disabled soldier as we should.

Does anyone doubt, Mr. President, that if we impose upon the taxpayers of this country an additional burden of from three and a half to five billions of dollars it will have its effect, and its tremendous effect, in the way of crippling the Government in taking care of those who have every right to be taken care of at the hands of the Government? Can anyone doubt for a moment that in the years which are to come, during the next 4 or 5 or even 10 years, as we are called upon to meet this obligation to the disabled soldiers, we shall be embarrassed by the fact that we have distributed, or agreed to distribute, some five billions of dollars to those who are not disabled? With this bonus of five billion resting upon us many dollars will be denied to the disabled.

I doubt not that it is the wish of the ex-service men throughout the country that the Government should be absolutely certain that it is first meeting, and is meeting unmistakably, the obligation to the disabled soldier, and that it will not be embarrassed in meeting it in the future, before it takes upon itself the burden which is proposed by this contemplated measure. I am sure that all ex-service men want the disabled taken care of as they should be, and none desire to cripple the Government in doing so.

From a message sent a few days ago to Ex-President Wilson by the disabled veterans of the World War I read as follows:

Resolutions looking to the better care of disabled veterans were adopted at the closing session. The conference went on record as favoring immediate construction of all hospitals for which allocation has been made, and establishment of rest homes for convalescents as well as for training men in poor physical condition; also tubercular sanatoriums. It was voted to ask Congress to investigate needs of the War Department in order that service records might be available in establishing the justice of disabled men's claims, etc.

These matters are pouring in upon us day by day and being brought to our attention in many different ways, and I think them important matters to consider in connection with this bill.

Mr. President, let us go back, now, to the 12th day of July, 1921, when this question was before the Senate in the consideration of a measure then upon the calendar. So serious was the financial condition of the country, and in such distress was the Treasury of the United States, that it was deemed necessary to have the President come to the Senate and advise us as to the condition of the country, and as to the probable consequences to the country financially and economically should we pass the bonus bill at that time. I go back to the 12th day of July, 1921, and ask the Senate to consider seriously whether the conditions were worse at that time than the conditions as they exist now, not only with reference to the Treasury, but as to the taxpayer, and as to the condition of industry throughout the country.

If there has been any marked or substantial change in the situation for the better I am not advised of it. Said the President:

If this measure could be made effective at the present time without disaster to the Nation's finances and without hindrance to imperative readjustment of our taxes it would present an entirely different question than that which is now before you. * * * The enactment of the compensation bill in the midst of the struggle for readjustment and restoration would hinder every effort and greatly imperil the financial stability of the country. More, this menacing effort to expend billions in gratuities will imperil our capacity to discharge our first obligation to those we must not fail to aid.

Is not that the precise situation at the present time? Is the financial condition of the Treasury any more satisfactory, notwithstanding the effort to relieve the situation? Have the taxes been reduced to any substantial extent, to such an extent that the taxpayer has felt the relief? Are we in any better position to take care of the disabled soldier than we were on the 12th of July, 1921? Certainly before we change the program and impose this burden upon the taxpayers it is our unmistakable obligation to the country to demonstrate beyond question that the situation has changed, and that the menace then threatening does not at this time exist. If we impose this burden now without a showing that the situation in the country is far better and that the country is so improved economically and financially that it is able to carry it, there will be but one conclusion—that we are passing the bill for sinister and indefensible reasons.

Again, the President said:

There are the revision, including reduction, of our internal taxation, the refunding of our war debts, and the adjustment of our foreign loans, and it is vitally necessary to settle these problems before adding to our Treasury any such burden as is contemplated in the pending bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I believe in quoting the President the Senator read the word "gratuities" as being a proper term to apply to this adjusted compensation bill. I should like to inquire if the Senator who is now addressing us views this adjusted compensation bill as providing for the payment of a gratuity?

Mr. BORAH. I am going to discuss that before I sit down, but I will say in passing that I would much prefer to regard it as a gratuity than as compensation. If I were going to compensate the soldier for his service in the Great War, where he imperiled, or was willing to imperil, his life, I would not care to put it at $2 a day, payable in little installments spread over a number of years.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I would simply like to state that some of us who are very much in favor of this adjusted compensation bill do not regard it as providing for a gratuity, and I can quite understand how a person who would regard it as a mere gratuity might be opposed to the bill. So I am quite anxious to hear the Senator discuss that question when he reaches it in the course of his remarks.

Mr. BORAH. I did discuss it on or about the 13th day of July, and on that particular point. Gentlemen talk about compensation, Mr. President, "adjusted" compensation. Adjusted to what, to what standard? Your stable boy, the unfortunate woman, circumscribed by race and environment, who scrubs the floors of your Capitol, receives more wage than you propose to pay as compensation to the boys who were willing to imperil their lives. I would infinitely rather call it a bonus, a gratuity, from the hearts of the American people, than to insult an American soldier by telling him that he was worth no more than the charwoman upon your Capitol steps.

The President said further:

It is unthinkable to expect a business revival and the resumption of the normal ways of peace while maintaining the excessive taxes of war. It is quite as unthinkable to reduce our tax burdens while committing our Treasury to an additional obligation which ranges from three to five billions of dollars. * * * A modest offering to the millions of service men is a poor palliative to more millions who may be out of employment. Stabilized finance and well-established confidence are both essential to restored industry and commerce.

Mr. President, upon the strength of that message the bill was sent back to the committee. When we were advised by the President that the bill would threaten the entire scheme and plan of bringing back stability to the industrial and financial conditions of the country, the Senate concluded that it would wait until that condition of affairs had passed.

I ask the advocates of the bonus bill, of the adjusted compensation bill, if the conditions which the President pictured to us—and which, no doubt, were founded upon facts—have changed in any material particular whatever? I shall undertake to call attention to the condition of some of the leading industries of the country to show that the situation is far worse in the country at this time, taken as a whole, and by no fault of the administration, I might say, but by reason of economic conditions which must inevitably have come after the war and which did come, than it was six or eight months ago, and we are less able to meet this situation and at the same time take care of the obligations which devolve upon us than we were at the time the President delivered his message.

Take, for illustration, the letter of Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury. I am not going to discuss Mr. Mellon's theories or views about things. He may or may not believe in the bonus. Men may differ in their views upon public questions, but he states certain facts with reference to the Treasury and the condition of the Treasury and the financial situation of the country which are stronger and more impelling than the facts which he stated in January, 1921.

First, he contends that there must be a net reduction below the Budget estimates within the two years of 1922 and 1923 or we shall have a deficit of $300,000,000.

That is the situation so far as the primal facts with reference to the Treasury are concerned. After the estimates are submitted, we are facing a deficit of $300,000,000. Do Senators think they will be reduced? Who does? We will not have a deficit of $300,000,000, if the Secretary is correct; we will have a deficit of $500,000,000 or more. With all our taxes, with all our burdens, with all our promises, we are facing a deficit of from three hundred to five hundred millions. Now, if you are thinking of politics and elections turn that over in your mind. There will be no generalities in the next campaign. We have got to look the taxpayer—the distressed farmer, the worried business man—in the face and talk of concrete things. He will want to know facts and facts about his relief which we promised.

Furthermore these estimates did not take into consideration the $50,000,000 which is asked by the Shipping Board for the settlement of claims. It did not take into consideration the $7,000,000 for the Grain Corporation on account of the Russian relief. It did not take into consideration the $5,000,000 to be paid under the Colombian treaty; and it did not take into consideration the $50,000,000 on account of additional compensation to Government employees. Here is a sum of $112,000,000 which was not included in the estimates, which estimates must be reduced as presented or we will have a deficit of $300,000,000, says the Secretary.

It is a very serious thing, when the people are bearing about all they can bear in the way of a tax burden, to advise them that the worst is not here yet, that we must increase our taxes and increase the burden even without taking into consideration the large sum which we are proposing to cover by this bill.

Further, the Secretary said:

The sources of revenue are drying up faster than the expenditures of the Government are decreasing.

That is no doubt true. It did not need a Treasury letter to tell that. The sources of taxation are becoming dry. From whence are we to draw the increased taxes? Our expenditures in Government affairs increase faster than the sources of taxation increase. Said the Secretary further:

The bonus bill would impose an additional burden of from $3,330,000,000 to $5,250,000,000, and it is impossible to meet the bonus bill without providing for additional taxes with which to meet it.

I quote now his exact language:

It would be dangerous in the extreme to attempt to finance the expenditures involved in the bonus through new borrowings. The position of the Treasury remains unchanged.

So far, therefore, as the Treasury is concerned, the barometer by which to test the condition in the country, the Secretary advises us that it remains unchanged since the 12th day of July, 1921. It would seem that ordinary prudence upon the part of Congress would require a presentation of a new set of circumstances and conditions upon which to found the proposed legislation, Congress having at one time refused it because of conditions which were less menacing than they are at the present time.

I think the taxpayer of the country is carrying about all he can carry and, what is of more significance to me than the fact that economically and financially his resources are being exhausted, I suggest that his patience is being exhausted. It is a very dangerous situation when the patience of a people has reached a limit. It is that kind of dynamite the destructive effect of which no human foresight can foresee.

Let us look at the agricultural conditions of the country as compared with the time when the President spoke in July, 1921. I think there is nothing more serious in this country than the agricultural condition. It is a condition which has been growing toward its present status for years, but it has been tremendously accentuated by what has happened during the last several years, particularly since the close of the war. We have known for years that there was a heira going on from the farm to the city, that vast acreages throughout the country were being abandoned; that farms were being abandoned; that a large portion of the agricultural population had given up the struggle upon the farm and gone to the city to work for wages; that congested centers were receiving those who ought to be producing. That is a notorious fact in the history of our country. It has been noticeable to all who have investigated it. But that condition has widened and deepened rapidly in the last few years. It is now nothing less than a problem the solution of which along right lines is indispensable to the future happiness of our people and the stability of our institutions. When the agricultural interests become demoralized, the whole country economically and politically becomes demoralized.

The farm mortgages of owners of farms in 1910 amounted to $1,726,172,851. Ten years afterwards, in 1920, that indebtedness had increased to $4,018,711,213. This figure does not include the rented farms or the indebtedness of those who are living upon rented farms. As nearly as can now be estimated, the indebtedness of the agricultural interests of the country, of the farmers of the country, owners and tenant farmers, is now $8,500,000,000. An average interest upon that of 7 or 7½ per cent equals $620,000,000 a year. That is the basic condition with reference to the farming interests of the country. That is the condition which existed in 1920. That is the burden and the debt which they are carrying. Who can calculate what it means to continue to add to their burden?

I have a letter written by a farmer well known to all north-western men, a man very active in the agricultural life of the Northwest, and whose statement, I think, is not at all exaggerated, Mr. Mansfield, of the State of Washington. Speaking specifically of the conditions in his portion of the country, he said:

There are thousands of farmers in Montana, Washington, and southern Idaho who are unable to send their children to school on account of not having books; a great many of them are living mostly on bread and milk; a good many of them have to go to their banker and beg for money enough to buy a sack of flour. * * * A great many of the farmers, even in our best districts, have not been able to pay their last summer's store bill; therefore they can not take in these people who are hungry and out of work. Farmers will be able to hire but very few men in the spring. In consequence poor farming will be done and acreage will be cut.

That is the condition which prevails not only in the territory which is covered by the gentleman's letter but which prevails throughout the agricultural region in the Middle West and far West very generally. When the time comes to plant the crop, it must be planted then or not at all. When the time comes to gather the crop, it must be gathered then or not at all. We are going to face a condition now inside of the next 90 days in which hundreds of thousands of farmers throughout the country will not be able to plant their crops.

They will not be able to put in their acreage. They are not in a position to hire the help to do so. I submit, Mr. President, that before the Congress advises the farming interests of the country that, notwithstanding the serious condition which prevails, they propose to put upon them their proportion of from $5,000,000,000 to $5,250,000,000 of additional indebtedness we ought to take counsel among ourselves as to what will be the probable effect. And suppose these farmers come to you and say we did our duty in the war—we extended our acreage, we paid enormous prices for farm implements, we bought more Liberty bonds than we could afford, which we have since had to sell at a loss; our prices were fixed, the prices we had to pay were not fixed, but we were patriots, we responded to the call; we are now in distress; we want an adjusted compensation bill to help us save our homes, the struggle of a lifetime—what answer will you give them? In other words, is this adjusted for only one class, who did their duty, or are you proposing to throw open the Treasury to all who have enough votes to count?

The young men throughout the country who came back unimpaired in body and mind can not recover until the country recovers. They can not come back economically and financially until the country comes back. The pitiful sum which will be paid to them, small in itself but aggregating tremendously against their fellow citizens, will do them no good if it continues to embarrass the country and prevent recovery in financial and economic conditions. What avail will it be to the soldiers of the country if they receive their five or six hundred dollars and impose an additional burden upon the country so as to delay recovery, to continue to prostrate business, and discourage industry and prevent a recovery?

I read from Mr. Charles F. Scott, a former Member of Congress. I do not think that he is unduly prejudiced in favor of the farmer, as he was criticizing in the same article what is known as the farm bloc. He said:

The farmers have played in awfully hard luck this past year and really deserve sympathy. Right here in Allen County there are many tenant farmers who, after a whole year of hard work, are actually in debt, the crop they raised not selling for enough to pay their rent. * * * Two or three mass meetings have been held, and the only resolutions they have adopted have been by way of an appeal for economy in public expenditures—

Asking that the expensive load they are carrying may be lightened, asking that there may be some relief in the way of the tax burden which is being placed upon them. It is little enough for them to ask, but even that we deny them.

So much, Mr. President, for the farming conditions, though before I pass on I do wish to mention an item which I think of some consideration. On January 1, 1921, according to the report of the Department of Agriculture, there were 10,000,000 less head of live stock on the farms than on January 1, 1920. Milch cows had decreased 298,000, other cattle 1,180,000, swine

5,078,000, sheep 2,047,000. I suspect that these figures are modest, because in my judgment, with reference to two of the items, they should be much larger.

Mr. KING. They are too small with respect to sheep, as we all know.

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly. Do you think, therefore, Mr. President, that the condition in reference to the farming interest particularly is any better than it was on the 12th of July, 1921? Do you think the farmer is any better prepared to meet the situation than at the time Congress thought that it was unsafe to impose this burden? Are we any nearer to a restoration of financial conditions, or are we simply nearer the election?

As to the labor condition in the country, it is estimated that there are from four million to four and a half million people out of employment. I have seen statements to the effect that this nonemployment number has decreased to some extent, but they have only been general statements. I know that there is still a very large number of men out of employment, and throughout the cities there seems to be no decrease in the number of the unemployed.

The railroad situation, I venture to say, is no better than it was at that time. If anyone will read some two or three of the statements which have been made before the Interstate Commerce Commission within the last 20 days, he will conclude that, so far as the transportation question is concerned, it has not yet been settled. Some of the most extraordinary propositions are being made to settle the railroad question. If some of the proposals seriously urged are adopted, I presume we will no longer hesitate to recognize the soviet government.

I read a most interesting statement made by Mr. Hoover in regard to the railroad situation, which indicates that he regards it as not only distressful but menacing. In his statement in regard to it he said:

There is nothing that is so irrecoverable a loss to the Nation as idle shops and idle men. To-day we have both in the United States.

Yes; we have them both. Yet we are bending every energy and using all the brain power we have to find something more to tax. We lay on burdens like heirs who riot in some vast inherited estate. There is a day of reckoning. Do not forget it comes this year on November 7.

Mr. President, how are we going to pay the bonus? There is no trouble about voting an appropriation so long as we can vote it out of the air; so long as we merely vote the appropriation and trust to Divine Providence to get the money. When we announce, however, that we are going to lay a tax upon automobiles or that we are going to lay a tax upon gasoline or that we are going to lay a tax upon postage or that we are going to impose a sales tax, then a different situation immediately arises, for there are more taxpayers in the United States than there are ex-service men. The situation immediately becomes serious.

It has been proposed thus far to raise the tax in several different ways. I understand that none of them has yet been accepted or agreed upon, largely for the reason that as soon as it was divulged that a tax was to be laid here or there the protest was so keen and so determined that it was thought wise to shift it somewhere else. It would be ludicrous if it were not tragic.

Mr. President, I have no fear of the passage of a bonus bill if there be included in the bonus bill the method of paying the bonus; but I venture the prophecy now that, after some weeks of investigation and consideration as to what particular industries or what particular commodities are going to be taxed, the question of how the tax is going to be raised will be abandoned and we shall pass the bonus bill without providing for any method of paying it. We will take a reckless chance that in some way or somehow we will find a way to put on this burden and hope to conceal the fact from the taxpayer and the country. I prophesy you will have trouble. Your proposals have called the people to the watchtower, they know now that whether you put it in this bill or a separate bill that they must meet it. It is too late to soothe their anxiety by a little piece of legislative ledgerdom.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In that connection I desire to join in the prophecy which the Senator from Idaho has just made. It will be exceedingly gratifying to me to know, and I should like to inquire if the Senator can inform me, of any reason why there should be attached to the bonus bill a revenue measure for the purpose of paying the burdens which will be imposed by it any more than a revenue measure should be attached to every other appropriation bill which comes before the Congress?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course the only reason why we should attach a method of paying the appropriation which will be provided by the bill is to have the money with which to pay it. The soldier, perhaps, would like to feel that it will be paid. The Secretary of the Treasury has told us that there is nothing with which to pay it. We must increase taxes somewhere; we must either increase them in this bill or we have got to pass an additional tax bill. We have not now sufficient means with which to pay the bonus. Then, why not provide the method of its payment in the bill itself? Of course, if we had sufficient funds in the Treasury to pay the appropriation which will be required, there would be much force in the position which the Senator from New Mexico takes, but we have not sufficient funds. We must either write the method into the bill or we must pass an additional bill carrying the necessary taxes, and, so far as the taxpayer is concerned, it will not make any difference to him.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Idaho has just indicated that under appropriations already made or contemplated there will be a deficit of $300,000,000. Why should not the Congress in making appropriations have anticipated that situation and provided in the bill making the appropriation the method for raising the revenue?

If this compensation is to be paid to these men, why single this bill out as a vehicle, if you please, through which to carry tax measures which would not otherwise be enacted? If the bonus is to be paid, if it is to be a burden upon the Government, why not raise the revenue for this debt precisely the same as for any other, and, instead of putting a revenue measure upon this bill, why not revise the revenue law and raise the money necessary to meet the demands upon the Treasury? Why not consider a revision of the law and revise the excess-profits tax or adopt some other provision which doubtless would be incorporated if we were revising the revenue law to meet what would be considered as just demands upon the Treasury? Why should this measure be singled out here for the purpose of carrying obnoxious means of raising revenue?

Mr. BORAH. Obnoxious! Of course, everything is obnoxious now which proposes to raise any more revenue. And the thing we want to do is conceal if we can the obnoxious part. The Senator from New Mexico loses sight of the fact that it is immaterial, so far as the recovery of the country is concerned, whether we put the tax in this bill or whether we put it in another. I am perfectly aware that as a political proposition it is more desirable to put it in another bill; but so far as the taxpayer is concerned it does not make any difference whatever, because we have got to lay the tax somewhere; and I submit to the Senator from New Mexico that we have laid upon the people of this country all the taxes we should lay upon them. Whether we do it by special bill or by a general tax bill does not make any difference to the taxpayer; he has got to pay it anyway; the country has got to bear it; and the economic conditions of the country have got to suffer; industry will be retarded, and agriculture will be still further demoralized. Therefore, Mr. President, why should not Congress say, "We are going to pay this bonus, and this is the method by which we are going to pay it," and let the country look it in the face and say whether or not they like it? Let us have the courage to be specific, to assume responsibility.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. As a matter of fact, according to the statistics which the Senator has read, at the present time, without the additional tax which would be necessary for the payment of a bonus, millions of men are unemployed. Therefore the present system of taxation must be a deterrent to business without any regard to what would be necessary to be raised for the payment of the bonus. Is not that true?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it is true. The Senator referred a while ago to the question of gratuity and asked whether I looked upon it as a gratuity. I do look upon it as a gratuity. I believe the soldier himself, when he comes to reflect upon it, would much rather feel that he was receiving from the country a gratuity of $500 or $600 than that he had consented to place a money value upon his services as a soldier. I can understand how a people out of the graciousness of their hearts, as a matter of gratuity, might wish to donate money to those who had been in their service as soldiers, but I confess that I am utterly unable to comprehend the proposition that a Republic should undertake to fix a financial compensation for those who were willing to sacrifice when their country was in peril. That is the doctrine of Hessianism; that is the infamy of the old practice in Europe, of a hired soldiery. I think it is infinitely more complimentary to the soldier to say, "We tender you this out of the fullness of our Treasury and out of the fullness of our hearts," rather than to say, "We have fixed a dollar or two dollars a day compensation upon your services as a soldier." Between the two I prefer the gratuity.

But, Mr. President, where are we going to draw the line in this situation in which we find ourselves. You know quite as well as I do that thousands of people who were not drafted into the Army, nevertheless performed valuable services for the Government, services without which the war could not have been won, and who are now in just as distressing condition financially as the soldier may be in.

Will you permit the mother who purchased Liberty bonds at a time when she could not afford to do so, and who has since been compelled to forfeit them or to sell them at a lower figure, and who now may be in want or indigent, and who, perhaps, may have children dependent upon her—will you permit her to suffer, to go hungry, and even to starve, and at the same time dole out to another who performed an equal service in the war, but no greater in proportion to ability and who may not need it at all, $500 from the Public Treasury? You say "adjusted compensation." Adjusted for what? For service in the war. Where are you going to stop? Did nobody render any service except the man who was conscripted? Did not thousands of citizens render equally good service, and are they not now in need of our help? When we begin to appropriate from the Public Treasury for indiscriminate distribution, there is no line that I know of on the hither side of turning the Treasury over to those who have the most votes. And that is a very hazardous thing to try to estimate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator, of course, does not overlook the fact that the legislation which was provided for the recruiting of men for the service in time of war embraced something over 24,000,000 men, each one of whom was subject to the call of his country and to be put in the ranks of the country's Army. Out of the 24,000,000 we selected only 4,000,000. The other 20,000,000 remained at home, remained in private employment, many of them, the great majority of them in private employment of their own choosing. They slept under comfortable roofs; they slept in good beds at night; they had their meals regularly. They were subject to the call of their country, just the same as the 4,000,000 men were who were selected to go into the ranks of the Army, but they remained here in civil life, receiving the highest wages ever known in the history of the country.

I ask the Senator if he does not realize that that puts upon this Government some sort of a special obligation to the 4,000,000 men who were called, as compared with the 20,000,000 who were subject to call but who were not called, who remained in civil life and worked for the highest wages ever known in the country, who remained in the ordinary walks of activity, keeping in the channels of business and industry and commerce, retaining their jobs, their employment, and building up for the future, whereas the 4,000,000 were taken away and deprived of those opportunities and those privileges? Does not the Senator realize there is some difference there?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I can not—

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from New Mexico a question, if he had the choice would he prefer to be one of the 20,000,000 who remained in civil life or one of the 4,000,000 who served in the Army, and especially one of the 2,100,000 who went to the other side to fight? If it were for the Senator to choose, would he prefer to be one of the 2,000,000 who went to the firing line in France, or one of the 20,000,000 who remained here?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, if I may answer that question, of course many thoughts arise in the mind from the suggestion which the Senator has made. I can realize that there may be a spirit of patriotism for the country which would cause many to want to get into the service of the country. I have no doubt that spirit did actuate thousands and hundreds of thousands; but we did not conduct this war upon that principle. We passed legislation here providing that everybody within certain ages should be subject to the call of the country, whether he wanted to go or not. It is wholly immaterial what I would do under the circumstances. The situation must be judged by the legislation which the Congress passed.

We passed a law which enabled the Government to put its hand upon the shoulder of every one of those 24,000,000 people, whether they wanted to go or not, and we simply utilized the services of 4,000,000 of them in one way, and the services of the 20,000,000 others in another and a very different way. I submit that it is not a question of individual preference, whether one would want to fight for the Government or whether he would prefer to work in a munitions factory, or whether he would prefer to work upon the railroads to move the munitions to the front, and receive higher wages for it. I submit that the question presented by the Senator from Virginia has no application whatever here and is not to be considered in connection with this subject.

Mr. BORAH. I can not quite agree with the Senator from New Mexico that it has no application to the argument. It seems to me that it does reveal, in an unmistakable way, the sordid situation into which these boys are dragged when you come to consider the question of compensation. The Senator from New Mexico eliminates from consideration everything except the mere matter of recompense, which I submit again the soldier himself will resent. The time will come when the soldier himself will resent the proposition that a money compensation has been fixed upon his service, for the very reason which the Senator was driven to use in answer to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. President, I was about to say, when the Senator from Virginia asked the question, that it is a little difficult to compare the 20,000,000 who did not go with the 4,000,000 who were called to go, because we do not know their different circumstances and conditions; but let me ask the Senator a question. Let us take an individual case and illustrate the proposition by it.

Suppose a young man who has been in the Army was conscripted and has returned uninjured, sound in body and mind. He is now in good circumstances and condition. He does not need the $500. There is no occasion for paying it to him so far as injuries are concerned or so far as want is concerned. Beside him is his neighbor, a man who did everything within his power, either as a laborer or otherwise, to forward the cause of the war, to assist in winning the war; and they were just as necessary to winning the war, as they were told over and over again, as the soldier was. Suppose this neighbor is now in indigent circumstances. He needs money. With all his labor he saved little because of the high prices. He did his part as a citizen. He responded to the call of patriotism. He met the situation as he could, but in some way or other misfortune has overtaken him. How can the Senator say that he will pay to that man who did his duty $500, but he will leave the other man, who did his duty, in indigent circumstances and unassisted by the aid of the Government? These young men who were conscripted did their duty; no criticism or censure can be assessed against them. Their country is proud of them. But hundreds of thousands who were not in camp did their duty. They worked days and nights; some with pay; some gave their time for nothing. They were necessary to the success of the war. Some of them now are idle, hungry; their children are hungry. Will the Government remunerate one and turn away from the other? I denounce it as intolerable, indefensible. I would count myself unjust and cruel to pursue such a course. The Government must be just to all; it must treat all alike, or it ceases to be a Government; it is merely organized cowardice.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not agree, of course, with the premise of the Senator from Idaho in the discussion of this whole measure. I think that the civilian who sustains loss through the ordinary vicissitudes of life, the hazards of business, the chances of gain, and the chances of loss that he takes in every walk of life is in an entirely different situation from the citizen who had no option in the matter, who was taken by his country, who was given no chance to profit or make material gain. If he is indigent his situation is quite different, and there is an obligation to that citizen quite different from the one who becomes indigent or has met with adverse circumstances in the ordinary walks of life; and there are thousands of them, hundreds of thousands, in this country to-day of that very class. Just recently it was estimated that in the city of New York alone there are 75,000 ex-service men now patronizing the charitable soup houses of the city, and I ask the Senator if there should not be some consideration shown them; and it is no answer that there may be other thousands who are not in need.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I submit that the Senator's proposition may be answered by a single statement. We will assume that there are 75,000 soldiers in New York who are in need, that there are 100,000 other citizens who are in need, and that they did their duty in the war just as effectively and just as necessarily as the man who was conscripted. Do you propose to say to me that I shall dole out of the Treasury to those 75,000 men sufficient to take care of them and leave those 100,000 who are indigent but who did their duty voluntarily as citizens without any assistance whatever?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

Mr. BORAH. Let me pursue the matter a little further before the Senator goes on. I ask the Senator to reflect upon the premises of his argument. He says that these men were conscripted, they were not permitted to exercise their discretion, they were not permitted to stay at home, they were compelled to serve their Government, and therefore he would pay them $500 each. The man who was the neighbor of one of these men, and who was not conscripted, was moved by patriotism and voluntarily went and did his duty. He met the situation as his country called for it. Which one, according to the Senator's own argument, is more entitled to the consideration of his Government?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sorry that I have been unable to make clear to the Senator the difference as I have tried to do. It seems to me the Senator is laboring under an impression which I do not entertain, that this whole matter is a question of favoritism. It is true that the citizen who served his country in the production of foodstuffs and other necessities of life, and munitions and other supplies to enable our armies to go ahead and fight our battles, did a great service for his country; but that same service was performed by every citizen of this country, and under conditions of his own choosing. He was not taken away from one employment and put into another. He was not taken away from his home and his family and sent into another land or put into a Government camp. His condition was entirely different; and it is not a question of a mere gratuity and considering these people on the same plane at all. I quite agree that if we once concede that everybody who served his country, regardless of the conditions under which he served, is entitled to the same consideration, then there is no answer to the argument presented by the Senator from Idaho; but if we recognize a distinction here, then it seems to me the Senator's argument must fall.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I recognize a distinction only as to the disabled soldier. I recognize no distinction between the different citizens who did their full duty to their Government, whether they were conscripted or whether they volunteered. I recognize no distinction where the soldier comes home uninjured and unimpaired.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that subject may I venture to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. KING. I want to suggest to the Senator from Idaho, in view of the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico, that there were thousands and hundreds of thousands of young men who assumed the burden of caring for their families to permit their brothers to go overseas. Two or three or four in one family would be subject to conscription. They did not draw lots it is true. All were subject to the draft. Some came before the draft board and others did not; but among the members of the family themselves it was agreed that A and B would care for the family and C might go. A or B might have preferred to go rather than to stay, but family considerations prompted them to take that course. There were thousands of cases of that character and others analogous, where it is clear that the men who stayed at home were performing just as much service for the country as those who went overseas.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in the Great War everyone who was loyal to the Government performed service according to his station or position or situation, and it was necessary for each and every one to perform that service in order that we should be successful. It would have been an act of folly or a crime to send these young men across the water if the people at home were not willing to make whatever sacrifices had to be made and to do whatever was necessary to be done in order to meet the situation. I have just as much respect I believe for the ex-service men as the Senator from New Mexico has, but, at the same time, I can not discriminate between the man who was conscripted and did his duty, and did it nobly, and the man who was not conscripted but did his duty and did it nobly, in case misfortune has overtaken them both. If I am called upon to meet and take care of the situation, I want to put it upon some basis of necessity. In other words, Mr. President, if I could single out the 75,000 soldiers who the Senator says are in want, I would feel that I should do by them just the same as I would do by 75,000 citizens who had also done their duty in the war and who also were in want. I will make no discrimination between the different citizens of my country, all of whom performed every obligation resting upon them during the great conflict, unless one or the other has received an injury by reason of doing it.

That has been the rule in this Republic from its beginning. No other rule has ever been thought of. No other rule, in my judgment, will inure to the benefit of the country in the end. If we can not have service from the citizen upon the basis of patriotism, of voluntary service, then the Republic is at an end.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I just add a word, Mr. President? I think the remarks just made by the Senator from Idaho clearly illustrate the different points of view. Of course, with the premise assumed by the Senator from Idaho I think his conclusion naturally follows; but this bill is framed upon an entirely different idea. The bill does recognize a distinction. If the Senator is unwilling to recognize any distinction, of course, he is opposed to this bill; but some of us, at least, and I hope a very substantial majority of us, view the matter from an entirely different point of view. We feel that there is a difference and that that difference should be recognized, and while we realize that the amount of compensation provided by this bill is insignificant, yet it is at least a recognition of this very difference which we believe to exist but which the Senator from Idaho does not believe to exist.

Mr. BORAH. That never has been recognized to exist before in the history of any free country.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. This country has never before passed such legislation as we passed for the purpose of carrying on the last war.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, yes, we have.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not at any other time.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, we have.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I would like to have the Senator suggest the time.

Mr. BORAH. We conscripted soldiers during the Civil War.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Idaho knows that was under quite a different measure from the selective service law. If he will just reflect a moment, the distinctions will certainly occur to him.

Mr. BORAH. They do not readily occur to me.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I assume it would serve no good purpose to discuss the matter at this time.

Mr. BORAH. I think it would come to me after a while, perhaps.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have no doubt it would.

Mr. BORAH. I voted against the conscription act because I believed that the voluntary service of this country would have been sufficient to protect the interests of the Republic, and I have never had any doubt about it at all. I am one of those who believe that if you have to conscript men in order to get them into the Army, you have not a Government which will last very long. I have not a particle of doubt but what if we had never passed the conscription act we would have had all the young men of this country we wanted to meet the situation. I voted against the conscription act because I believed the only true basis of patriotism was voluntary action upon the part of the citizens, and therefore I do not quite grasp the virtue which the Senator seems to think a man acquired by reason of the fact that he was conscripted. I do not think the fact that a man was conscripted added anything to a man's stature as a citizen, that it added anything to his morality, or that it added anything to his patriotism. I think in all probability we would have had more than we wanted if we had never passed the conscription act. The Senator argues that because the Government forced a man to go, and he was not permitted to exercise his discretion and stay at home, therefore he is entitled to more consideration than the citizen who did stay at home under the operation of the conscription law, but did his duty. I confess I do not see it in that light. At the same time I must not be understood to reflect upon the young man because he was conscripted. I had sufficient faith to believe he would have gone without conscription. He would have gone because he was a patriot.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I think the Senator does not quite follow the views which I have been trying to present. I know that the Senator did not believe in the legislation which was passed by the Congress. I did, and if I had had my way about it it would have gone very much further and would have brought into the service of the Government at Government pay a great many of those who were permitted to remain in civil life and draw competitive wages. But I am calling attention to the fact that the legislation which we passed affected 24,000,000 people, and the law itself applied equally to the 24,000,000. When we singled out 4,000,000 of them and put them in a worse position than the other 20,000,000 I submit there was a vast difference created and something which should be recognized, and I am sorry the Senator from Idaho, with his great, brilliant learning and power and talent, is unable to recognize that difference.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I appreciate the Senator's sentiment, but I really consider it a compliment that I am unable to recognize the difference. I repeat, there is nothing I could do that I would not do for the man who has been disabled, for the man who has suffered, for the man who has lost by his service, but when the other man comes home just as well as he was when he went away. I then place him in the common citizenship of the country. Whatever law applies to him must apply to all, and whatever law applies to all must apply to him. He is a part of the citizenship of the country, and he is entitled, in my judgment, to no discrimination and no consideration other than that which applies to the whole country. Of course, when the war came on the entire country was called upon to act, and some performed service here and some performed service there, and I do not see how I could discriminate between the citizens, all of whom did their duty, and none of whom received injuries or detriment. I do not think I am entitled to the sentiment which the Senator has expressed.

Just a word more and I will conclude. I read yesterday in the New York World a statement by a distinguished divine in New York, who said:

New York is resting over a social volcano and does not seem to care. Unemployment is upon the increase. Desperation seems to be the order of the day. Thousands of men are turning to crime. Other thousands, formerly competent and cheerful workers, are becoming rapidly unemployable. Mass meetings advocating all sorts of red revolution are becoming increasingly popular. Madness is in the air. And yet those in positions of supposed responsibility are not only letting the situation develop to a crisis, without lifting a hand to improve it, but they class as "anarchist" and "red" any Christian pastor who sets out to feed the starving or offers the house of God on these freezing nights as a shelter to His suffering children.

He said further in the interview that his church is feeding 1,500 men, and that they are sleeping upon the floors of the church night after night.

It is that condition of affairs which interests me when I come to consider this proposition. I know that those young men did their duty, were perfectly willing to do their duty, would have done their duty if no conscription act had ever been passed, and the debt of gratitude which the United States owes to them is beyond the power of language to portray. I admit it all. It was a terrific task, and they were willing to meet it; but, in my humble opinion, the situation which confronts this country at this time is more perilous and requires more consideration and more sacrifice at the hands of these young men than the distressful days in which they were in the camps.

If we are going to recover in this country at all, we can not recover along the road over which we are now traveling. We have $24,000,000,000 of indebtedness. We have from four to five billion dollars of annual expenses. We have confronting us the task of taking care of the wounded soldiers, at an expense of some $75,000,000,000 in the next 40 or 50 years.

The interest on our public debt amounts to almost a billion a year. Our obligation to the soldier will take over a billion five hundred million a year. How can we recover if we continue to increase these obligations and this indebtedness and this burden of taxation? What shall it profit these young men with their five or six hundred dollars if their country continues in distress?

I think, Mr. President, that while the appeal to patriotism was strong and effective in the days of 1916 and 1917, the appeal to patriotism now is more essential than it was even at that time. It is not so difficult to get men to do their duty in time of war; the stress and the intensity of the situation nerve them to action. They see things as they are. But in time of peace, when subtle influences are undermining the very pillars of the Government itself, men drift and drift and procrastinate until it is too late. In my opinion the task of the young man who went to war in 1918 is only beginning. We need his leadership, we need his self-sacrifice, we need his command of the respect of the people to point a way out of this situation. He must lead, but he can not succeed along lines now being pursued. If we engage in this indiscriminate distributing money from the Public Treasury, conditions will grow worse for him, as well as for his fellow citizens. If he comes here and asks of the Public Treasury, others will come and ask of the Public Treasury. It will become a matter, as in some countries of Europe, of one class invading the Treasury one day and another class invading the Treasury the next day.

In my opinion the hour of service is now, and not in 1917 and 1918. Every man who is well, every man who is enjoying health, every man who came back unscathed, every citizen, whether under the law of conscription or as a voluntary citizen, who did his duty then must continue to do his duty now or we shall suffer more in the future than we have suffered in the past. I am not a pessimist, neither am I ungrateful, but the blind fatuous policies now uppermost in legislation are literally driving this country to economic chaos and thousands and even millions of good people to despair.

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3076) to create a Bureau of Aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not know of any opposition to the bill which is pending as the unfinished business. The only objection to the bill I have had presented to me has come from those who think that it does not go far enough in giving power to the National Government to regulate aviation.

The proposition first presented was submitted in a bill which covered all forms of aviation, both intrastate and interstate. The committee, after considering the matter very carefully, concluded that we should not go that far. It was very strongly urged that we did not have the legal power or authority to do it, and there is certainly very grave doubt of our authority to do it. So the committee thought we ought to avoid such controversial questions as we could avoid and yet start with what the committee conceived to be absolutely essential in providing for civil aviation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let me ask the Senator why it is necessary to take control of aviation out of the War and Navy Departments and put it in the Department of Commerce?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will come to that, although I will say to the Senator that we do not take anything out of the War and Navy Departments at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not proposed to take the bureaus now in the War and Navy Departments and put them in the Department of Commerce?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; we do not do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is proposed to make a separate bureau?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; to deal with all sorts of aviation except Army and Navy aviation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator in this connection allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. There was a commission appointed to co-ordinate the various bureaus and endeavor to effect a saving for the Government. Mr. Brown has been working on the matter as the personal representative of the President. He has made his report to the President, but the commission have not yet been called together to consider it. I wish to inquire if Mr. Brown was consulted with reference to this matter since in the War Department there is one bureau, or one branch of aviation that is there considered, another in the Navy Department, and now it is proposed to have another in the Department of Commerce. Was Mr. Brown consulted at all about the matter?

Mr. JONES of Washington. He was not. I wish to say that the committee went into the matter very fully. I should like to see all the aviation matters that can possibly be brought under one head treated in that way, but it seemed to be perfectly clear to the committee that aviation in the Army and Navy is entirely different from commercial aviation. The machines are different to a great extent. Of course, in the Army and in the Navy the pilots are enlisted men. They are trained for specific purposes. They make their experiments to accomplish certain definite and particular things along particular lines. They are subject to the orders of their superior officers, and, of course, to Army and Navy discipline.

It seemed to the committee entirely clear that Army and Navy aviation is materially different from civil aviation. The pilots are entirely different. They are under a different system of control. So we concluded that it would not be wise to try to disturb the Army and Navy aviation, but that we should leave that under the organizations under which it now exists. There, of course, they do not add any expense other than what may be necessary for the development of machines, and that would have to be done anyway.

As I said, the pilots are already in the Army and in the Navy, and so are the mechanics and all that class of men, so that from the standpoint of economy there seems to be no reason why Army aviation and Navy aviation should be taken from there and put some place else. But from the very nature of their aviation, as compared with civil aviation, and what we are desirous of promoting, there seemed to the committee every reason why it should be left where it is, and that civil aviation, taking all the civil branches of the Government, aviation of the Post Office Department, of the Coast Guard, or whatever there may be elsewhere, should be put under a civil bureau or aeronautic division.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me there is a possibility that this bureau might more economically be put under the War Department. We have in the War Department, for instance, at the present time the Engineers, who are in charge of our river and harbor development. That works great economy over what we would have if the work were in the Department of Commerce. The art of aviation, after all, is only one art, whether the men are engaged in war or in peace. It seems to me what the Senator is doing now is to create a fourth department of the Government that will be interested in aviation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not a department.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Navy Department and the War Department are already in it. The Post Office Department is already in it. Now we are going to have the Department of Commerce interested in aviation and maintaining a bureau whose expense will constantly grow.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator that by the bill the aviation work of the Post Office Department is put under the civil bureau. All the civil activities of the Government in aviation, except the Army and Navy, are proposed to be put under this bureau.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why should not the whole science of aviation, whether used by the Army or the Navy or the Post Office Department or in civil life, be located in one department of the Government instead of being scattered among three or four? I can not see that there is any difference between aviation when it is used in peace and aviation when it is used in war, except that the machines differ. A man who is a good aviator in war is a good aviator in peace, and the same science of aviation applies in the one case that applies in the other. It seems to me the Senator is being tempted and led into the same vicious course that we have gone into so many times in the development of unnecessary Government machinery.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator, I understand, is or at least was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I have no doubt that he has given this matter a great deal of consideration. He knows better about the military conditions than I do. I do not pretend to know anything particularly about the Army and the Navy, but I can see much complication in having the military organization dealing with a great enterprise like this, which we hope to develop into a great enterprise of a purely commercial character. It is different from river and harbor work.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The reason why the engineering work on rivers and harbors was placed in the War Department was because they had to have engineers in the War Department, and the same engineers who pass on military problems could pass on the problems of bridges, navigation, harbor construction, and river work. So it seems to me with aviation. In the art of aviation, if we may call it such, or the science of aviation, the same man who had charge of the aviators in the Army, testing those aviators, developing them and training them, could test, train, and develop aviators likewise for civil life. Of course, the Senator has studied the proposition more than I have, but it seems to me we are, under a slight temptation, drifting right off again into the mistake of unnecessarily multiplying Government machinery.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not desire to multiply Government machinery any more than is absolutely necessary, and I have endeavored to prevent multiplication just as much as possible. I do not agree with the suggestion of the Senator that we have Army engineers in charge of river and harbor work because we must have Army engineers. I think the fact we put the Army engineers over river and harbor work grows very largely out of the jurisdiction of the National Government over navigable streams and navigable waters.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is all right, but it could have been put in the Commerce Department and then we would have had another corps of engineers doing exactly what the Army engineers are doing. Engineering is no less a science than aviation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The river and harbor work is not specifically work for national defense to aid us in time of war, and so on, and yet Army aviation is for the very purpose of developing aviation along specific lines for the national defense as an arm or branch of the Army or an arm or branch of the Navy. It seems to me that is entirely different from civil aviation. Of course, we could create a board for the licensing of civil aviators, but that would not save us anything.

It must not be forgotten that the organization proposed is a limited one and will develop only as civilian aviation grows. I take it that even the work which we contemplate to have done here, if the Army were capable of doing it, could not be done without some additional officers in the Army. Gen. Patrick, of the Aviation Corps, is an Army officer who does other things and has other duties to perform. I think his time and attention are given up almost exclusively and would all be taken up with the work that they have with reference to Army or military aviation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I would like to inquire what is being done, if anything, in aviation in a commercial way other than the carrying of mails? Are we using flying machines at all for carrying freight? Why should the matter be put in the control of the Department of Commerce? I can not understand the reason for it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The very thing we want to do is to aid in the development of civil aviation. We do not want the Government to get into it except as may be necessary for the protection of the public. We have eliminated all provisions under which the Government might be obligated to buy landing fields, to buy machines, and all that sort of thing.

The main purpose of the bill is to see to it that machines used in interstate commerce are in good condition, are safe and well constructed, and that the pilots who operate them have the capacity to operate them properly; in other words, they must be licensed. We have nothing of that kind now except as it may have been provided for in the various States. The civil aviators who fly around over Washington City and over the District of Columbia and in the different parts of the country have no license. They do not now have to have any license. If the Senator should desire to go up in an airplane, he has no assurance either that the machine is safe or that the man who runs it knows what he is doing or how to operate the machine. The principal purpose of the bill is to lodge in a department or bureau of the Government authority to make investigation of the machines and to see that the men who propose to run them are competent to do so, and to lay down the rules of the road just as now we have rules of the road for automobiles.

Mr. OVERMAN. But it is proposed to put the matter entirely in a department that never has had anything to do with aviation and knows nothing about it. It seems to me the matter of licensing operators ought to be lodged in a department that knows something about aviation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course this is a new proposition in our country.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason why I am asking about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is an entirely new proposition. We are just starting to build up an organization that will know about it. Of course, the Army people have been trained for the development of Army machines and to operate those. That is all very true. If it is desired to take the Army people away from Army work, and take them out of the Army, that is another proposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. That would seem to me to be the way it ought to be done. It would seem to me it ought not to be turned over to a department that does not know anything about aviation. Why should we have to create a department to license these aviators? Why not have an automobile department to license chauffeurs?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Every State has just that thing. In every State it is necessary to submit to an examination before one can operate an automobile in the various States of the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why not leave it to the States to license the aviation pilots?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is the proposition. If the States would do it, probably it would be all right, but there are only four or five States which have adopted to any degree any comprehensive legislation with reference to the licensing of pilots. Some of them have. Massachusetts, Kansas, and two or three other States have done it. But it seemed to the committee that we ought to have something that would regulate those flying at any rate in interstate commerce. If we had a central organization we could adopt general rules and regulations that would then be followed by the various States.

Most of the countries of the world are doing this. At the Paris conference there was an international air navigation convention held, and they agreed upon a set of rules for the government of international aviation. Practically all of the countries that had representatives in that convention have ratified those rules, except the United States. The rules were transmitted to Congress and presented to the Senate by Mr. Knox on September 15, 1919, but we have not ratified them.

The action proposed by the pending bill is in line with that proposition for the purpose of getting the country to do something to aid in the development of this great industry. It is just in its infancy, and yet it is estimated that we have 2,200 civilian airplanes in the country to-day, and possibly 500 more that are privately owned.

There are about $40,000,000 invested in the industry; 92 different corporations contemplate going into the industry; there are over 100 manufacturing plants connected with it; and during the last 20 months it is estimated that machines have flown about 14,000,000 miles in this country.

Mr. KING. Those have been war airplanes and airplanes engaged in the Postal Service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Many of them have been discarded war machines; that is true; but we should like to see the airplane developed as an adjunct of commerce and of passenger transportation. It is being developed in other countries. While we invented the airplane, yet other countries have taken the lead. They recognize the importance of this means of transportation and communication, and they are developing it to a wonderful extent. I have put a considerable portion of the testimony with reference to this matter in the Record.

Mr. FLETCHER rose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall yield in just a moment. I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the fact that the British Government has granted a subsidy of £600,000 to be paid in three years for the development of civil aviation routes. That shows how it recognizes the importance of this industry and the steps that it is taking to develop it. Over $3,000,000 are to be spent in three years as subsidies and aids, pure and simple. We do not propose any aid. They have an air ministry over there while here it is contended we should not even provide a bureau. They not only have an air ministry but they say, "We will pay $3,000,000 in three years to encourage and aid in the development of civil aviation." Now, I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to say in reference to the subject of commercial aviation that in a recent address delivered by Mr. C. F. Redden, discussing the operations of the Air Transportation Co., he states that:

During the past year our fleet of 15 boats has flown nearly 100,000 miles. They have carried 8,614 passengers and 29,002 pounds of freight and mail, and without a single serious mishap.

This one concern, the Air Transportation Co., is operating 15 boats.

Mr. Redden continues:

Eighteen months ago we inaugurated a passenger-carrying service around New York, up and down the Sound and from New York to Atlantic City. After five months' operation we felt justified in enlarging our operative organization, and on November 1 of last year a fleet of six 11-passenger converted Navy flying boats inaugurated a daily mail and passenger service between Key West and Habana and also between Palm Beach, Miami, Bimini, and Nassau.

This is just one of the concerns which are operating boats of this kind. These boats, of course, are hydroplanes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Are they doing any considerable freight business?

Mr. FLETCHER. They have carried 29,002 pounds of mail and freight.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, "mail and freight."

Mr. FLETCHER. They carried that amount during the time specified here. The public seems to favor flying boats rather than land planes, but the land planes have not, perhaps, been given so much attention. I have not the figures before me. These are regular routes being operated in this country now, other routes have been laid out, and it is contemplated that a regular service on schedule time will be in operation within a comparatively short period, very much the same as the service between England and France and the countries in Europe. They are carrying passengers and freight and express matter and that sort of thing on regular schedules. It seems to me that we should encourage rather than hold back the development of this new science and these new opportunities for transportation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Aviation is a very interesting subject and one that ought to be pushed and inquired into, I will say to the Senator from Washington; but I inquired of him to ascertain what this bill is designed to accomplish, what its object is, and why we should establish another bureau. The Senator from Washington is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he, therefore, knows what the establishment of a governmental bureau means. It always involves the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars. We now have an aeronautical bureau in the Navy Department and we have another one in the War Department. Why should we have another bureau of aeronautics, making in all three great bureaus for this purpose? That is the point that I was about to make.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am in sympathy with the idea of the Senator from North Carolina, and I think he will bear me out that in the committee I have been consistent in my endeavors to prevent the duplication of bureaus.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; and that is why I was somewhat surprised at the Senator's present position.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I can not see the room for expansion in the Army aviation bureau or in the Navy aviation bureau, because those bureaus must confine their work to certain lines, and that work must largely be governed by officers of the Army and officers of the Navy. I do not think we have any evidence of the expansion or the growth of those bureaus, which are confined to a particular line of work and which must be so confined. There can not be any excuse for their expansion. If we should provide for their carrying on the line of aviation work proposed by the bill, they would have to expand—there is no question about that—and I have no doubt that the expense would be just as great as in the case of the bureau which it is now proposed to establish. We have started it out in a very modest sort of way. It was proposed by the bill as it was originally introduced to create a bureau with a commissioner drawing a salary of $7,500, and then an assistant commissioner, and so on. We have eliminated the assistant commissioner, we have fixed the salary of the commissioner at $6,000, and we provide only for additional employees where Congress may appropriate for them. Unless the industry develops rapidly, the bureau will not so develop; but, of course, if the industry shall develop as we really hope it will and as I am inclined to think that it will develop, then we will need a larger force, but we would need that same force in the Army or in the Navy.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator that the Army and the Navy will receive the advantages and benefits arising from this development through the civil agency?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. In addition to that, the building up of civil aviation will furnish a reserve from which the Army may draw in case of war when it is needed, whereas if we confine our efforts along this line to the Army we will not build up such a reserve. If the civil bureau shall be established we will have trained mechanics; we will have scientific methods of constructing machines, trained pilots, and all that sort of thing, in civil life, who, if the need comes in war, will be available. If we do have war it is going to be largely in the air, and there is where we need to make the preparations.

It is interesting to note what the countries on the other side of the ocean are doing. For instance, let us take Italy. I have here the Aeronautical Digest, which gives information with reference to this industry all over the world. As to Italy it says:

Italy has increased her air budget for 1921-22 to 66,000,000 lire, an advance of over 26,000,000 above the 1920-21 budget.

Some idea of the business already being done by aerial routes can be gained from the annual report of one of the 20 private companies which the Government has licensed.

They license them there.

This is the Societe Anomima Imprese Aeree of Milan, which is using both airplanes and dirigibles in its transportation business. During the first year of its existence it carried a total of 3,291 passengers without a mishap. Its total mileage for the year is over 100,000 kilometers and its entire hourage of actual flight 9,998 hours and 11 minutes.

The Digest gives an account of an exposition held in France, and says:

Twenty-six countries were represented at the first International Congress of Aerial Navigation held in connection with the Aeronautical Salon in the Grand Palais, Paris.

Here is an interesting statement which is almost unbelievable:

Breuet told of an airplane which, leaving Paris and flying at an altitude of 12,000 meters, would fly completely around the earth and return to Paris 24 hours later. The ultimate speed of machines flying at this height, he said, would be 800 meters per second, which is faster than that of an artillery projectile.

I presume we would consider that a dream. I like to fly, but I do not think I want to fly that fast. Here is the kind of machine, however, that they are developing over there already:

Paris to Buenos Aires in three days, making only five stops on the way. The cost of the journey, he said, would, roughly, correspond with that of a first-class passage to-day on an ocean liner.

Paris Exposition: The machines built for the France-Morocco line are fitted out with large sections, reminding one of a yacht cabin. They also contain a small cooking galley, lavatory, and baggage room. They are built of metal trellis work, covered with metal plates, and lined with wood. These bodies give a wonderful impression of strength and solidity. Other giant planes contain seats which can be converted into sleeping berths. There is even a toilet room.

Two, three, and four engine planes are the features of the exposition. Among these is the largest airplane ever built in France, the super-Goliath Farman, which is 22 meters long and spans more than 34 meters. The total power of its four engines is 1,500 horsepower. Weighing 10,000 kilos, this giant can carry 20 passengers in a single flight of 10 hours from Paris to Algiers.

France has gone ahead of all countries in the promotion of its commercial aviation, as shown by a statement in the Journal des Debats that during June last French air companies carried 1,553 passengers.

I think there is a misprint there; evidently there has been some mistake.

Estimates show that in 1920 French airplanes carried 5,864 passengers, as against 729 in 1919, and 124,195 kilos of merchandise were transported, an increase over the 1919 figures of 14,080 kilos. More than 1,000,000 miles were traveled by commercial planes in 1921.

The longest traffic route at present is that from Toulouse to Casablanca, Morocco, which takes about a day and a half, with a stop overnight.

The Digest gives an account of the airplane situation in the various countries there, Germany, England, and other countries. I am not sure whether the Senator from Florida referred to a statement with reference to the company that is operating from New York, but I rather think he did. I was very much surprised myself to find that we have a company in this country which is operating, as I recall, 10 passenger machines pretty regularly. They took one of these machines and started at Key West, Fla., went to New York, thence to Montreal, thence down the Mississippi, and clear around back to Key West without any mishap, a trip of 7,000 miles.

Some may say they are doing that without any legislation of this kind, and therefore why do we need any legislation? Some of course are doing it, and yet the industry is being discouraged in a way because of the fact that the Government is taking no steps to insure the safety of proper aviation. I have the testimony of one of the representatives of the manufacturing branch of the industry and I want to read what he says. I quote from Mr. Frank H. Russell, vice president of the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Corporation and secretary of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association. We asked him about accidents, and whether he had analyzed them exactly in order to be able to state the cause, and so forth, and he says:

The development of an industry depends primarily on the demand and the possibility of interesting capital. To-day I can speak feelingly with reference to this phase of it. If one discusses it with other interested business men, enthusiasts over aviation, as one does quite frequently, they ask, "How can we get into this wonderful business?" and we are forced to advise them that the time is not ripe, that there isn't the control in this country sufficient to make it a stable and safe business in which to invest their money. Our insurance companies have been more than broad in their endeavor to insure and protect planes. In fact, the Underwriters' Association has published a circular which is an attempt to so control aviation that they may insure planes. But that, after all, isn't a good control, and they haven't the facilities to carry it into effect. I do not believe we can expect that safe aviation will become an element in our transportation problems in this country until we can have some unified control of the air. There are more than 14 laws in various States of the Union to-day which are an attempt to control aviation that apparently have not been given careful study. In other words, they are not practical. There have been some 15 or 20 that have been shelved during the last two years on the promise that Congress would surely take up the question of flying control and promulgate laws which can be made universal.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] asked this question:

Do you think, Mr. Russell, with the regulation and control provided in this bill, that private enterprise will go ahead and develop the industry?

Mr. RUSSELL. Absolutely. My company builds, designs, and sells airplanes, but does not operate them, except, you might say, in an introductory way. We have been approached in the last year by two groups of capital anxious to enter into the commercial aviation field, but, as I said before, in both of these instances we have had to discourage the attempt at this time.

Senator WADSWORTH. You are afraid it might get a black eye?

Mr. RUSSELL. We know it would, sir. Flying properly done under proper control is extremely safe, and by that very statement the opposite is true. We had a little meet in Kansas City during the American Legion convention, old Army flyers mostly attending. There were 76 airplanes in that contest on an improvised field, 75 of them flying from their home ports, as one might call it, to the field. During those four days there were 60,000 miles of flying done, and with the exception of the wiping off of the landing gear of one of the racing planes there wasn't a single accident. There were over 3,000 people taken up in flights during that period. The machines flew, seven or eight of them, from New York, three or four from Chicago, some from Texas, and from all over the country. That was all done by intelligent operators with good machines.

I asked this question:

Well, doesn't that tend to show that you don't need Federal legislation to provide regulation and control?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, sir; because two days after they had a meet in Omaha and they killed a man the first afternoon and had another rather regrettable accident three or four days afterwards because of trying to fly a speed race over a course of 30 miles in which there was no landing field.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they the same fliers that were at Kansas City?

Mr. RUSSELL. Exactly the same personnel. They flew from Kansas City to Omaha.

The CHAIRMAN. They didn't act very intelligently, then, did they?

Mr. RUSSELL. They went into a contest where the prizes were tempting, and because they were near by.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think if this bill were enacted they wouldn't have entered into that contest?

Mr. RUSSELL. I believe they wouldn't have entered into the contest, because the commissioner of civil aviation would not have approved that course for a race of that kind.

And so forth.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that when we consider the nature of this means of transportation the need of some control is clear and apparent; that so far as the National Government can exercise its rights in the way of seeing that the men who run these machines are skilled and are trained to do it and that the machines are of a proper character we ought to do it. I believe that when the public is convinced of the safety of flying there will be a great increase in the patronage of these machines; that it is a kind of transportation which, if we are just satisfied that it is safe, will be very enticing and very enjoyable. I know that it is very enjoyable, as far as I am concerned. I feel safer in a good machine with a good driver than I do in an automobile going around through the streets.

So, Mr. President, the committee felt that we ought to start this matter. As I say, we did not go nearly so far as these people wanted us to go. We have restricted the authority of the Government over this subject to machines flying in interstate commerce, or over public property and public buildings. We thought we had a right to do that, and that we not only had an undoubted right to do it but that we ought to do it for the preservation of our property. Then we have recognized the rights of the States by recognizing a pilot license under the laws of the States as a pilot license to do business in interstate commerce. We felt—now, this was not in harmony with the views of those who were urging this legislation; they did not think that ought to be done—the committee felt that when this bureau is organized, and studies the question carefully, and takes into consideration the various rules that were adopted at this great international convention and congress and the various rules and regulations provided in the different countries, it will prescribe and promulgate a series of rules and regulations with reference to the licensing of pilots and the licensing of machines and the landing of machines that will be adopted by the various States of the Union, and that it will not be necessary for the National Government to extend its authority further.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In any other countries that have made considerable advances in the art of aviation is there any similar division of governmental functions with relation to aviation? I have the impression that in Great Britain, for instance, there is an air ministry that has charge of all aviation, and I have the impression also that there is something similar in France and in Germany. I think the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] had a plan of that sort; and while I opposed it at the time, for certain reasons, I believe that if the Government is to go into this thing it ought not to scatter the various aviation activities through three or four different departments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say that the Governments in several of these other countries go very much further into the business than we do. I think I asked Gen. Patrick or some one else before the committee with reference to that matter. In France, for instance, they are making these largely governmental activities. In Great Britain, as I said a moment ago, their air ministry may have charge of aviation in the Army; I am not so sure about that; but, nevertheless, they do separate and recognize the difference between Army aviation and civil aviation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, of course there is a difference, but they are all under one control.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may be true under their system of government, which is very different, too, from ours, and the Government gets more into the industries there than ours does. Then, we must recognize the fact that France, for instance, is a much smaller country than ours and not divided up into State jurisdictions, and so forth, as ours is. I do not know that they have a separate bureau.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me put a practical question to the Senator. If this is put in the Department of Commerce, will it not be necessary not only to maintain a bureau in the department here in Washington, but to have the Department of Commerce represented all over the United States wherever aviation activities occur; and does not that mean installing new Government officers there? The Army is organized practically all over the United States at present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator certainly is mistaken in regard to that. The Army does not have representatives in very many of the cities of the country, and it would certainly have to send its representatives to these different places. We have military posts at certain places, of course.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can tell the Senator differently from that. The whole country is geographically divided under the War Department into what are now called Army corps, as I recall, and each Army corps is subdivided again, and there are Army posts and Army representatives, as I say, all over the United States in one or the other of those corps or areas of subdivision. There is there already, then, something of a machinery provided, and if we put this in the Department of Commerce we will have to spread the Department of Commerce all over the United States, whereas at the present time its activities are confined very largely to Washington. The Post Office Department, which is developing a very effective transportation by air routes, is represented all over the United States. We would have to spread the Department of Commerce all over the United States, and we would be producing the very thing that we have been trying to escape—the duplication of Government activities among the various departments. Is there not some way in which the Senator can provide for the consolidation of these activities?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not see how it can be done in a practical way. If we put it under the Army, we will have to have Army inspectors all over the country and we will have to have them trained along these lines, and it seems to me that we will have to add to the Army organization. The Army, of course, has representatives in different parts of the country; but I do not think the aviation branch of the Army is represented in anything like the sections of the country that probably would have to have inspectors in order to inspect these machines and license these flyers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Did the Senator investigate the question abroad, as to whether there is any division of authority in the different departments of the Governments there over aviation? Is it not a fact that all of the foreign Governments have consolidated the control of the air in one department?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know whether that is a fact or not; but, as I look at it, it is impracticable to do it in this country. It would not save anything, either in money or in the multiplication of employees.

The committee recognized that there will have to be some inspectors of the Department of Commerce in various sections of the country to inspect these machines; but by the terms of the bill we have limited that to a very great extent. Under the bill as originally introduced inspections could be made of these machines at any time that the department saw fit to do it. We have limited their inspections, really, to about the first time the machine flies—one inspection. Personally, I believe that there should be more than one inspection; but we thought that for a while, at any rate, until we could see how the industry developed, we would not put it so that there could be a great multiplication of inspectors throughout the country, and we thought that a very limited number would be sufficient to make the inspection of the machines that are presented for inspection in order to engage in interstate commerce. Of course, we shall not need very many at the start. If this industry should develop in this country as we hope it will with proper encouragement, then it will require more inspectors, just as we have to have inspectors for the Steamboat-Inspection Service. They are Department of Commerce officials. Congress may provide, or it might provide later on, that steamboat inspectors shall be trained also in the science of aviation and in the art of flying, and so forth, so that they can act as inspectors of machines. That is just as practicable as it would be to have the Army do it. I doubt if that is practicable, so far as that is concerned. I do not think we ought to require all steamboat inspectors to be trained so that they can handle airplanes, because I think that would be more expensive than the system we have provided in this bill.

Mr. President, I do not know that there is anything more that I can say. As I said a while ago, I do not pretend to know very much about military organizations or military matters; but looking at it just in a practical way—and I do not want to reflect upon anybody—looking at it from the layman's standpoint and from what I should say is the common-sense standpoint, it does seem to me that we ought to deal with civil aviation and we must deal with civil aviation in a different way from that in which the Army deals with the machines that it is trying to develop as a purely military instrument of the Government. Of course, if the Congress should want to put this activity under the Army it can do it, and if we are not going to take any steps at all except that, let us do that; but I think it would be extremely impracticable.

Mr. President, the possibilities for the development of this industry are very great in this country. The essential thing, as Mr. Russell says here, is to convince the public that flying is safe, that it is carried on properly, and in order to convince the public that it is safe we can show them that the machines are safe and well constructed, and that the men who are running them are competent, careful, and well qualified to do it, and they will then have confidence in it.

I do not know whether anyone desires to go on further tonight, but I would like to have some formal amendments adopted.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator one amendment which I shall offer to-morrow. It is to strike out "$6,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,000," as the salary of the commissioner of aeronautics.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That, of course, is a proper amendment. The bureau in charge of aeronautics in the Navy is called a bureau of aeronautics, and I think we should put the word "civil" before the word "aeronautics" in this bill, so as to create a bureau of civil aeronautics. Therefore I propose to amend by inserting the word "civil" before the word "aeronautics" wherever it is found in the bill.

Mr. KING. And also in the title of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We would have to amend the title, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendments proposed by the committee are a mere transfer of a clause inadvertently put in on page 2, when it should have been inserted under section 12. So I ask that the committee amendment striking out the words on page 2 and inserting those words on page 7 may be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 10, after the word "jurisdiction," strike out the words "except in conformity with the provisions of this act and such rules and regulations as may be promulgated pursuant thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in section 12, on page 7, line 20, after the word "commerce," to insert "except in conformity with the provisions of this act and such rules and regulations as may be promulgated pursuant thereto," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. That it shall be unlawful to use any civil aircraft in commerce except in conformity with the provisions of this act and such rules and regulations as may be promulgated pursuant thereto.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator from Washington that I shall oppose that amendment, in connection with some other provisions, upon the ground that it is committing to the Secretary of Commerce, I will not say legislative powers, but the authority to define crimes and misdemeanors by departmental regulations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would suggest, then, that the better course would be to strike out that authority, which is contained in other parts of the bill.

Mr. KING. I felt that it was fair to the Senator to state my position.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 5, line 20, after the word "corporations," the word "of" should be changed to "or." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 3, in line 14, the words "interstate and foreign" should be stricken out before "commerce." That will make it harmonize with other parts of the bill. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to amend by inserting the word "civil" before the word "aeronautics" on page 1, line 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to amend by inserting the word "civil" before the word "aeronautics" on page 2, line 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to amend by inserting the word "civil" before the word "aeronautics" on page 3, line 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to amend by inserting the word "civil" before the word "aeronautics" on page 4, line 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 4, line 23, after the word "section," I move to strike out the numeral "2" and to insert in lieu thereof the numeral "3."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 5, line 3, I move to insert the word "Civil" before the word "Aeronautics."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 6, line 6, I move to insert the word "Civil" before the word "Aeronautics."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 6, line 20, I move to insert the word "Civil" before the word "Aeronautics."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 8, line 22, after the word "that," I move to insert the words "the Secretary of War" and a comma, so as to read:

That for the purpose of encouraging the development of civil aviation in the United States, full cooperation shall be given by the Secretary of Commerce to the owners or operators of civil aircraft, and that the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 9, line 13, I move to amend by inserting the word "Civil" before the word "Aeronautics."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I understand that an executive session is desired. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate, pursuant to the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 14, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 13, 1922.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR CHINA.

Leonard G. Husar, of California, to be district attorney of the United States court for China.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Edward P. Gorman, of Wausau, Wis., to be register of the land office at Wausau, Wis., effective upon completion of consolidation under the act of October 28, 1921.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

John E. Hurst to be postmaster at Leeds, Ala., in place of H. T. Caffey, resigned.

ARKANSAS.

John A. Davis to be postmaster at Hope, Ark., in place of D. B. Thompson. Incumbent's commission expired August 6, 1921.

CALIFORNIA.

Frank F. Smith to be postmaster at Oilcenter, Calif. Office became presidential October 1, 1921.

William H. Hitchcock to be postmaster at Shafter, Calif. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Mary L. Cogan to be postmaster at Santa Margarita, Calif. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Mae C. Lodge to be postmaster at Auberry, Calif. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

COLORADO.

Frank S. Lucas to be postmaster at Clifton, Colo. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Grace Conard to be postmaster at Olney Springs, Colo., in place of G. L. Johnson. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

DELAWARE.

Edward H. Naylor to be postmaster at New Castle, Del., in place of J. P. Murphy. Incumbent's commission expired October 5, 1921.

FLORIDA.

Orrell W. Prevatt to be postmaster at Seville, Fla. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Robert L. Waldron to be postmaster at Pompano, Fla. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Vilma B. Rhodes to be postmaster at Oakland, Fla. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Clayton P. Bishop to be postmaster at Eustis, Fla., in place of G. J. Dykes. Incumbent's commission expired January 31, 1920.

ILLINOIS.

Delta C. Lowe to be postmaster at Mason City, Ill., in place of T. N. Sutton, resigned.

Lillian M. Dilg to be postmaster at Morton Grove, Ill. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Lacey D. Irwin to be postmaster at Kane, Ill. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

William A. Kelly to be postmaster at West Frankfort, Ill., in place of N. V. Greathours, resigned.

Ora C. Baiar to be postmaster at Johnston City, Ill., in place of W. E. Clayton, resigned.

Eber E. Bassett to be postmaster at West McHenry, Ill., in place of E. E. Bassett. Incumbent's commission expired September 25, 1921.

Charles F. Gard to be postmaster at Meredosia, Ill., in place of C. H. James. Appointee failed to qualify.

INDIANA.

Ben H. Sink to be postmaster at Jasonville, Ind., in place of M. A. Thomas, resigned.

Charles E. Combs to be postmaster at Bloomfield, Ind., in place of G. E. Endres, resigned.

Maude E. Mitchell to be postmaster at Ellettsville, Ind. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Moody L. Katter to be postmaster at Huntingburg, Ind., in place of B. W. Pickhardt, resigned.

Arthur F. Saylor to be postmaster at New Paris, Ind. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Lorinda Guy to be postmaster at Etna Green, Ind. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Elisha A. McGinnis to be postmaster at Clayton, Ind., in place of F. L. Allen, resigned.

IOWA.

Ira S. Hogate to be postmaster at Tracy, Iowa. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Christa A. Hendrix to be postmaster at Silver City, Iowa. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Walter H. Vance to be postmaster at Winterset, Iowa, in place of Arthur Goshorn. Incumbent's commission expired August 7, 1921.

Harold H. Hubbard to be postmaster at Rockford, Iowa, in place of C. E. Dawson. Incumbent's commission expired June 1, 1920.

Raymond W. Rhoades to be postmaster at Glenwood, Iowa, in place of W. H. Fickel. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1922.

KANSAS.

Elmer E. Haynes to be postmaster at Madison, Kans., in place of Ella Braddock, resigned.

E. Ervin Townsden to be postmaster at Hugoton, Kans., in place of D. F. Derrick, resigned.

KENTUCKY.

Courtney G. Kelly to be postmaster at Burlington, Ky. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Walter Robins to be postmaster at Brodhead, Ky. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Lola B. Hollaway to be postmaster at Sedalia, Ky. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

William I. Myers to be postmaster at Greenup, Ky., in place of E. D. Taylor. Incumbent's commission expired August 30, 1920.

Raymond C. Tipton to be postmaster at Corbin, Ky., in place of J. J. Hagan, resigned.

LOUISIANA.

Goldman L. Lassalle to be postmaster at Opelousas, La., in place of J. P. Trosclair, resigned.

MAINE.

Alonzo F. Flint to be postmaster at West Buxton, Me. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Leon M. Small to be postmaster at Ridlonville, Me. Office became presidential July 1, 1920.

Henry W. Bowen to be postmaster at Chebeague Island, Me. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

MARYLAND.

Jacob C. Stiffler to be postmaster at Parkton, Md. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Helen M. Bishop to be postmaster at Monkton, Md. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Charles K. Houghton to be postmaster at Littleton Common, Mass. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

MICHIGAN.

Herbert O'Connor to be postmaster at Holton, Mich. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Clyde C. Buttrick to be postmaster at Ada, Mich. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

MINNESOTA.

William Pennar to be postmaster at Laporte, Minn. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Clarence D. Maxey to be postmaster at Backus, Minn. Office became presidential October 1, 1920.

Edward L. Barstow to be postmaster at Barum, Minn., in place of Martin Christensen. Incumbent's commission expired August 7, 1921.

Joseph Groebner to be postmaster at Wabasso, Minn., in place of Joseph Groebner. Incumbent's commission expired March 16, 1921.

MISSISSIPPI.

Hammond H. Hinton to be postmaster at Lumberton, Miss., in place of Nellie Lide, resigned.

Henry L. Rhodes to be postmaster at Ackerman, Miss., in place of Marshall Spiva. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

Edward M. Fant to be postmaster at Coahoma, Miss. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Dora McCurley to be postmaster at Stephenson, Miss. Office became presidential April 1, 1920.

Henry Boswell to be postmaster at Sanatorium, Miss. Office became presidential July 1, 1921.

Lottie S. Smith to be postmaster at Pittsboro, Miss. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

Georgia A. McCuen to be postmaster at Brookville, Miss., in place of J. H. Allgood. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1920.

Fred E. Brister to be postmaster at Bogue Chitto, Miss., in place of M. A. Womack. Incumbent's commission expired May 15, 1920.

William X. Casanova to be postmaster at Logtown, Miss. Office became presidential April 1, 1921.

Monroe L. Lott to be postmaster at Sumrall, Miss., in place of M. L. Lott. Incumbent's commission expired July 21, 1921.

George H. Holley to be postmaster at Booneville, Miss., in place of E. W. Walton, deceased.

MISSOURI.

Herbert H. A. Redeker to be postmaster at Morrison, Mo. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

William H. Lerbs to be postmaster at Berger, Mo. Office became presidential January 1, 1921.

John A. Jones to be postmaster at Marshall, Mo., in place of C. B. Bacon. Incumbent's commission expired July 25, 1921.

Oliver M. Silsby to be postmaster at Flat River, Mo., in place of J. L. Johnson. Incumbent's commission expired July 25, 1921.

William S. Tabler to be postmaster at Jasper, Mo., in place of T. B. Hardaway. Incumbent's commission expired July 25, 1921.

Alfred G. Neville to be postmaster at Eldon, Mo., in place of A. P. Beazley, resigned.

Colmore Gray to be postmaster at Billings, Mo., in place of W. L. Hixson, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 13, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy! Holy! Holy! Lord God Almighty, we come to Thee with humble confidence, which is inspired by Thy unfailling goodness. How amazingly free is Thy bountiful nature. Continue with us, blessed Lord, that we may rise to the highest plane of life where all lower feelings cease to rule. We would accept our duties and discipline with gratitude and cheerfulness. Teach us how to use the world with wisdom and how to convert all things to the help and honor of our fellow men. May there be essential unity of high purpose throughout our land and the blessing of peace in all the earth. In the adorable name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 11, 1922, was read and approved.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The SPEAKER. By special order the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has been granted leave to address the House for 40 minutes on this day. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it would be difficult, if not impossible, at this time to present any new facts with reference to the great man whose birth we this day commemorate; but I have indulged the hope that I may present certain features of his career to some extent in a new light. My theme is:

LINCOLN—THE MARVELOUS MAN.

Long years have passed since organized government first came into existence. Since then, in the procession of the centuries, kings and queens, potentates and presidents, statesmen and heroes, have marched down the aisle of time. What a gorgeous panorama it makes. We can picture how the banners waved, how the cheers resounded, what noble figures appeared. The pages of history glow with accounts of the great deeds of warriors and generals. Volume after volume has been written of the exploits of Alexander, of Caesar, Frederick the Great, and Napoleon. Until the middle of the nineteenth century had passed no man who had not commanded an army in battle could be said to have changed the destiny of any important nation or left an enduring world-wide fame. The world worshipped a conqueror. The blood-stained trail of wreck, ruin, and misery that they left behind them did not seem to dim their glory or to lessen the admiration in which they were held. Cold, selfish, and cruel as most of them were, it seemed to be considered that great men were not to be bound by the rules that applied to the masses, that greatness was inconsistent with the gentler virtues, and mankind could only be controlled by an iron hand guided by a relentless brain.

But the world fortunately for its people has come to see a new light. The dawn of freedom was breaking when our Nation was born and our Constitution adopted. The full day was not to come until more than half a century later, and after the bloody tide of a civil war had swept away the last vestige of slavery. In the new light there arose the figure of a civilian, without high ancestry, without military glory, born of the common people, and rightfully claimed as their own.

How was it that a man who never won a battle should have so eclipsed the deeds of these warriors and conquerors? How was it that his name became a household word in earth's farthest zones? How was it that he was able to recreate a Nation that seemed ready to dissolve into warring fragments, and build of antagonistic forces a State that has become not only the most powerful but the most prosperous the world has ever known? How was it that an awkward, ungainly boy brought up on the frontiers, uneducated, with no friends other than those he made himself, became the most renowned statesman of his time? Was he also a conqueror? I answer, "Yes," and that his victories were greater than theirs because his were won against greater odds and he was matched against more formidable opponents.

If, as I believe, a man's greatness is to be measured in a large part by the obstacles he has overcome, then we can say none had more to meet than Lincoln. His early life was a contest, his last years a desperate struggle against adverse circumstances. His end a triumph over all.

Born in so wretched a cabin that it barely furnished roof and sides, he saw little but toil and hardship in his early life; but poverty and lack of schools could not prevent his obtaining an education. With the aid of his mother he learned to read by the flickering firelight of the hearth or the blaze of a bunch of twigs. Nothing was more difficult in the frontier community in which his boyhood days were passed than to obtain a book or an opportunity to read and study. He had, however, the Bible and Shakespeare, and in some way he found others. Somehow he managed to find time to read and study them, although the day's work lasted, as a rule, from dawn until dark. When opportunity afforded he practiced speaking on his companions, and very early became a fluent and ready speaker on all occasions. With a few but great books at his command he acquired a style, limpid in its clearness, which was all his own.

Although you have all heard it before, listen again to this letter written to a mother:

DEAR MAM: I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the adjutant general of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any words of mine which should attempt to beguile you from a loss so overwhelming, but I can not refrain from tendering you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of a Republic that they died to save. I pray that our heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and the lost and the solemn pride in having laid so costly a sacrifice on the altar of freedom.

Yours, very sincerely and respectfully,

A. LINCOLN.

Is it any wonder that in classic Oxford College, of old England, this was pronounced the finest example of pure English that has ever been written? It shows better than any words of mine could explain the remarkable faculty Lincoln had for making a moving appeal to the people. Speaking or writing, with the hand of a master he touched their very heartstrings and attuned their minds in accord with his own. Further on I shall undertake to show how much this contributed to his winning and holding their confidence and support.

It is easy to see why the world has loved him. The common people knew well that he was one of them not only when he wielded the ax as a rail splitter, but as well in the stately mansion which the people of this country had provided for their Chief Magistrate. He rose from the position of common laborer to the Presidency of one of the greatest and most powerful nations of the world. Yet at the summit of his power and fame he looked down on no one. The humblest of the humble he met as an equal. He not only never forgot that he was one of the common people, but he always remained one of them, and they in turn never forgot him. "God," he said, "must have loved the common people for he made so many of them."

The people knew that he had experienced all which the poorest among them had to contend against. He knew them because he knew what they had suffered and endured. They felt, and rightfully felt, that they understood him and he understood them. No man was ever at the head of this Government who could so clearly read the minds of the people as Lincoln. No one ever spoke to them whom they were so ready to follow, because they regarded him as both a friend and guide.

The hardships and privations which he endured have also been undergone by many successful men, but none have so completely triumphed over them. Some under such circumstances have become harsh and embittered, others self-willed and unyielding, and most imperious, selfish, or dictatorial. The ordeal not only left Lincoln unscathed, but a kindlier, sweeter nature than his never breathed. All through his life his great joy was in doing some kindness to another, especially to the poor, the friendless, and the helpless. His mind was utterly devoid of rancor. His whole record may be searched without finding he ever uttered or wrote a malicious word. Truly he could say, as he once said, that he had never willingly planted a thorn in any man's bosom. Hatred he would not cherish, even though it was well deserved. Indeed, his most serious faults and errors arose because he was unwilling to believe evil in others and because he always looked upon misconduct with leniency. The world has long ago forgotten and now does not want to hear of any mistakes in his public life that arose from this cause. It cares not that he appointed some unworthy men and that graft and greed sometimes went unpunished or, at least, unchecked during his administration. But all of us love to dwell on his kindness to his mother, his thoughtfulness for his friends, and how, in the midst of the burdens of state, he found time to go and sit beside a dying soldier, holding his hand, comforting and steadying him as he passed into the Great Beyond.

The long death roll of the battles which he urged his generals to fight saddened him inexpressibly. The disasters to the Union armies which at one time made their cause seem lost pressed upon him as a crushing burden. Yet he would rise in the middle of the night to pardon some boy soldier who incurred the death penalty by sleeping at his post. All through the war he was surrounded by men who talked bitterly of revenge upon the enemy, of hanging and shooting the leaders of the Confederacy, but in his mind there was never a thought of vengeance, much less a feeling of hatred against them. His first thought when war closed was to bind the wounds of the conflict and heal the animosities which it had created. I know of no other man who after taking a leading part in a long and deadly conflict that ended in the utter defeat and surrender of the other side ever succeeded in gaining the affections of friend and foe alike.

His mind was too broad to cherish resentment even against those who had intentionally done him an injury, and when the public service was involved he never gave their action a thought. Stanton had, as Lincoln himself said, treated him most brutally. The future Secretary of War in an important lawsuit had contemptuously ignored him and deprived him of the privilege of an associate counsel. Yet he made Stanton a member of his Cabinet when the country needed a man of energy, ability, and firmness in that position. Chase plotted against him in the Cabinet and out, hoping to displace him as President, but he gave Chase the highest honor in his power in the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. So also when Greeley in his newspaper severely criticized him, first for not pressing the war with sufficient energy and then later for not making peace, he referred to him in writing a letter as "an old friend whose heart was right."

Long before he was known nationally Lincoln had entered politics and early in life became a prominent political leader in his own State. Indeed, it would have been difficult for him to have kept out of politics if he had tried. In a local way he soon accumulated enthusiastic friends and faithful followers. His pleasing manner, the strength of his character, his absolute rectitude, his powers as a stump speaker made it unnecessary that he should seek office. Opportunities to be a candidate were thrust upon him. But he wished to be a leader, not merely a follower, and his ambition, for he was ambitious, looked beyond the boundaries of his own State. His opportunity came in his contest with Douglas for the Senatorship, and it was to apply to him a crucial test.

Success in this contest would have made him easily the leader of his party in his State, and as Douglas was already one of the most prominent of our public men, a victory must have seemed to Lincoln like a stepping-stone to the Presidency. Yet he must have known before his friends told him, and they did not hesitate to tell him, that the course he was taking would lead to his defeat.

Douglas, if elected Senator, was certain to be a presidential candidate. Much credit has been given Lincoln for the shrewdness of a question which he propounded to Douglas in the debates which ensued. The question was a shrewd one, indeed. It obliged Douglas to take a position which, while it would win for him the senatorship, Lincoln's farseeing judgment foretold would lose his opponent the Presidency. Great honor, and deserved honor, has been given Lincoln for surrendering his chances for the senatorship, but there was far more to the situation than this. It seems not to have been observed that he was also giving up his hopes, and probably ruining his opportunity to be a presidential candidate. The expected answer would defeat Lincoln in the senatorial contest, and defeated candidates seldom come back with success. In the ordinary course of events his prestige would be injured, his following discouraged, his organization broken. What hope could there be under the circumstances that he would be selected to lead his party to victory? In truth there was none. Nothing but a most unexpected turn in fortune's wheel led to his subsequent nomination for President. Lincoln deliberately waved aside the glittering prize of the Presidency for the sake of the cause to which he had devoted himself.

As we look back and survey his position and its surroundings we see how natural it would have been to say that he had already done enough, and how easy it would have been to persuade himself that he could do more for his party and the cause as a victorious Senator than as a defeated candidate. In attacking slavery he was striking at an institution that had its roots firmly embedded in the Constitution itself. He had to contend not only against the power of its natural supporters but against the fears of those who dreaded a conflict and expected that the contest would end in an unsuccessful war, with the country split into antagonistic parts whose hatred for each other would never cease. Others of no mean ability had given up the struggle in despair and hoped at best only for a peaceful separation. I do not say that this was the turning point in Lincoln's career, for this marvelous man never turned. Always and ever, with unfaltering step his feet trod the narrow and straight path of duty. For the sake of the ultimate triumph of his cause, he was ready at all times to efface himself. "Think not of me," he said in one of his speeches; "think not of the political fortunes of any man." Noble words that came from the heart. Few men could have said them sincerely, but in all of the many accusations that were made against him even in the trying days of the war, no one ever said that he was insincere, dishonest, or tricky, and no one would have believed it if it had been said.

No element contributed more to Lincoln's early rise than his capacity as a public speaker. His ability in this respect was recognized, but probably there were few people who heard him speak that thought of him as an orator. Yet he was incomparably the greatest orator of his day and one of the greatest of all time. The so-called lost speech and the famous Gettysburg oration show this. The first was made at an early political convention in Illinois and not reported, except by the memory of a hearer. Its very existence was unknown to all but a few, but it made a profound impression on those who heard it. The style of his speeches seemed so easy and natural that the audiences did not comprehend the heights to which he had risen nor how far he had carried them.

Lincoln had no use for the tricks of oratory or the mouthings of an actor. What he sought was not a fine delivery or harmonious diction, but above all the clear expression of sound thought. He did not, we must admit, possess the fiery eloquence of Demosthenes, the lofty declamation of Cicero, the impassioned fervor of Pitt, or the noble dignity in appearance and words alike that characterized Webster. But in a simplicity that was at once virile and beautiful, and a logic that was irresistible, he was the superior of them all. He never used big words, unlike most of us who are unable to express ourselves without them. He sought to carry conviction to his audience rather than to obtain admiration for himself, and thus while all the effect of oratory was obtained the audience neither heard nor saw its accompaniments.

His Gettysburg speech was delivered to an audience that had just listened to Edward Everett. Everett was one of the most prominent orators of the country, and had been selected as the principal speaker of the occasion. His address was correct in form and beautifully phrased, so the chronicles state, but compared with that of Lincoln it was like some polished statue of marble, which moves not and is cold and lifeless to the touch, while Lincoln's was the living, breathing oracle, whose words though plain and simple expressed thoughts so high and noble that the world will never let them die. Who reads or remembers now a word that Everett spoke? Who that has heard can ever forget what Lincoln said? [Applause.]

Lincoln had one habit which, so far as I can learn, no other man occupying a similar place possessed. As a rule men in public life avoid, so far as possible, expressing in writing their opinions on questions of state, accompanied by their reasons for their position. With some this is because of timidity and irresolution, with others because they fear lest the writing may not accurately state their views; but Lincoln was ready on all occasions to state in black and white his policy on any question, giving his reasons, and leave it to his critics to answer them. In almost any other man this would have been fatal, but when Lincoln stated a proposition it was unanswerable. At times when he was meeting with the most trying opposition he would record his views in memoranda that he left behind him. Thus he appealed from the hasty opinion of his contemporaries to the sober judgment of posterity. It is sufficient to say that time has justified him.

No mere orator, however great, could have saved the country from dissolution. It was almost an accomplished fact when Lincoln was inaugurated as President. His task was not merely to prevent the States from dividing. The Nation had already fallen apart. Before him over all the Southland floated the banners of organized revolt. Behind him in the North the States were full of open sympathizers with those who defied the Government, and some of these sympathizers were scarcely less defiant than those in actual revolt. Discord filled the North with its clamor. Some wanted to negotiate. Others, like Greeley, thought the rift between the States could never be closed, and would have bid the seceding States to go in peace. The strongest knew not what to do, and the weaker feared to do anything, but the genius of the statesman rose above the wavering counsel and the faltering courage of his advisors. He saw that the rallying cry must be the Union and the Constitution; that a government that could not control its forts and arsenals wherever they were located could not command respect, and when once its flag was raised, if it was then fired upon thousands would rush to its support. The story of the attack on Fort Sumter and the rising of the North that followed vindicated his judgment.

We are accustomed, as we look back upon those trying days, to view his career as if he had possessed from the beginning of his administration the unquestioned leadership that he had acquired at his death. Had he possessed it his task would have been most difficult, his burdens too heavy for the shoulders of any ordinary man. Unfortunately, he did not possess it. On the contrary, during his lifetime his creative genius and power of command were little realized. The fulsome praise which many of our Presidents have received during their administrations, from the press, in legislative halls, and on the platform, was unknown to him. Even among those who were aligned with him, many high in education, culture, and position, could see only his awkward form and hear only the humorous stories with which he pointed a moral or clinched an argument. To them he seemed to have the mind of a jester and the methods of a minor politician. They could understand why he was popular with the masses, but they thought he had only touched the hearts of the people, and could not believe that he had molded their minds. They knew that he had in his Cabinet and around him men of great force and ability. Whatever success had been obtained, they thought was due to these men. Whatever failure had resulted, they considered was owing to his rejection of their counsel. In short, they believed that these men controlled Lincoln. The real truth was, as we now know, that he controlled them.

Chittenden, at one time his private secretary, kept a diary, and subsequently wrote "Memories" of the great leader whom he served. In them he records: "Had I known at the time how great a man Lincoln was I could have written far more details about him than I did." This gives us the common view of that time. The qualities which so endeared him to the people were easy to be seen, but there were many around him who refused to acknowledge that he was anything beyond the ordinary. I do not need to say to the Members of this House whom I am now addressing that the most insidious method of injuring a public man and perhaps the hardest attack to meet is that of belittling him. At the time Lincoln was first elected he was literally "damned with faint praise." He was honest, the public press said, and well-intentioned, but the implication was that he was nothing more.

Among those who at first failed to see the latent powers of the man were members of his own Cabinet. Seward, Chase, and Stanton have left behind in their notes and letters evidences that each had come into the Cabinet with the idea that he was to be the controlling force and that through him alone the country was to be saved. Indeed, no distracted country in its hour of peril had so many self-constituted saviors. The spirit even reached some prominent generals, who were subsequently retired for incompetency or failure. One of them insolently wrote Lincoln that he had done his best to destroy the Army which that general commanded, and another declared that what the country needed was a dictator instead of a weak man. The general evidently considered that he should be the dictator and he plainly meant that the President was a weak man. But I do not wish to belittle Seward, Chase, or Stanton. They were all strong, masterful men. They had been accustomed to lead and direct and not to follow. In another time they might have been called great, and it is only fair to say that each rendered great service to the country. Their services ought not to be forgotten because they are now overshadowed by the marvelous man who stood above them. But it is a blot upon their record, and especially upon that of Chase, that they seemed to give encouragement to the numerous legion of those in the North who sought to thwart the purposes of Lincoln.

No President was ever so reviled. He was denounced as a tyrant and even ridiculed as an imbecile. He was beset with impossible demands and threatened with dire consequences if he refused to grant them. His picture was torn down and stamped upon. His figure was hung in effigy. Caricature and lampoon alike were exhausted to defame him. He met the storm of assault and criticism as some granite cliff resists the ceaseless beating of the ocean waves and never swerved from his course. If all of these assaults had been made only by those who had from the first opposed his election and his administration, and he had met with the support that he had a right to expect, we could understand how he could bear up against them, but as we look back upon the scene we are utterly bewildered to find that so large a portion of the obstacles that were spread in his path he met in the house of those who ranked as his friends. The members of his Cabinet not only quarreled among themselves, but would have quarreled with him had it been possible for a man to have done so. Again and again Seward and Chase tendered their resignations, and over and over Stanton threatened to resign. Even prominent Senators of his own party, like Henry Winter Davis and Wade, did not hesitate to join those who, like curs, snapped at his heels. Because Lincoln did not approve a plan of reconstruction which they advocated and which he thought—and everyone now agrees rightly thought—was unconstitutional, they issued a manifesto in which he was charged with perverting the Constitution, accused of usurping powers that did not belong to him, censured and ridiculed for the reasons he gave, and which even insinuated that he was actuated by the lowest personal motives. Later, after his renomination, Wade actually instigated a movement to force him to withdraw from the ticket and in this action seems to have had the support of Sumner. Finally, as the campaign for his reelection began, a number of the so-called radical element of the North drew apart and nominated Gen. Fremont for President with the avowed purpose of defeating Lincoln in the election.

When attacked by men like Davis and Wade and abandoned by men like Sumner, with the members of his own Cabinet ready to desert him, and lifelong and faithful friends like Swett giving up in despair, it is not strange that about three months before the election Lincoln himself lost hope and in a memorandum wrote: "It seems exceedingly probable that this administration will not be elected." But even he, for once, had misjudged the people. They had unlimited confidence in his rugged honesty, and his wonderful power of clear expression carried to them his real purpose through all this storm cloud of defamation. His unerring instinct or genius, whichever it may be called, had pointed out the true course which must be followed. It seemed impossible for any man to successfully resist these attacks and unite all these discordant elements, yet Lincoln did, and finally was unanimously nominated and overwhelmingly reelected.

Then, too, he had another remarkable quality. Consistency is perhaps not the brightest jewel in a statesman's crown. It is better to change when wrong than to be forever in error, but it is better, far better, that a leader should be right in the first instance than that he should be compelled to reverse himself and be dragged back into the proper course by the logic of events. Even in the dark days of the war, when for months and months and year after year a single false step meant ruin, this marvelous man never varied his policy, never changed a principle, never misjudged the needs of the hour, never so much as thought of shaping his course for his own political interests. [Applause.]

At last the end came. The roar of battle died away. The last shot between the combatants was fired—the last we trust and fervently pray that will ever be fired in fratricidal strife. [Applause.] But not for him. He was permitted only to see the accomplishment of his great desire and not the full fruition of his hopes. He died at the moment of his triumph, when every obstacle had been overcome, when every doubter and detractor had been forever silenced, and only cheers and rejoicings greeted his ears. The Nation wept with a sorrow indescribable, but even then did not know fully what it had lost. For this was needed the opening of secret archives and a calm study of his life in the unflinching light of history. At the expiration of more than half a century since he departed we can justly appraise the wonderful sagacity, the enduring strength, and the marvelous intellect of this orator, seer, and statesman who preserved this country from dissolution to occupy its present proud position as leader of the nations of the world. Truly may we say that he was one of the few who turned the tides of time.

After the assassin's bullet had struck him down, as the last glimmer of life flickered and went out, Stanton, standing by his side, said, "Now he belongs to the ages." Yes, forever to the eternal ages; for though dead he yet speaketh—to give the worker hope, the statesman courage, and the patriot fortitude, from the great soul of a lover of all mankind. [Prolonged applause.]

MONEY FOR PAYMENT OF SOLDIERS' BONUS.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MacGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, various proposals have been made as to the method of securing the money necessary for the payment of the bonus to the soldiers. Justice to the ex-service men demands that we pass a bonus bill. I feel that a majority of the people of my district think that there was an unjust discrimination as between the boys of our Army and Navy who served our country at a small wage and those who remained at home and reaped a golden harvest from war activities.

The necessary funds could be readily obtained by permitting the manufacture and sale of beer and wine and imposing a revenue tax. From this source abundance of money could be obtained that would be cheerfully paid by millions of our citizens.

I believe that the adoption of the prohibition amendment was detrimental to the best interests of the Nation. First. It has deprived the people of the United States of their inherent right of liberty.

Second. It has made a Nation of hypocrites.

Third. It has made lawbreaking popular.

Fourth. It has created a state of rebellion among millions of our citizens.

Fifth. It has destroyed the sacredness of law.

Sixth. It has resulted in the moral degeneration of our people.

Seventh. It has made a whisky-drinking Nation.

Eighth. It has brought corruption in public office.

Ninth. One of the complaints against George III set forth in the Declaration of Independence was:

He has erected a multitude of new offices and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat of their substance.

Our Government is now doing what our founders fought against.

Tenth. It has established a spy system in our country.

Eleventh. It has debauched our youth.

Twelfth. It has made bootlegging a respectable business.

Thirteenth. It has given special privileges to the rich, who can afford to buy liquors to entertain their prohibition friends.

Fourteenth. It has taken away the harmless glass of beer from the workingman and the light wine from those long accustomed to it.

Fifteenth. It has subjected legitimate business to the whims, caprice, and arrogance of Government officials.

Sixteenth. It has increased taxation.

Seventeenth. It has brought in its train all manner of petty grafting.

Eighteenth. It has brought destruction to human life in its wake.

Nineteenth. It has weakened the very foundations of our Government.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MacGREGOR. I can not yield. The prohibition amendment should be repealed, but in the meantime the demand of a large portion of our people for a reasonable latitude in the matter of the manufacture and sale of beer and light wines must be heeded. The time for the exercise of some degree of common sense is here, and we should act now to restore to the people of the land the liberty which they have been denied; act now to free the land from a horde of spies and snoopers; act now to bring peace and contentment to a people in almost open rebellion; act now to take away the source of corruption in public office that is bringing disgrace upon the Nation; act now to do away with the discrimination between the rich and the poor; act now to remove the cause of the saturnalia of crime, disorder, and disregard of law, the news of which fills the pages of our daily newspapers, congests our courts, and brings the blush of shame to the cheek of every honest American citizen. The time to act is now—to do justice to the service men and to restore liberty to our people.

MR. JOSEPH G. CANNON.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute on a matter that will provoke no controversy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, one year ago to-day—or perhaps it is two—we had the pleasure of having read to the House upon Lincoln's birthday the Gettysburg address by our beloved and honorable colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON. I am sure that the House will learn with keen regret, tinged with sorrow, that he has announced he will not be a candidate for renomination and reelection to this House.

It is not given to many men, Mr. Speaker, to have served their country for nearly a half century in its legislative halls, and for several years prior to that in other public positions. I am sure that the regret of the House will be shared by the country at large that he has seen fit to lay down his duties as a public servant, and that I voice the sentiments of all who are serving with him in this Congress, and of all who have heretofore served with him in the Congress of the United States, in expressing to him the wish and the hope that when he lays down the cares of office he may have many years of comfort, peace, contentment, and happiness. [Prolonged applause.]

DECLARING LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY A LEGAL HOLIDAY.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, this is District of Columbia day, and I call up the bill H. R. 2310, to declare Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this bill should be on the Union Calendar, and therefore refers it to the Union Calendar.

Mr. FOCHT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2310, to declare Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2310, with Mr. STAFFORD in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2310) to declare Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday.

Be it enacted, etc., That the 12th day of February in each year, being the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, is hereby made a legal holiday within the District of Columbia, to be known as Lincoln's Birthday, and in its observance and effect it shall be subject to all provisions of law applicable to holidays within said District.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested that instead of making a speech on this question, after nearly all the States of the Union have set apart a day as a holiday to celebrate the exalted memory of Abraham Lincoln, the chairman of the committee call for the previous question on the bill, which I do. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. No other gentleman desiring to discuss the bill under general debate, the bill is now open for amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. FOCHT. I will yield.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman estimated what this measure will cost the Government? I notice this is to be restricted to the District of Columbia. Granting that it is a proper and fitting thing to do in honor of Lincoln's birthday, I would like to know what it is going to cost the people at large as the result of the cessation of Government activities?

Mr. FOCHT. On the theory that a holiday gives rest and renewed energy, renewed enthusiasm—above dollars and cents—it will not cost anything, but even if it did, that would be subordinate to the exalted purpose of having this holiday dedicated to the memory of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think if we allowed the holiday to be two days in length that would make up for the loss that may arise—

Mr. FOCHT. That would be a dissipation of time. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WALSH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 9981. An act making appropriations for the Executive and for sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9931) extending the time for completing the construction of a bridge over the Delaware River.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 9724) making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN and Mr. JONES of New Mexico members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the United States Veterans' Bureau.

DECLARING LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY A LEGAL HOLIDAY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, it was with a good deal of diffidence I asked for a little time to-day. At the beginning I desire to ask that an address which I hold in my hand upon Abraham Lincoln be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address on Abraham Lincoln. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What address?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. One made by myself before the Lincoln Club of New York a year ago.

Mr. MANN. Made by whom?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Myself.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry the gentleman did not print it a year ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I take it that to the address to which we have just listened no additions could be made worthy in character or more effectively written. In this address, however, I took the opportunity of studying the life of Lincoln from childhood up to the period when he began to attract the attention of the public at large, and have made a sort of inductive study in an effort to find out for myself what manner of man he was, how the revelation of what he was came to be known to the common people. I shall not undertake, of course, to read any considerable portion of that address. The remarks of the gentleman discussing the prohibition question made me think of a passage, however, in that address in which I have quoted Mr. Lincoln himself, and I think it perfectly proper, in connection with what was said, to read briefly.

The most recent political change of nation-wide importance is the granting of equal suffrage to the womanhood of this country. In 1836, when running for candidate to the legislature, Lincoln made a political announcement to the editor of the Journal:

Many voters ask the candidates to show their hands. Agreed, here is mine. I go for all sharing the privileges of government who assist in bearing its burdens. Consequently I go for admitting all whites to the right of suffrage who pay taxes or bear arms, by no means excluding females.

Thus in 1836 he had declared for woman's suffrage.

Early in 1842 he entered into the Washingtonian movement intended to suppress intemperance. At the request of the society he delivered an address on Washington's birthday in the Presbyterian Church. That address was a masterly arraignment of the evils of intemperance. Speaking of certain Christians who object to associating with drunkards even in the hope of reforming them, he said, "If they (the Christians) believe, as they profess, that omnipotence condescended to take on himself the form of sinful man, and as such die an ignominious death, surely they will not refuse submission to the infinitely lesser condescension, for the temporal and perhaps eternal salvation of a large, erring, and unfortunate class of their fellow creatures. Nor is the condescension very great. In my judgment such of us as have never fallen victims have been spared more from the absence of appetite than from any mental or moral superiority over those who have. Indeed, I believe, if we take habitual drunkards as a class, their heads and their hearts will bear an advantageous comparison with those of any other class." It seems incredible to us that there could have been any misunderstanding of the purpose and spirit of his address, and yet many professing Christians thought he suggested a reflection on the sincerity of their belief. They had not yet come to a full realization of the church's responsibility for the redemption of those who had apparently hopelessly fallen. The latter part of the statement in which he ascribes commendable qualities of heart and mind to the drunkards fell on unsympathetic ears. The period of denunciation was still on, but the period of restoration was hastened by the Washington Society, to whose success Lincoln gave the full measure of every ability of mind and heart that he possessed. As if forecasting the final triumph of the temperance cause he contrasted it with the cause of political freedom. In this same address he says, "Of our political Revolution of '76 we are all justly proud. It has given us a degree of political freedom far exceeding that of any other nation of the earth. In it the world has found a solution of the long-mooted problem as to the capability of man to govern himself. In it was the germ which has vegetated, and still is to grow and expand into the universal liberty of mankind. But, with all these glorious results, past, present, and to come, it had its evils, too. It breathed forth famine, swam in blood, and rode in fire; and long, long after, the orphan's cry and the widow's wail continued to break the sad silence that ensued. These were the price, the inevitable price, paid for the blessings it brought."

Turn now to the temperance revolution. In it we shall find a stronger bondage broken, a viler slavery unmanumitted, a greater tyrant deposed; in it more of want supplied, more disease healed, more sorrow assuaged. By it no orphans starving, no widows weeping. By it none wounded in feeling, none injured in interest; even the dram maker and dramseller will have glided into other occupations so gradually as never to have felt the change, and will stand ready to join all others in the universal song of gladness. And what a noble ally this to the cause of political freedom; with such an aid its march can not fail to be on and on, till every son of earth shall drink in rich fruition the sorrow-quenching drafts of perfect liberty. Happy day when— all appetites controlled, all poisons subdued, all matter subjected—mind, all-conquering mind, shall live and move, the monarch of the world. Glorious consummation! Hail, fall of fury! Reign of reason, all hail!

That is Lincoln, whom we honor to-day, more than three-quarters of a century ago, upon the problem of intemperance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The address referred to is as follows:

SPEECH DELIVERED BEFORE THE LINCOLN CLUB, BROOKLYN, N. Y., FEBRUARY 12, 1921, BY HON. LOUIS W. FAIRFIELD, OF INDIANA.

Abraham Lincoln was born 20 years after the adoption of the Constitution. He was born in the heart of the Continent, far removed from the centers of civilization as they had developed in this new country. Poverty was his birthright. Frugality was a necessity. The refinements of society were unknown in the circle into which he was born. Thus far removed he came up out of the vastness and silence of a midcontinental area. The physical circumstances that gathered around his early life gave to a nature peculiarly sensitive, deeply imaginative, and severely logical strange and apparently contradictory elements which the rough school of experience was destined to beat into a figure at once massive, symmetrical, and universal. How he came to be what he was, how the revelation of what he was, became the possession of the common man and woman; how that knowledge gave him power through all the formative years of his life, preparing for the fateful days from Sumter to Appomattox, constitutes the theme of my address to-night.

The study of great men is always profitable. They differ from all other men only in that they comprehend all the qualities of the common man but have those qualities in such measure that every common man feels akin to greatness. Emerson has said, "All men are great. Like splendid temples they send their spires high, but the difference between great men and other men is that great men touch all other men at their highest." The elements of human history are circumstances, principles, and personalities. The roots of the present lie deep buried in the past. The discovery of America and all the changes that it produced are intimately connected as causes in the life of the barefoot boy who grew to manhood in the heart of a continent, safe hidden from the influences of the schools, that he might realize the thought of the infinite in the issues of his life. Some one has said that the discovery of America is the greatest event in all secular history and that next to the resurrection of the Christ from the dead is the greatest event in all human history. The resurrection of the Christ gave the world a new hope. The discovery of America gave the world a new chance. The new chance wedded to the new hope gave us the Republic. It is my purpose to-night to determine by induction, so far as the material is at hand, the character and quality of this man that in the crisis of crises in the life of the Republic acted with almost infinite wisdom. This man applied inexorable logic to every problem. His mind ever asked the question as to the reason and the rightness of every human interest, but at the same time he exhibited the innocence and humility of a child, the tenderness and graciousness of a woman, even to those who maligned him.

He was born in Kentucky, the State of Boone and Clay and Davy Crockett; the State of romance and tragedy. The atmosphere in which the portals of life opened were filled with the courage, the self-denial, the martyrdom of those who crossed over in the early days to redeem the wilderness and to plant the civilization of the West. His birthplace in after years produced a profound impression upon his thought and feeling. He was born in Hardin County, Ky., in 1809. He spent but seven years of his life in Kentucky. There are no details of that life.

His father seemed hopelessly unable to prosper. To those who can not succeed here, there is always the allurements of another place where the securing of riches is easy and the problems of life simplified. So Thomas Lincoln heard of the wonderful opportunities in Indiana, that had just come into the Union, and in 1816 loaded all his possessions into a flat boat and floated down the river to the new Eldorado. His essential wealth consisted of three barrels of whisky.

On the way down the boat capsized and the barrels spilled into the river. By dint of much effort it was rescued. A landing was at last effected, and on the clay hills that skirt the valley of the Ohio Thomas Lincoln chose to make his home. It was a country in which at best the soil gives but meager returns, and his lack of judgment is clearly discerned in the character of the choice that he made. At this time Abe was 7 years of age. There in the woods Thomas Lincoln built a cabin of rough unhewn logs, inclosed on but three sides, with a dirt floor, pegs driven in the side of the wall by which to ascend to the loft above. Crude, cold, uncomfortable, with his wife and two children he spent the first year in Indiana here. Later he built a more comfortable house of hewn logs. Two years afterwards his mother died. Some 20 years ago it was my privilege to stand on the spot where that cabin was erected. To me it seemed as if the woods and fields were holy ground. I walked down the hillside across the little valley and climbed the hill to the spot where Abraham Lincoln's mother is buried. Ever there was with me the barefoot boy with breaking heart, who in utter loneliness and anguish of spirit saw the mother of his childhood lowered in the rude box and hidden forever from his sight. Unshod, meagerly clothed, a shiftless father, before him the hard and frugal life of the pioneer. No schools, no church, no social life. Little promise of greatness here. It is, perhaps, not fully realized that all the formative years of Mr. Lincoln's life were lived in southern Indiana on a 40-acre farm, for which his father was never able to pay.

Mr. Lincoln would have little to say of himself, the life of his parents, or the history of the family before they moved to Indiana. When in the race for the Presidency it became necessary to have a campaign biography, Mr. Lincoln doubted the wisdom or the necessity of even that. He said to J. L. Scripps, of the Chicago Tribune: "Why, Scripps, it is a great piece of folly to attempt to make anything out of me or my early life. It can all be condensed in a single sentence, and that sentence you will find in Gray's Elegy, 'The short and simple annals of the poor.' That is my life, and that is all you or anyone else can make out of it." Mr. Lincoln was ever painfully impressed with the extreme poverty of his early surroundings and the utter absence of all romance and heroic elements.

"Amid the miserable surroundings of a home in the wilderness Nancy Hanks, the mother of Lincoln, passed across the dark river. Though of lowly birth, the victim of poverty and hard usage, she takes a place in history as the mother of a son who liberated a race of men. At her side stands another mother whose son performed a similar service for all mankind eighteen hundred years before.

"After the death of their mother little Abe and his sister Sarah began a dreary life—indeed, one more cheerless and less inviting seldom falls to the lot of any child. In a log cabin without a floor, scantily protected from the severities of the weather, deprived of the comfort of a mother's love, they passed through a winter the most dismal either one ever experienced. Within a few months, and before the close of the winter, David Elkin, an itinerant preacher whom Mrs. Lincoln had known in Kentucky, happened into the settlement, and in response to the invitation from the family and friends, delivered a funeral sermon over her grave. No one is able now to remember the language of Parson Elkin's discourse, but it is recalled that he commemorated the virtues and good phases of character, and passed in silence the few shortcomings and frailties of the poor woman sleeping under the winter's snow. She had done her work in this world. Stoop-shouldered, thin-breasted, sad—at times miserable—groping through the perplexities of life, without prospect of any betterment in her condition, she passed from earth, little dreaming of the grand future that lay in store for the ragged, hapless little boy who stood at her bedside in the last days of her life."

Fortunately for the boy it was not long until Thomas Lincoln again married a most worthy woman. She took a deep interest in the boy, and made it possible for him to attend school. He attended school at three brief intervals; at the age of 10, when he was about 14, and again when he was 17. The last school required a walk of four miles. At Crawford's school, when he was about 14, a new feature was introduced. It was instruction in manners. One scholar was required to go outside and reenter the room as a lady or gentleman would enter a drawing room or a parlor. Another scholar would receive the first party and escort him or her about the room making polite introductions to each person in the room. It may be that the suggestions received by this backwoods school-teacher, who, no doubt, had acquired the forms of polite society, had more to do with the way in which Mr. Lincoln was able to move when he became prominent in the State of Illinois than is generally supposed.

He had a retentive memory, a sensitive nature on matters that had to do with his getting on in the world. He was not indifferent. The sharp contrast between what was thought as proper form in polite society and the crude though hearty social life of the backwoodsman no doubt made a deep impression upon the boy.

It is said that while attending school at Crawford's, when he was in his fourteenth year, Mr. Lincoln wrote a dissertation in which he strove to show the wholesome effects of a temperate life and the horrors of war, subjects in which his interest never lagged.

At 17 he was 6 feet 4 inches in height, and weighed about 160 pounds. His hands and feet were large, arms and legs being long and in striking contrast with his slender trunk and small head. His skin was shriveled and yellow. He was barefooted most of the time. He wore buckskin trousers, linsey-woolsey shirt, and a cap made of the skin of a squirrel or coon. His breeches were baggy and short, exposing his shin bone, sharp, blue, and narrow. Even at that early day Lincoln was a patient reader of a Louisville newspaper which someone at Gentryville kindly furnished him. The books he read were the Bible, Aesop's Fables, Robinson Crusoe, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, a history of the United States, and Weem's Life of Washington. He was not able to own these books. They were borrowed. He never owned an arithmetic. He made his own. On the leaf of this book, beneath the table of how many pints there were in a bushel, was found the following: "Abraham Lincoln, his hand and pen. He will be good, but God knows when"—a touch of that humor so well known in later years.

The foundation of whatever education he had was laid in Indiana and the town of Salem, Ill. In both places he gave evidence of the characteristics that markedly distinguished him from all his associates. He was not peculiar. He was not eccentric. He was, however, unique, original, indefinable. Even at 14 years of age he had a remarkable store of information. Two volumes he kept constantly at hand and read them again and again and again, the Bible and Aesop's Fables. The aptness of his quotations reveal even to the casual student of his life how incarnate must have been the literature of the Bible. Even during the time of his Indiana life, from 7 years of age until he was 21 there are no incidents, striking or unusual. The life was one from within. His retentive memory, his power of concentration, his love of truth, his delight in intellectual processes, his ideals, and the self-urgency within him for their realization were the agencies, the inner hidden powers, that could not be counted or weighed, but which nevertheless brought him to the stature of manhood intellectually as well as physically in that 14 years of Indiana life. He lived two lives between the ages of 7 and 21, the outer, rugged, self-denying, poverty stricken, humble, almost menial life of the unsuccessful backwoodsman.

But there were two of him, and that inner life had its roots in the fineness of his nature, in the bigness of his intellect, in the generosity of his heart, and in his unconquerable will. After all what better vision of life than that which comes through the prophets of old. They reveal the weakness, the littleness, the sinfulness, the tragic helplessness in certain phases of human life. The prophet recognized in the Bible as the spokesman of God is ever on the side of the oppressed as against the oppressor, on the side of the weak as against the strong, on the side of liberty as against tyranny, on the side of right as against wrong, on the side of hope as against despair, on the side of God as against Godlessness. Can you not understand that a boy of 14, feeling that self-urgency, which in itself is life, and drinking deep from the rich lore of Biblical literature, would be lifted into a higher altitude, even to the thought of the Infinite? He was familiar with the Sermon on the Mount, the constitution of the race. The life of the Nazarene gave him hope, the Republic gave him a chance, and there in the wilderness after 2,000 years the hope that had come into the heart of the world for its redemption, and the new chance that had come to the world by the discovery of America blended in the life of the boy of destiny. After all may it not be that in God's own good time it was meant that out from the womb of this continent, begotten of the eternal promise enunciated through the ages by the prophets, and realized in the life of the Christ that there should come one to preserve to the world a government "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal"?

From infancy to 7 years of age in Kentucky. From 7 to 21 in Indiana. Before reaching his majority for two or three years he felt restless under the restraining influence of his father, who had no sympathy for his aspirations for an education, and no ability to determine a more prosperous career for himself. Lincoln is now 21 years of age. Little training has he received in the schools, but his mind has been richly stored from the treasure of our English literature, the English Bible. He read the statutes of Indiana. His imagination is stirred with the thought of becoming a lawyer. Already he has been accustomed to practice public speaking from the stumps in the forest with the trees as auditors. In his imagination he is addressing countless crowds. "There is in him tears and consuming fire like drops and lightning in summer clouds." That is the inner Lincoln that goes to Illinois with his father. The outer Lincoln is 6 feet 4, walking barefoot beside an ox team, driving a creaking wagon over the rough hills, and through the mire, and fording streams toward a new home and a new destiny, hidden alike from him and those who traveled with him.

I shall not speak of his trips down the Ohio and Mississippi to New Orleans, nor his service in the Black Hawk War. Nor dwell in recounting his feats of physical power that enabled him to be a leader in the sports of the pioneer days, as well as the intellectual leader of those with whom he associated.

The three periods of his life are marked by the dates 1809 to 1816, when he lived in Kentucky; 1816 to 1830 were spent in Indiana. In the spring of 1830 he moved with his father to Illinois. Two years later he became a candidate for the legislature and was defeated, the only time he suffered defeat at the hands of the people. In common with others who aspired to the position, he issued a circular to the people of Sangamon County, stating his political principles which were a national bank, a liberal system of internal improvements, and a high protective tariff. This description is given of him as he appeared on the occasion of his first stump speech:

He wore a mixed jean coat, claw-hammered style, short in the sleeves and bobtailed—in fact, it was so short in the tail he could not sit on it—flax and tow linen pantaloons, and a straw hat. He wore pot-metal boots.

The occasion was a public sale at Pottsville, 11 miles west of Springfield. After the sale was over and speechmaking had begun, a general fight ensued. Lincoln seeing one of his friends about to be overcome, interposed to prevent it. He came down from the rude platform from which he was about to speak, seized the bully by the neck and the seat of the trousers, and threw him a distance of "12 feet." He now returned to the platform, threw aside his hat, and opened his campaign. Said he:

Fellow citizens, I presume you all know who I am. I am humble Abraham Lincoln; I have been solicited by many friends to become a candidate for the legislature. My politics are short and sweet, like the old lady's dance. I am in favor of national banks; I am in favor of internal improvements; and a high protective tariff. These are my sentiments and political principles. If elected, I shall be thankful; if not, it will be all the same.

In the circular which he had issued he had closed with this statement:

I was born and have ever remained in the most humble walks of life. I have no wealthy or popular friends to recommend me. If elected, the people will have conferred a favor upon me for which I shall be unremittent in my labors to compensate. If the good people in their wisdom shall see fit to keep me in the background I have been too familiar with disappointments to be very much chagrined.

The recital of these incidents reveals the characteristics that are clearly discerned throughout Lincoln's career—ambition to be recognized; courage to face difficulties, both physical and political, and yet tinged with that vein of sadness which sometimes resulted in despondence when he adds, "I have been too familiar with disappointments to be very much chagrined." He was defeated. His defeat did not sour him nor dampen his hopes. Up to that time he had earned literally by the sweat of his brow whatever of money he had received. Labor gave little opportunity for study and reflection. His experiences in politics had given him brief respite from the dull, stupefying effects of excessive physical labor. He now wanted lighter work. He wanted to meet the celebrities who came to the store and tavern. He wanted to discuss politics, horse races, cock-fights, and narrate to listening loafers his striking and significant stories. In the community where Lincoln lived the store-keeper was the center of power and influence. He took the only newspaper; had the only collection of books; usually owned about half of the town, and was the social and political leader of the community.

Lincoln aspired to be that. He had drunken of the exciting wine of politics and it had weaned him from the field of physical labor. He bought a store in partnership with a man by the name of Berry. In a short time they absorbed another new Salem grocery and then another from a man by the name of Rutledge. Not a cent of money passed in this transaction. Berry gave his note to James Herndon, Lincoln gave his note to Rowan Herndon, while Lincoln & Berry as a firm executed their obligation to Green and to Radford and Rutledge. Lincoln was absolutely unfit for a storekeeper. He read Shakespeare and Burns and talked politics while his partner paid most of his attention to the spigot and the barrel. In the spring of 1833 they knew that the firm was failing and were ready to retire. Two brothers named Trent came along to whom they sold the business on the most liberal terms then prevalent, but before the Trent's notes became due they in turn had failed and fled. Berry died soon after. Lincoln was under the necessity of either meeting the unhonored obligations of the ill-fated partnership or avoid the payment by dividing the responsibility and pleading the failure of the business. He assumed all of the liabilities and set himself to the full payment of every dollar, which was strictly in keeping with his fine sense of honesty and justice. His law partner relates that Lincoln was a long time meeting these claims. In 1848 he sent from Washington parts of his salary as Congressman to be applied upon the unpaid remnant of the Berry & Lincoln indebtedness. In time he extinguished it all, even to the last penny. He determined now to read law, indeed had been reading while in the store. He had to borrow his books, of course; had to walk 11 miles to Springfield, and walk back again to return them, and walking back and forth he sometimes mastered as much as 40 pages of Blackstone along the road. That any man should undertake to become a lawyer under such adverse circumstances—without money, without education such as the schools could give, without books, with no means of subsistence except by day labor—excited the disgust of many of the good people of Salem. An old farmer who had called him at that time to do farm work was surprised to find him one day sitting barefooted on the top of a woodpile attentively reading a book. This was an unusual thing for farm hands in that day to do, and the farmer asked him what he was reading. "I am not reading," he said, "I am studying." "Studying what?" the farmer inquired. "Law, sir," was the emphatic response. It was nearly too much for the farmer, and as he looked at him sitting there proud as Cicero, said "Great God Almighty" and passed on. Soon he was able to draw deeds, contracts, and other legal papers. Some friends at this time encouraged him to become deputy surveyor. The incumbent was a Democrat. Lincoln was a Whig. The messenger that took the news to him found him splitting rails. When appraised that he could have the appointment he said, "If I can be perfectly free in my political action I will take the office, but if my sentiments or even the expression of them should be abridged in any way I would not have it or any other office." Hampered by poverty, yet he had the courage to deal with public office in such a way as to make us know that he was made of unalloyed material. We can understand how he could say to his friends, after Douglas had defeated him, "do not give up after one or one hundred defeats." He was not only not discouraged, but he had that quality which, above all else, is essential to greatness—he was not discourageable. He was made deputy surveyor. He was made postmaster in 1833, carrying the post office around in his hat. Between the revenues derived from the post office and his income from land surveying Lincoln was getting along well enough.

Soon, however, the prospect was darkened. Suit was brought against him and a judgment obtained on one of the notes given in the store debt. All his personal effects were levied upon and sold, his horse and surveying instruments going with the rest. A friend, however, bought in the property and restored it to Lincoln. There was that quality in him which bound men to him. He was not only grateful for what came to him but ever earnest and anxious to help, to help alike those whom he knew and the stranger who might come across his path. He made the race for the legislature again in 1834, and was successful. He had now emerged from utter obscurity, had extended the sphere of his influence from the county to the State. He did not have enough money to dress himself decently and pay the fare to the capital of the State, and had to borrow $200 from a friend. He got it and paid it back as promised, of course.

When elected to the legislature for the first time Mr. Lincoln was only 25 years of age. At this time occurred one of the most tragic experiences of his life—the death of his first beloved, Ann Rutledge. The limitation of this address will not permit a detailed setting of the peculiarly sad and distressing circumstances that gather around this event. Miss Rutledge was a singularly attractive and beautiful girl. She had been engaged to one named McNeal, who had returned to the East with the promise of coming back again and claiming her. A train of unfortunate circumstances, including his sickness and the loss of letters in the mail, led her friends to believe and urge that she had been abandoned. She was unwilling to believe it, but as the letters grew less ardent she finally yielded to the conviction that he had ceased to love her. At this critical time Lincoln appeared on the scene. No doubt she was made more attractive to him by that vein of melancholy that had been induced by her experiences. For even then he was subject to fits of depression though not so marked as in the later years. He pressed his suit ardently and was aided by his neighbors who wished for his success. Finally she told him that she would write to McNeal and ask him to release her from her promise. The answer to that letter never came. In a half-hearted way she turned to Lincoln and accepted his proposal. Now that they were engaged he told her frankly what she already knew that he was poverty stricken and that they must wait until he had finished his studies before they could hope to marry. She consented and told one of her brothers, "As soon as his studies are completed we are to be married." But the ghost of another love would often rise unbidden before her, and in the early fall she took to her bed in a swift decline. Absolute quiet was demanded and visitors were shut out from the home. But she persistently called for Lincoln. At last the family sent for him. The door was closed, and what was said in those last hallowed and sacred hours no one knows save Him who holds us in the hollow of His hand. In a few days she died. The effect on Lincoln's mind was terrible to contemplate. He walked for days near the verge and only at last by the importunities of friends and their watchful care was he saved from going into the abyss. To one friend he complained that the thought that the snows and rains should fall on her grave filled him with indescribable grief. So alarming did his condition become that after consultation his friends sent him to the house of a kind friend who lived in a secluded spot hidden between the hills a mile south of town.

Here he remained for some weeks under watchful care and was finally brought back to a realization of his condition. The shock of an experience like that puts a new stamp on a man that all the years can not efface.

There was another courtship. This lady informed her sister that she thought "Mr. Lincoln was deficient in those little links which make up the chain of a woman's happiness." In a letter to Lincoln's lawyer, Mr. Banks, after Lincoln's death, she gave an illustration of what she had in mind: "A company were riding into the country. Mr. Lincoln was riding with this lady. They had a branch to cross. All the other gentlemen were very officious in seeing that their partners got safely over. We were behind. He rode in and never looked back to see how I got across. When I rode up behind him I remarked, 'You are a nice fellow. I suppose you did not care whether my neck was broken or not.' He replied in a laughing manner that he knew I was plenty smart to take care of myself." As a reference to this courtship Mr. Lincoln in a letter to Mrs. O. H. Browning closed with this: "Others have been made fools of by girls; but this can never with truth be said of me. I most emphatically in this instance made a fool of myself. I have now come to the conclusion never again to think of marrying, and this is the reason: I could never be satisfied with anyone who would be blockhead enough to have me."

Mr. Lincoln was elected to the legislature again in 1836, 1838, and 1840, and rapidly became a striking figure in the State. He aspired to be the De Witt Clinton of Illinois, but never had any money sense. A system of internal improvements were outlined by the Whig Party, which had been suddenly elevated to power. Extravagant appropriations were made, and the State of Illinois was fast moving toward bankruptcy, but as the Democrats, under the leadership of Douglas, had aligned themselves with internal improvements the future of Lincoln was not adversely affected. He did not care to be returned to the legislature again, but was ambitious to enter a larger field. Already his ability as a platform orator was recognized from one end of the State to the other. How thoroughly he had prepared and with what deep feeling he treasured the institutions of the Republic is evidenced in all his public speeches. On January 27, 1837, he made an address before the Young Men's Lyceum at Springfield. He had come into the State in 1830. He had studied surveying and made himself proficient in it. He had been twice elected to the legislature and had taken an active part in its proceedings. He had been studying law and been admitted to the bar. He was thought worthy to address the most pretentious literary body in that part of the State. It is his first public address which in its entirety has come down to us. The subject itself is significant of what was uppermost in mind and heart. The theme of that address was "The perpetuation of our political institutions." I quote a few significant statements: "We find ourselves in the peaceful possession of the fairest portion of the earth as regards extent of territory, fertility of soil, and salubrity of climate." "We find ourselves under the government of a system of political institutions conducing more essentially to the ends of civil and religious liberty than any of which the history of former times tells us."

He then pointed out the essential danger. He insists that there can never be essential danger from without us. "As a nation of free men we must live through all time or die by suicide. How shall we fortify against it? The answer is simple: Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of seventy-six did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor; let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice; and, in short, let it become the political religion of the Nation. And let the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay of all sexes and tongues and colors and conditions sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars."

At that time our political institutions had been preserved for 50 years and he pertinently asks why we may not continue for fifty times as long. Indeed, so clearly is it expressed in the following sentence: "There are now and will hereafter be many causes, dangerous in their tendency, which have not existed heretofore, and which are not too insignificant to merit attention." He might have appropriately said that up to the time at which he speaks the Government had many props to support it. Through that period it was thought to be an experiment. After 50 years he understood that people considered it a successful one. For the first 50 years all those who had staked their all upon the success of the experiment had their destiny inseparably connected with it. "They wanted to show the world that a people could govern themselves. They succeeded. Thousands have won their deathless names in making it so." He argues that this field of glory has been reaped and that as new reapers arise they, too, will seek a field. It is to deny what the history of the world tells us is true to suppose that men of ambition and talents will not continue to spring up amongst us. And when they do, they will as naturally seek the gratification of their ruling passion as others have done before them. The question, then, is, Can that gratification be found in supporting and maintaining an edifice that has been erected by others? Most certainly it can not. Many great and good men sufficiently qualified for any task they should undertake may ever be found whose ambitions would aspire to nothing beyond a seat in Congress, a gubernatorial or a presidential chair, but such belong not to the family of the lion or the tribe of the eagle. What, think you these places would satisfy an Alexander, a Caesar, or a Napoleon? Never! Towering genius disdains a beaten path. It seeks regions hitherto unexplored. It sees no distinction in adding story to story upon the monuments of fame erected to the memory of others. It denies that it is glory enough to serve under any chief. It scorns to tread in the footsteps of any predecessor, however illustrious. It thirsts and burns for distinction, and, if possible, it will have it, whether at the expense of emancipating slaves or enslaving freemen. Is it unreasonable, then, to expect that some man possessed of the loftiest genius, coupled with ambition sufficient to push it to its utmost stretch, will at some time spring up among us? And when such a one does, it will require the people to be united with each other, attached to the Government and laws, and generally intelligent to successfully frustrate his designs. Distinction will be his paramount object, and although he would as willingly—perhaps more so—acquire it by doing good as harm, yet that opportunity being past and nothing left to be done in the way of building up, he would set boldly to the task of pulling down.

For the first 50 years the scenes of the Revolution were fresh in the minds and hearts of the people. In every village and in the countryside there were the heroes of Lexington and Concord and Bunker Hill, of Long Island, New Jersey, Brandywine, Princeton, Trenton, Saratoga, Valley Forge, and Yorktown. That prop, he argued, was decaying through the ravages of time.

The passion of experience and suffering has helped us, but can do so no more. "It will in future be reason—cold, calculating, unimpassioned reason, must furnish all materials for our future support and defense. Let these materials be molded into general intelligence, sound morality, and in particular a reverence for the Constitution and the law. Upon these let the proud fabric of freedom rest as the rock of its basis and, as truly as has been said of the only greater institution, 'the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.'"

Lincoln had now become a figure—and a potent one—in the intellectual and legal circles of Springfield, which had now become the capital of the State. Speed's store was the meeting place for loafers, loungers, lawyers, and politicians. One evening the political discussion got warm. Douglas was leading on the Democratic side. He was subtle, fiery, and impetuous. No vulnerable spot seemed to have escaped him. At last with great vehemence he sprang up and abruptly made a challenge to those who differed from him to discuss the matter with him, remarking that this store was no place to talk politics. The challenge was accepted. The debate took place in the Presbyterian Church. One evening was given to each man. There were four Democrats and four Whigs. Lincoln occupied the last evening, so that it was more than a week before his turn came. By that time the audience had become somewhat tired of the subject. Mr. Lincoln showed how sensitive he was to the apparent want of interest in his personal presentation of the argument. In introducing himself he makes the following statement: "It is peculiarly embarrassing to me to attempt a continuance of the discussion on this evening which has been conducted in this hall on several preceding ones. It is so because on each of those evenings there was a much fuller attendance than now, without any reason for its being so except the greater interest the community feels in the speakers who addressed them then than they do in him who is to do so now. I am, indeed, apprehensive that the few who have attended have done so more to spare me mortification than in the hope of being interested in anything I am able to say. This circumstance casts a damp upon my spirits which, I am sure, I shall be unable to overcome during the evening. But enough of preface." However, his argument was so cogent that it was printed in pamphlet form and widely distributed by the Whigs as a political document. He was arguing against the subtreasury idea and for the idea of a bank. It is the irony of fate that while Douglas's ideas should have prevailed at the time and for many years thereafter, yet to-day the subtreasury scheme is a thing of the past, and the Federal Reserve bank, a national institution, conforming in spirit and organization to what Lincoln advocated in 1839, has become the permanent fiscal agent of the Government.

The year of 1840 finds Mr. Lincoln 32 years of age and still unmarried. The world is familiar with his courtship of Mary Todd, daughter of Gen. Levi Todd, in whose veins coursed the blood of a long and distinguished ancestral line that could be traced back in the genealogical chart to the sixth century. The course of his wooing ran smoothly and soon he was engaged. Soon a new and disturbing element loomed up ahead in their paths. The brilliant little giant of Illinois appeared as a rival. Miss Todd was not indifferent to his attentions. Douglas was unremitting in his attentions to the lady, promenading the streets, arm in arm with her, frequently passing Lincoln, and in every way making plain his intentions of becoming his rival. Lincoln was not insensible to the situation. He wrote a letter in which he stated to her that he had thought the matter over very carefully and had come to the conclusion that he did not love her enough to warrant her marrying him and asked his friend Speed to deliver the letter. Upon his declining to do so, he threatened to intrust it to some other person's hands. Speed said to him, "Words are forgotten, misunderstood, unnoticed in a private conversation, but once you put your words in writing they stand a living and eternal monument against you." The unfortunate letter was then thrown into the fire. Said his friend to him, "If you have the courage of manhood go see Mary yourself. Tell her, if you do not love her, the facts, and that you will not marry her. Be careful not to say too much and then leave at your earliest opportunity." He buttoned up his coat and with a determined look started out to perform his duty. Speed waited his return. Ten o'clock came, 11 o'clock, no Lincoln yet. Shortly after 11 o'clock he came in. "Well, old fellow, did you do as I told you and as you promised?" "Yes, I did," responded Lincoln thoughtfully. "And when I told Mary I did not love her, she burst into tears and almost sprang from her chair, and wringing her hands as in agony said something about the deceiver being himself deceived," then he stopped. "What else did you say?" inquired Speed. "To tell you the truth, Speed, it was too much for me; I found the tears trickling down my own cheeks, I caught her in my arms and kissed her." "And that is how you broke the engagement," sneered Speed. "You not only acted the fool, but your conduct was tantamount to a renewal of the engagement and in decency you can not back down now." "Well," drawled Lincoln, "if I am in again, so be it. It is done and I shall abide by it."

January 1, of 1841, was fixed as the day for the marriage. The day came. Every preparation for the ceremony had been made, the hour arrived, no groom appeared, an hour passed, another hour passed. Lincoln could not be found. The bride in grief disappeared to her room. The wedding supper was left untouched, the guests quietly and wonderingly withdrew. The darkness of night settled over the Edwards mansion. What were the thoughts and feelings of Mary Todd through that fateful night can never be known. Searching all night long the friends of Lincoln found him at daybreak. He was restless, gloomy, miserable, despondent, an object of pity. The report went out that he was insane. Three weeks afterwards, in a letter to his partner, he revealed how he felt. "I am now the most miserable man living. If what I feel were equally distributed to the whole human family there would not be one cheerful face on earth. Whether I shall ever be better, I can not tell; I awfully forebode I shall not. To remain as I am is impossible. I must die or be better, as it appears to me. * * * I fear I shall be unable to attend to any business here, and a change of scene might help me. If I could be myself I would rather remain at home with Judge Logan. I can write no more."

During all this time the legislature to which he had been elected was in special session. For a time he was unable to attend. Toward the close, however, he was present, but took no active part in its proceedings. After adjournment his warm friend, Speed, persuaded Lincoln to go with him to Kentucky, where they remained for several months in the quiet and seclusion of a large plantation. While there Lincoln wrote some lines to the Sangamon Journal on the gloomy subject of suicide. Many years later his biographer consulted the files of that paper, but found that the lines had been cut out, possibly at the suggestion of Lincoln when he became a prominent figure in politics. He and Speed exchanged many letters concerning the subject of marriage. In one of those letters he reveals what explains his strange and contradictory course in his love affair with Miss Todd. He says, "I have no doubt it is the peculiar misfortune of both you and me to dream dreams of Elysium far exceeding all that anything earthly can be realized. Far short of your dreams as you may be, no woman could do more to realize them than that same black-eyed Fannie." In another letter to the same friend, written July 4, he writes:

"I must gain confidence in my own ability to keep my resolves when they are made. In that ability I once prided myself as the one chief gem of my character. That gem I lost; how and where you know too well. I have not regained it, and until I do I can not trust myself in any matter of much importance. I believe now that had you understood my case at the time as well as I understood your's afterwards, by the aid you would have given me I should have sailed through clear; but that does not now afford me sufficient confidence to begin that or the like of that again. I always was superstitious. I believe God made me one of the instruments of bringing Fannie and you together, which union I have no doubt He had foreordained. Whatever He desires He will do for me yet. 'Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord' is my text just now." So deeply did Lincoln think and feel upon this most vital question of human life that on October 5, 1842, he wrote to Speed as follows: "You have now been the husband of a lovely woman nearly eight months. But I want to ask you a close question. Are you in feeling, as well as judgment, glad you are married as you are? Please answer quickly, as I am impatient to know."

Lincoln entered the practice of law with renewed vigor after the enforced rest. He troubled no more over the matter of his engagement with Mary Todd. Mutual friends, however, contrived to bring them together again. They were reconciled, and on the evening of November 4, 1842, Abraham Lincoln, as pale and trembling as if being driven to slaughter, was at last married to Mary Todd.

The most recent political change of nation-wide importance is the granting of equal suffrage to the womanhood of this country. In 1836 when running for candidate to the legislature Lincoln made a political announcement to the editor of the Journal: "Many voters ask the candidates to show their hands. Agreed; here is mine. I go for all sharing the privileges of government who assist in bearing its burdens. Consequently I go for admitting all whites to the right of suffrage who pay taxes or bear arms, by no means excluding females." Thus in 1836 he had declared for woman suffrage.

Early in 1842 he entered into the Washingtonian movement intended to suppress intemperance. At the request of the society he delivered an address on Washington's Birthday in the Presbyterian Church.

That address was a masterly arraignment of the evils of intemperance. Speaking of certain Christians who object to associating with drunkards even in the hope of reforming them, he said: "If they (the Christians) believe, as they profess, that Omnipotence condescended to take on Himself the form of sinful man, and as such die an ignominious death, surely they will not refuse submission to the infinitely lesser condescension for the temporal and perhaps eternal salvation of a large, erring, and unfortunate class of their fellow creatures. Nor is the condescension very great. In my judgment such of us as have never fallen victims have been spared more from the absence of appetite than from any mental or moral superiority over those who have. Indeed, I believe, if we take habitual drunkards as a class, their heads and their hearts will bear an advantageous comparison with those of any other class." It seems incredible to us that there could have been any misunderstanding of the purpose and spirit of his address, and yet many professing Christians thought he suggested a reflection on the sincerity of their belief and had not yet come to a full realization of the church's responsibility for the redemption of those who had apparently hopelessly fallen.

The latter part of the statement in which he ascribes commendable qualities of heart and mind to the drunkards fell on unsympathetic ears. The period of denunciation was still on, but the period of restoration was hastened by the Washingtonian society, to whose success Lincoln gave the full measure of every ability of mind and heart that he possessed. As if forecasting the final triumph of the temperance cause, he contrasted it with the cause of political freedom. In this same address he says: "Of our political revolution of seventy-six we are all justly proud. It has given us a degree of political freedom far exceeding that of any other nation of the earth. In it the world has found a solution of the long-mooted problem as to the capability of man to govern himself. In it was the germ which has vegetated and still is to grow and expand into the universal liberty of mankind. But with all these glorious results—past, present, and to come—it had its evils, too. It breathed forth famine, swam in blood, and rode in fire, and long, long after the orphan's cry and the widow's wail continued to break the sad silence that ensued. These were the price, the inevitable price, paid for the blessings it brought.

"Turn, now, to the temperance revolution. In it we shall find a stronger bondage broken, a viler slavery manumitted, a greater tyrant deposed; in it more of want supplied, more disease healed, more sorrow assuaged. By it no orphans starving, no widows weeping. By it none wounded in feeling, none injured in interest; even the dram maker and dram seller will have glided into other occupations so gradually as never to have felt the change, and will stand ready to join all others in the universal song of gladness. And what a noble ally this to the cause of political freedom; with such an aid its march can not fail to be on and on till every son of earth shall drink in rich fruition the sorrow-quenching draughts of perfect liberty.

Happy day when—all appetites controlled, all poisons subdued, all matter subjected—mind, all-conquering mind, shall live and move, the monarch of the world. Glorious consummation! Hail, fall of fury! Reign of reason, all hail!"

Lincoln by this time had taken a strong position against slavery, for woman suffrage, and against the saloon. His marriage in no way diminished his interest in politics. He tried for the nomination for Congress in 1842 and was defeated. He tried again in 1844 and was again defeated. The district was Whig. The single-term idea was in vogue. Hardin, who had been elected in 1842, had to yield to Baker in 1844, who in turn yielded to Lincoln in 1846. In Mr. Lincoln's nomination he announced that he would not be a candidate for a second term. Subsequently some of his friends urged that he stand for re-nomination. To them he replied, "I would very much like to remain in Congress, but if there is anyone else seeking the position I can not in honor stand against him."

He entered Congress in December, 1847. The Mexican War was on. The Whigs had opposed the declaration of war. Lincoln introduced the spot resolutions calling upon President Polk in a series of interrogations to state specifically the spot in the territory of the United States where American citizens had been murdered by the Mexicans. He failed to draw the President out. Later a resolution was introduced and added to the supply bill proposed by George Ashmun, of Massachusetts. Referring to this vote in a letter to a friend, he said:

That vote affirms that the war was unnecessarily and unconstitutionally commenced by the President, and I will stake my life that if you had been in my place you would have voted as I did. Would you have voted what you felt and knew to be a lie? You know you would not. Would you have gone out of the House, skulked the vote? I expect not. If you had skulked the vote you would have had to skulk many more before the close of the session. The Richards resolution makes the drawn question of the justice of the war, so that no man can be silent if he would. You are compelled to speak, and your only alternative is to tell the truth or tell a lie.

He made two other speeches during the session. One an argument on internal improvements; the other an arraignment of Gen. Cass, the Democratic candidate for President. This last speech was a masterpiece of political oratory. Calm, cool, discriminating, with searching analysis of the whole career of Gen. Cass, and striving to take off all the efforts of the Democratic Party to make him appear a military hero.

At the close of the session in 1848 he made a trip through New England, speaking before Whigs, and made a deep impression upon the political leadership of that part of the country. However, he had estranged himself from a large part of his constituents by his course in connection with the Mexican War, and it is doubted whether he could have been reelected if he had been nominated. His former law partner, Mr. Logan, who received the nomination, was overwhelmingly defeated. Mr. Lincoln thought seriously of retiring from politics. He was still a poor man. He tried to be appointed land commissioner of Illinois, but there were other applicants from his own district. He was willing to espouse their cause, but stated frankly that he did not believe any one of them could secure the appointment. While this correspondence was going on, a shrewd politician from the city of Chicago came on to Washington, organized his forces, and secured the appointment. However, on his return in the spring of 1849 the Whig leadership in Washington felt anxious to recognize him in some appointment. They suggested that he might receive the appointment as governor or secretary of Oregon. He was a national figure, so far as party leaders were concerned. It was urged by his friends in Illinois that he might go to Oregon and on its admittance to the Union could become the first Senator from that State. He concluded to return to Washington. He traveled overland by stage.

An amusing incident is told by two men who boarded the stage at Terre Haute, Ind., in the early morning hours. Mr. Lincoln was the sole occupant of the stage. He was lying on the rear seat, with his feet projecting up one side and his head on the other side, and apparently fast asleep. One of them slapped him on the back and said, "Have you chartered the whole stage?" "Most certainly not, gentlemen," he replied, and at once took the front seat, surrendering to them the place of honor and comfort. The two men were Thomas H. Nelson, who was appointed by Mr. Lincoln as minister to Chile, and the other was Judge Hammond, who afterwards became governor of Indiana. Mr. Nelson says, "We took him in at a glance. A queer and lone figure he was. Dressed in a well-worn and ill-fitted suit of bombazine, without vest or cravat, and a 25-cent palm hat on the back of his head. In repose his features seemed dull and expressionless. We perpetrated several jokes upon him. He took them all with the utmost innocence and good humor and joined in the laugh, though at his own expense. We invited him to eat dinner with us and he approached the table as if he considered it a great honor. He sat with about half his person on a small chair and held his hat under his arm during the meal. The conversation drifted into a discussion of the comet that was then agitating the scientists of the world. The stranger seemed deeply interested. We amazed him with words of learned length and thundering sound. He asked me strange and unusual questions, and finally wanted to know what would be the upshot of the whole affair. I told him that I differed from most scientists, and thought that the earth would follow the darned thing off, to which he seemed amazed and profoundly impressed. On reaching Indianapolis we went to the Browning House immediately and lost sight of the stranger. We went to our rooms and hastily made our toilets. I returned to the lobby of the hotel and was much surprised to find our traveling companion the center of a group of the most eminent lawyers of the State. I asked Mr. Browning, the proprietor of the hotel, who the man might be. He replied, "It is Abraham Lincoln, of Illinois." I went immediately to my room; we packed our grips, went down by another stairway and entrance, and sought another hotel. Many years afterwards, when he had been elected President and was on his way east, I was appointed one of the committee to accompany him from Indianapolis. I was late to the hotel where he had stopped for dinner. I walked into the dining room. It was crowded, but I did not see Mr. Lincoln. On turning a corner a long arm reached out and took me by the shoulder, and said, "I wonder if the earth will follow the darn thing off."

He was offered the governorship of Oregon, but on his return home his wife objected, and that settled the question. Mr. Lincoln now entered vigorously into the practice of law, but took every opportunity that came to him to make public speeches. From 1849 to 1858, when he ran against Douglas for Senator, he was recognized as a leading lawyer in the State and often practiced in adjacent States. The Missouri compromise seemed to have settled the slavery question for the Union. The Kansas-Nebraska bill of Douglas threw the subject wide open. The gulf current of human events was leading on toward the fateful days between Sumter and Appomattox. His debate with Douglas, his second inaugural address, and his Gettysburg address show the highest qualities of statesmanship and are the common heritage of the people. Mr. Lincoln was one of five men who determined the particular setting of the form of government under which we live.

Washington, the father of his country, the calm, dispassionate, determining factor in the adoption of the Constitution; Hamilton, the conservative, practical statesman "who smote the rock of public credit and abundant streams of revenue gushed forth"; Marshall, the interpreter of the Constitution along lines of nationalism; Webster, by his eloquence, by his learning, by the cogency of his arguments, convinced the North at least that the Union is one and inseparable under the Constitution; at last comes Lincoln, the savior of the Republic. Thus far two figures have arisen as universal types in the history of the Republic. They are Washington and Lincoln. Great as each was, it is to the moral sublimity of their character that must be ascribed the strange and ever-increasing power with which the citizens of the Republic honor, revere, and love them.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] desire further recognition?

Mr. FOCHT. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask recognition in my own right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOCHT. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is recognized.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If the gentleman will permit me for a moment, I wish to ask unanimous consent to have my address printed in 8-point type.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana modifies his original request and asks that his address be printed in 8-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if the immortal Lincoln were present to-day he would state without hesitation that the greatest curse to this Nation at the present hour is idleness. It is the failure on the part of Americans to produce to the limit of their possibility, and he would tell us that it is the duty of every American to effect maximum production.

I will join my colleagues in every proper method to do honor to the memory of this great man, and I realize that upon the spur of the moment, when such a measure is offered, for one to oppose it is to place him in the attitude of being antagonistic to the announced purpose of it. But such is not the case here. A measure to do honor to the memory of a man should be consistent with the character and the life of the man, and everyone who knows Lincoln knows that he was an indefatigable worker, a man who believed in accomplishment, a man who believed in effort, a man who believed in work, a man who did not like idleness, but who worked hard himself.

If we keep on providing holidays in the District of Columbia there are going to be few work days. Have you ever thought about how many holidays there are in the District of Columbia? We have only 365 days to draw from in the beginning. Then we deduct 52 Sabbaths from that number. That is quite a hole in the working possibilities of the year. And then we grant 30 days of idleness, 30 days full vacation on full pay to the Government employees each year, and in doing that recommend to private employers that that be followed with respect to their business; then 30 days additional sick leave on doctor's certificate with full pay.

I am not saying that when a person is sick he should be docked in his wages.

I am 49 years old, and I have had people working for me from time to time, and as to those who worked for me I have never yet to this good day docked any person when he was sick. But to our Government employees we do not say, "When you get sick we will take that misfortune into consideration," but we say, "In addition to the 52 Sabbaths, in addition to the 30 days' full vacation on full pay, we will grant you as much as 30 days' extra sick leave on a doctor's certificate. If you can get a doctor to give you a certificate that you have been sick as much as 30 days we will add that to your other 30 days' vacation on full pay."

Then there are all the legal holidays which have already been provided by law. There are many of them. Have you ever stopped to count them up? Then in addition to that are a number of special occasions, special holidays, so numerous occurring in the city of Washington, the Nation's Capital. Have you ever stopped to count them during the year? Let something special happen, and the departments are turned out and the Government employees are told to go and participate. Then in the summer time half of every Saturday is allowed during the three summer months. I am not saying that that should not be the case. They should have a half day on Saturday to do their marketing, to look after their private business affairs, in the hot summer months. I am not objecting to it. I say it is a good thing.

But we must draw a line some time. I want to say that if the immortal Lincoln were here to-day he would say, "Do not do this in my name." He would say, "Produce more, and not thus provoke idleness."

Do you know what else we are attempting to do in Lincoln's name? You know you can conjure with names. Some people over here in Virginia across the river want a new bridge. Some people here in the District of Columbia joined them in wanting a new bridge. They have been wanting it a long time; they have been agitating it a long time; they have been using propaganda for it a long time. They have been appealing to the Executive and to the Congressmen and Senators for some way to get that new bridge and have the United States pay for it. Just a few minutes ago the messenger from the United States Senate stepped into that door and brought back to us a bill, a supply measure for the executive and independent establishments of the Government. In that very bill that he announced there is contained an amendment that was placed there by the Senate without any authority of law, because it is legislation on an appropriation bill—placed there by the distinguished body at the other end of the Capitol, appropriating $25,000 to make an initial survey for this desired bridge that is to cost $10,000,000 of the people's money.

It is done in the name of Lincoln. In the name of Lincoln it is brought in in such a way that if anybody rises against it somebody who wants the bridge will say, "You are not willing to do honor to the memory of Lincoln"; one who opposes it is placed in the attitude of not being willing to do honor to the great American. You can let that $25,000 camel's nose get by you, that is going to end in a $10,000,000 spending of the people's money out of the Treasury, to build an unnecessary bridge.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has not the camel's nose already gotten by us, by past legislation on the subject of this bridge?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it has not gotten by us so far but what we can kick it out from under the tent without doing injury to the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Well, I doubt if the camel's nose is in you can get it out.

Mr. BLANTON. You can get it out if the gentleman from Illinois would just get back some of that old-time vigor of his that fights unnecessary appropriations, the kind that I used to read about in the newspapers concerning him before I came to Congress.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am going to get back that vigor to fight for this appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I know. Unfortunately for the people of the United States, the gentleman from Illinois has been won over on this bridge proposition. I tell you the propagandists of the United States have learned whom to see when they want something to pass the House of Representatives. If I wanted something to pass here and pass quickly with as little opposition as possible, I would go straight to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] first and try to win him, and when I had won him I would have won my battle.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The gentleman named holidays of a certain class. How many days come under the class of the Fourth of July, Memorial Day, and so on, in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BLANTON. The question of the gentleman from West Virginia suggests how little consideration the Committee on the District of Columbia have given to this bill and just how little they have done for you in bringing this measure here for your consideration. Was not that legitimate and necessary information that they should have given you in their report? Yet, if you search their report, you do not find a scintilla of information about that. Why, the first question the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] asked was, how much is this going to cost the people of this country, and the chairman of the committee could not give him any idea at all.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The gentleman from Texas is a member of that committee.

Mr. FOCHT. Can the gentleman give some idea of the cause of his opposition?

Mr. BLANTON. If you will permit me, without taking up my time, I will put in my remarks a list of the many legal holidays in the District of Columbia. It would not do any good to mention them all now, because you would vote for this bill just the same, regardless of the number of them or when they occur.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the fact that every bridge that spans the Potomac River within this District has been paid for largely with the money of the whole people out of the Public Treasury. The bridge that is being built right now, on which there is being spent $2,500,000 out of the Treasury, benefits commercial interests. It benefits citizens who live here in this District, many of them having no connection with the Government. It benefits citizens of Virginia having no connection whatever with this Government. If it was proper to build these bridges, it was proper for the people interested to pay for them, not for the people of this Government to pay most of the expense.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to get through with that question, but I will yield, and then I will go back to this subject again.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Some one raised the question about how many holidays we have here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The District Code states that they are as follows: The 1st day of January, commonly called New Years Day; the 22d day of February, known as Washington's Birthday; the 4th day of July; the 30th day of May, commonly called Decoration Day; the first Monday in September, known as Labor's Holiday; the 25th day of December, commonly called Christmas Day; every Saturday after 12 o'clock noon; any day appointed or recommended by the President of the United States as a day of public fasting or thanksgiving; and the day of the inauguration of President in every fourth year shall be holidays in the District for all purposes. The code seems to make that provision for the purpose of determining when legal bank holidays occur. So far as the information given here is concerned there is no provision, and the law itself does not seem to make any provision for vacations, so the question whether those shall be vacation days for Government employees would depend on administrative determination.

Mr. BLANTON. My distinguished colleague from Indiana recognizes that those vacations do occur under the provisions of law, does he not?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN. All departments are closed on legal holidays, except possibly the Post Office Department. I do not say that all employees and officials of the Government have holidays on those days. This House does not stop on account of holidays.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Illinois both remember that while the law fixes January 1 as New Year's Day and December 25 as Christmas Day, yet before and after each one of those days there is extra time given here in the District to celebrate those two occasions. The employees are not just limited to one day's holiday on those occasions. They get some time before and some time after. They are turned loose at least half a day or more before Christmas, and they can report back about the second day after Christmas. So they get an extra show there, and the same in regard to New Years.

Now, the chairman of this District Committee would have the people of the country believe that Congress has been derelict in its duty for 57 years, that it has waited 57 years to do the honor that should have been done long ago to the memory of our great American. Why, we are not the only patriotic Congress that has assembled here. Our District Committee is not the only patriotic District of Columbia Committee which has sat during the last 57 years. We have had other patriotic Congresses. We have had other patriotic District of Columbia Committees. If it was necessary that this day should be set apart as a holiday in order to do honor to the memory of the great Lincoln, surely during the last 57 years some Congress and some District of Columbia Committee would have done it. But they have not, and they have had a good reason for not doing it. They have not believed in idleness. I wish the chairman of this committee would go up and down the streets of the District of Columbia and read these Rotary Club signs that are put up all over the country against idleness and inactivity; I wish he would go on the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroads traversing the United States and see the signboards, with the admonition to work, over the signature of the President. He is telling the people, and the best interests of this country are telling the people, that they must get back to work and produce and quit this idleness. And yet that very bill for the executive and independent offices of this Government that the messenger from the Senate brought back here a moment ago contains another provision that we should be considering at this time. It provides that the $25,000 which Congress has been allowing the President of the United States to use for traveling expenses, realizing that he does not have use for that big sum of money, it is provided in that bill by a Senate amendment that the $25,000 may be used by the President in public entertainment. I put the facts in the Record the other day showing the expenses of one item of expense in White House entertainment—that we already provide for by other appropriations, for flowers, in addition to the White House hotbeds, its flower gardens, and greenhouses—

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is not out of order; this is general debate, and the gentleman has the right to discuss any matter under the usual practice of general debate. The gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I said these things about the economical administration of affairs just now that would lead the most distinguished member of the steering committee to feel like stopping me, as if it would not be best for the country to know about the things I am speaking of. He wants to close my mouth so that I can not tell the people. I find that the people over in Ohio, so far as wanting an economical Government is concerned, are just like the people in my district in Texas. They are just alike. They want us to quit this everlasting spending of the people's money for something that does not benefit them at all. I am not going to vote to let the President use that $25,000 traveling expenses for entertainment. Possibly you are. And I am going to vote against this extra holiday bill. I may be the only man who votes against it; I do not know; but when I have an abiding belief that I am right on a proposition I am not afraid to stand alone. I have done it many times.

And I could mention another amendment that the Senate has put on that bill carrying over $2,000,000 that your constituents would be interested in if they knew about it. Are we going to sit here and let the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], from the subcommittee, call up that bill, agree to the conference asked for, and go to that conference without any instructions, let the conferees agree to these things without even the people's Representatives knowing anything about it? Are you going to do it? I am not going to do it. I am going to uphold as far as one man can the speech that President Harding made out here in front of this Capitol when he was inaugurated, wherein he pledged to the people an honest, economical administration of the Government; wherein he promised them that this waste and extravagance should stop.

Have not we done honor to Lincoln? Have not we done as much as he would want us to do without wasting and spending money foolishly? Ah, the real reverence after all is in our breasts. There is more honor done to Lincoln's memory by Members of Congress coming here on his birthday and sitting in their seats listening to the encomiums passed by our colleagues, getting better acquainted with his life and his endeavors. There is where the real honor comes after all. Why, we have this magnificent Lincoln Park out here on East Capitol Street, a large, fine park with a monument to his memory. We have statues on many streets, in public buildings and out of them, in honor of his memory. You have the splendid marble Lincoln Memorial down here on Potomac Park to his memory, and you have that splendid reflecting pool just in front of it, that when it is finished I hope will do proper honor to his memory. It has not up to this time, but we are all hopeful about it.

Now, if upon the passage of this bill, hereafter every person in the District of Columbia on Lincoln's birthday would use that holiday in some way that would do real honor to that great man, then this would be good legislation. But you pass this bill, create another holiday, and 90 per cent of the people would only think that here is another day that we do not have to work. They would go off on a pleasure trip here and a trip there, and come into their places the next day at 10 o'clock, 11 o'clock, 12 o'clock, or 1 o'clock worn out from having a good time somewhere, not able hardly to work that day, not able to do work that is worth anything to the Government. I say this bill ought not to be passed. My vote may be the only vote against it, but I am going to vote against it, because I do not believe Lincoln himself would want the measure passed.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] does not have a more exalted opinion of the citizenship of America than to believe that after the passage of this bill those who are to be given the benefit of a holiday in the District of Columbia would use the day in loafing and in idleness. I say to him that he will find when this becomes a law and the day is set apart as a holiday, to revive the memories of Abraham Lincoln, that in this city the schools and the patriotic societies, to the number of thousands of people, will gather together and pay tribute to the memory of that great man, as they do to-day in all of the States where they have a Lincoln holiday and where we have the 22d of February as a holiday to commemorate the great achievements of George Washington. I think the gentleman misses our point entirely. We want to give these people here an opportunity to exalt this man, of whom it is said that he stood so high that he looked lonely in his greatness and loftiness, that men could not measure the distance between them and him. It was Tolstoi who said Lincoln was a miniature Christ. Then how can we deny the setting aside of this day that his life may be better known and understood and emulated?

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] would postpone the recognition and honor to Lincoln not only for 57 years more but indefinitely. Reference has been made in the discussion to the number of holidays in the District of Columbia. That point has already been covered by citations from the code. Reference is made by some on the floor to the annual leave and the extension of annual leave on account of sickness. At this point allow me to call attention to some figures that I made up very carefully some years ago. They will illustrate fairly well the general condition upon these two items of annual leave and so-called sick leave.

There are a few people in the Government service who take only a portion of their annual leave. Gentlemen may think that statement strange, but I know it to be true. Taking the total number of clerks in the departments in Washington, and figuring the matter through according to annual leave actually granted, the average per year will be about 26 days for each person, about 4 days under the statutory permission. Let it be remembered that annual leave is not mandatory by law. It is wholly discretionary with the head of the department or the head of an independent establishment. Any head of a department can say that there shall be no annual leave. He can say there may be 15 days or 30 days, but that is discretionary. But with it all, ordinarily, they have taken and have been granted by the discretion of the department heads and independent establishment heads 30 days annual leave with pay.

As to the question of the extension of the annual leave with pay on account of sickness with pay, the tabulation which I made some years ago showed clearly that the average for the departments would not exceed 10 days throughout the range of service in the District of Columbia. Of course, in years when there is an epidemic the average will be larger than it is in years when we do not have epidemics. There are a few people who abuse the privilege accorded in this particular. That is a question of administration, and every bureau officer and every head of a department has the authority and the power to deal with that and correct the abuse. When you figure it all up, you do not have 60 days plus the holidays; you have practically 36 days of absence with pay. That is the fact, that is the record, and that, I am fully persuaded, will fairly reflect the average condition from year to year.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What does the gentleman think of the suggestion that the employees of the District of Columbia get some kind of special favor in being permitted to have 52 Sabbaths out of the 365 days.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I suppose the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] would not deny them the Sabbaths to come and listen to his preachments on the floor of the House, which cost the Government more than the annual leave costs the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman ever heard the gentleman from Texas say anything on the floor of the House that would intimate that he is not in favor of observing all of the Sabbaths?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Oh, no. I simply meant that the gentleman would be glad to have the Sabbath in order that they could come and hear him talk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, in that one minute I want to express my admiration for the character of the man whose memory we commemorate to-day. I want to see in the District of Columbia opportunity afforded for appropriate celebration of the day, when the people shall be challenged to think of Abraham Lincoln. If there is a day that ought to be observed in the National Capital above any other day except that of Washington's Birthday, it is the 12th day of February, the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, the savior of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I was a young boy when Lincoln was President. My father was in the Army—had been. I remember as distinctly as though it were yesterday the man who came riding up fast on horseback to our farm to inform my father that Lincoln had been assassinated. I remember the grief and the tears and the sorrow of our family at that time. I come from the State which gave Lincoln to the country. I come from the city where Lincoln was first nominated for the presidency. I have the utmost reverence for his memory and admiration for his character. I was largely instrumental in this House in securing provision for the erection of the Lincoln Memorial over here to the west, which I think is the most beautiful structure in all the world. I remember in discussing the question before the House, in urging the House to provide for a memorial in the District, instead of a roadway between here and Gettysburg, that I suggested to the House that I could see in my mind's eye in the not distant future the Capitol Building representing the country and just to the west the beautiful Grant Memorial, and farther on the Mall, until you came to the great Washington Monument, and beyond that I could see, I thought, a beautiful Lincoln Memorial structure, with its reflection in the water which would be there, and still on beyond I could see a bridge across the Potomac River which could connect us with the resting place of the Army and Navy, Arlington Cemetery. [Applause.] I said that I could go further. I said that I could see, I thought, a road going still farther and reaching to Richmond, Va., and at the other end of that road I could see, if I lived, a statue of the beloved of the South, Jefferson Davis, in complete feeling of reconciliation between the North and the South. [Applause.] I was taken to task for making those remarks by some of the dear old Grand Army of the Republic men in my district, who did me the honor in the moment of resentment to withdraw my honorary membership in one of the posts. There is nothing they could do to me which would affect my love or veneration for them, and they are all my friends now, but that of itself showed that there was not yet a complete wiping out of the hatred of the Civil War. I am in favor of wiping out as fast as it is humanly possible all of the soreness and hatred caused by the Civil War.

But, Mr. Chairman, although I come from Lincoln's State, although I revere his memory and character, I can not believe that a bill like this before us will in the slightest degree enhance the value of the memory of Lincoln to anyone in America or elsewhere.

We have New Year's Day, generally observed; business places usually close. We have Memorial Day; business usually closed; people go to the ball games and elsewhere. We have the Fourth of July; business usually closed. We have Labor Day; business usually closed. We have Thanksgiving Day; business usually closed. We have Christmas Day; business usually closed. We have another holiday generally throughout the country in most of the States, February 12, when business is not closed. The banks close and the stock exchanges close. The Government offices may close in some places, but business is not closed. We have February 22; business is not closed on that day generally throughout the country. The banks close; they have to under the law. The stock exchanges close because the banks close. The people observe those days to a very large extent now, not because there is any legal holiday, and the only purpose that I can see for making a legal holiday of Lincoln's birthday in the District of Columbia is while business outside the District of Columbia on Lincoln's birthday does not close, generally in the District of Columbia all the public offices will close and the stores will keep open. That is the purpose of it, and to the reverence of Lincoln—not at all. We have a good many holidays. It is proposed by some gentlemen to make Armistice Day a holiday. It may be done. There are a great many men who have been distinguished enough in the country, if it becomes a habit, to make their birthdays holidays. It will not benefit them. It does not add anything to the reverence of the people. There is absolutely no occasion for it, except some gentlemen of the District of Columbia who would like to be let out of work another day in the year organized the propaganda to have another legal holiday. When they get that they will have another one they want. I think it is time to stop the misuse of the name of Lincoln to steal things out for private interest. [Applause.]

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 20 minutes remaining.

Mr. FOCHT. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CHALMERS].

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I have a great admiration for Washington; the Father of his Country; I have great admiration for Lincoln, the savior of his country; and I have a great admiration for that leading statesman of the world to-day, Warren G. Harding, the man who will save the world during the reconstruction period following the World War. In addition to several personal characteristics that are similar, did you ever stop to think, and have you ever referred to your histories to see, that historical parallel between the two great men—the man whose birthday we are celebrating to-day and the present honored President of this Republic, Warren G. Harding? Sixty-two years ago the Republican national convention was held in the city of Chicago. In 1860 the Republicans called their national convention in the city of Chicago. Previous to that convention there were three prominent candidates mentioned for the Presidency of the United States; one, you remember, was Salmon P. Chase, another was Cameron, the third was Seward.

There were three prominent candidates mentioned. Nobody thought of Abraham Lincoln before this convention, but it is said that during that convention after they had talked the matter over for a few days some of the leading men met at a late hour at night in a room in a Chicago hotel and that the next day Abraham Lincoln was nominated for the Presidency of the United States. And, listen. They gave him as his running mate the governor of a New England State, the Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, an ex-governor of Maine. The Democrats met a short time afterwards in the city of Baltimore and nominated Stephen A. Douglas, a candidate from Lincoln's own State. Now look at the historical parallel. Sixty years later, in 1920, the Republicans met in Chicago. Three prominent candidates were mentioned before the convention—Louden, Johnson, and Wood. But after they talked and discussed it for a time they got together and made up their minds a compromise candidate must be found, and the next day Warren G. Harding was named as Republican candidate for President of the United States, and they gave him as a running mate for Vice President the governor of a New England State, the Hon. CALVIN COOLIDGE, governor of Massachusetts. Mr. Harding's name had been placed before the convention and he was the only candidate to gain on every vote from the first to the last. The Democrats met later in San Francisco, and nominated as their standard bearer a man from Harding's own State.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHALMERS. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Did the gentleman carry out the analogy about the room or leave that out? Does the gentleman propose to offer an amendment to make Harding's birthday a legal holiday on this bill to carry out the analogy?

Mr. CHALMERS. No, sir. Mr. Chairman, I said in opening that I highly respected and honored the father of his country, Washington; the savior of our country, Lincoln; and Harding, the savior of the world, and drew a parallel from history. There is also a personal parallel, and I want to say to the Members of the House that, in my judgment, the administration of Harding will go down in history as one of the great administrations of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LEHLBACH). The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of this bill. I do not know that I can add anything to what the able gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said a few moments ago in his clear and convincing manner. I do not know that the reasons can be stated more accurately than he stated them.

If I thought that it was necessary to pass a bill of this kind to honor the memory and fame of Abraham Lincoln, why of course I would vote for it. I shall not take any time to add to the eulogies that have already been made of Mr. Lincoln, but I will say that the greatest praise which can be said of him is that he was a real workingman. I do not think that we would do honor to this real workingman by taking a day off and spending it in idleness. We already have too many days off now as to Government employees in the District of Columbia. I feel that the Congress of the United States on Mr. Lincoln's birthday, on the 12th of February of each year, can do no greater honor to his memory than to continue at work in the transaction of the Nation's business.

We already have in the District of Columbia as to Government employees 30 days' leave with pay, and 15 days' sick leave, and add to that the legal holidays we already have and it makes 52 days off altogether. I feel sure that if Abraham Lincoln had the power to speak he would not consider it any great honor to him to have a day set apart at the expense of the taxpayers for the Government employees to take another day's rest added to their already quite lengthy resting period. For that reason I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. How many additional employees would it make necessary to add one holiday?

Mr. BLACK. It would be hard to make an estimate on that. Therefore I refrain from trying. But it is quite clear such a bill would increase Government expenses, and I am strictly opposed to it. [Applause.]

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move, if gentlemen do not care to take any more time, that the debate close, and that the Clerk read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the 12th day of February in each year, being the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, is hereby made a legal holiday within the District of Columbia, to be known as Lincoln's Birthday, and in its observance and effect it shall be subject to all provisions of law applicable to holidays within said District.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the enacting clause. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. FOCHT. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 17.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks for tellers. Those in favor of taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixty gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

So tellers were refused.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I will withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I presume the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will make the motion to rise.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the action of the committee to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee rise and report the action of the committee to the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 2310) to declare Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday, had directed him to report that the committee had recommended that the bill be amended by striking out the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey reports that that committee having under consideration the bill H. R. 2310 had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it be amended by striking out the enacting clause thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the action of the committee to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and I object to the vote. No; I will first ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum, and asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 22.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote, and make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as favor the action of the committee in striking out the enacting clause of the bill H. R. 2310 will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 162, nays 89, answered "present" 1, not voting 178, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The House concurs in the action of the committee in striking out the enacting clause.

On motion of Mr. MANN a motion to reconsider the vote by which the enacting clause was stricken out was laid on the table.

MARINE INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2265) to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2265) to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Chairman. I think the Members want to know what the bill is about.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this measure was for a period of something like three years, at intervals, under consideration of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, a majority of which was in favor of its provisions. It was later sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia on account of the bill applying to the District of Columbia alone. That committee, after numerous hearings, having present experts from various cities in the interests there represented, favorably reported the bill. The committee regards the measure highly technical as well as constructive and progressive, and I sincerely hope in the illumination of the various provisions that the House may be attentive to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], whom I regard as an expert on the subject, so that there may not be lost any part of the bill's provisions, since, if it becomes law, it will leave in the hands of American insurance interests vast sums of money now paid to foreign underwriters. That point I believe will be clearly set forth by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and he will show how it will greatly facilitate the underwriting and the protection of the merchant marine of this country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will not the gentleman withhold that for a moment? I have a very important question I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALSH. I will withhold it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it is his purpose to hold this bill before the House on District days as unfinished business until it is completed?

Mr. FOCHT. That would be for the House to determine.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am asking about the purpose of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. I should say it would be held before the committee until the House disposes of it. I deem it of sufficient importance, and especially if the gentleman will permit me to go further, I know there is opposition to this measure. I have served long enough in legislative bodies to know how bills are often killed, interfered with, hampered, hindered, and finally strangled. One way, and a particularly favorite way, often employed, is to get something in front of it. I have seen many bills in front of this, interfering with it, prolonging delay, discussing them for a whole day and then defeating them simply that this bill might not be considered. I propose, if possible, to get it out of the road whether it is passed or defeated.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then I understand the gentleman to mean that on District days hereafter until this bill has been concluded it will be the business that will be called up unless there is some emergency?

Mr. FOCHT. We will go along in a rational way, and if opponents undertake to interfere and impede, throw obstacles in the way so that we can have no further legislation, but talk it to death—certainly not. I will use my judgment after counsel with the committee, but try to have it concluded in a careful and successful way.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then we do not know whether this bill will be up on the next District day or not.

Mr. FOCHT. I hope that it will and that the gentleman will help. I hope we can dispose of it, and I trust the gentleman will assist as well as Members on this side.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, that statement does not illumine the situation much. I would like to know what is in the gentleman's mind in regard to it. Is this to be the District business until it is concluded?

Mr. FOCHT. I shall be guided by conditions as they present themselves from time to time. If this is to be blocked, if it is to be hamstrung, I am going to find out if possible, with the gentleman's help.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not suggesting hamstringing it.

Mr. FOCHT. That is what has happened so far—I will be candid with the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It has not happened to-day.

Mr. FOCHT. It has been happening for weeks. I will not go into details, for it has nothing to do with the merits of the case. But I will say in all candor that I expect to go along with all bills, this or any other bill, and meet the contingencies as they arise.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, with that illuminating statement does not the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] think he ought to withhold his point of no quorum? [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important measure. It is a measure which I feel properly belongs to another committee, but this committee has held very extensive hearings upon it, has heard testimony of experts, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, and a measure that has already passed the Senate. With the exception of explaining one or two amendments in half a dozen or a dozen lines, there was not a word of debate or explanation in the other body on this measure. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], colleague of the distinguished chairman of the committee, is very familiar with this. He is a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and appeared before the House committee and the Senate committee in favor of this measure. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania said, it has been impending here for several District days. I think if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] is going to make an explanation of this bill, we should have a larger attendance to hear and understand it, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in view of this manifest disposition to delay, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and on a division, demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, there were—ayes 21, noes 44.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. FOCHT and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 8, noes 35.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, my point of no quorum is still pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-five Members present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill S. 2265, to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, had found itself without a quorum, that he had directed the roll to be called, and that 249 Members had answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in the list of the absentees for printing in the Journal.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS]. [Applause.]

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it may appear to you that a bill to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia may not be of very much importance. Yet at the same time, if you understood the reasons for the bill, I think you will probably recognize that it is the only thing that we can do in the way of legislation to improve marine insurance business in this country. In 1919, in September, after an investigation in the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee lasting a couple of months, we found that marine insurance was one of the three important subjects that we would have to look into and endeavor to bolster up in order to keep our ships at sea. The committee spent probably a year and a half on this work, in connection with the Shipping Board. Our first investigation was made by questionnaires. We questioned every large insurance company in the country, particularly those that claimed they were doing a marine insurance. We found that in some cases the companies had included automobile insurance with marine insurance, and they were really doing only automobile insurance. After we got these questionnaires together and began to compile statistics from them, we found that pretty nearly two-thirds of our marine insurance was either exported as reinsurance or was directly written in other countries. It was a rather peculiar condition of affairs. It did not seem right. Yet I presume on account of our having no ships it was natural. However, we found that in settling losses of marine insurance all documents and all data in regard to our shipments went into the hands of our foreign competitors, that they were fully armed as to what we were doing, what prices we were charging, what freights we were paying, and whatever other information that would go along naturally in settling losses was in their possession, and when they took the policies direct, as they did in many cases, they knew just exactly what we were doing in foreign countries.

We found that the vast bulk of the insurance was in the hands of England; that most of our companies doing marine insurance did not feel like risking the large sums of money that are involved in cargo insurance, in some cases running up as high as ten and twenty million dollars, and our companies would take a small percentage of the amount, possibly $100,000 or $150,000, and then would reinsure it wherever they could get reinsurance at favorable terms. Some of our insurance companies were reinsuring in English companies, and they again were reinsuring the same risk in German companies. As a matter of fact, the German reinsurance companies became almost standard in the world for doing reinsurance, so much so that when the war came on we had to take over the assets of the German marine insurance companies to meet the risks incurred. We did that by act of Congress, I think, or by Executive order. The situation did not look good to us, so after our investigation was completed that far we called in a number of large underwriting companies that really did marine insurance. They came down, mostly represented by their presidents. We told them we did not see how this condition of affairs could continue, that we thought the reinsurance ought to be done in this country, that we had plenty of insurance companies to do a large line. They replied that we would find that that was not true. They said that they had tried to get the insurance companies to take it, but, as one gentleman said, owing to the numerous troubles insurance companies have with the different State administrations in regard to reinsurance companies and the lack of law for reinsurance companies, it was not possible for them to get any line of reinsurance in this country worth considering.

Well, after working on that six or eight months—it took some time to get those people together—it was proposed we form a reinsurance syndicate in the country. We did that, and with the aid of the Shipping Board we formed what is known as Syndicate B and Syndicate C. Syndicate B took a line on Shipping Board ships of $2,000,000 on the hulls and Syndicate C took a line of $2,600,000. We had a number of insurance companies in the country that were known as admitted insurance companies and others whose stock was owned by foreign companies. In Syndicate C $600,000 was taken up by these admitted companies. In Syndicate B the $2,000,000 was purely American. Now, a policy of this kind insuring ships was not known in this country before, but since that time these syndicates have been in operation, and they have been taking care of the hull insurance very well. Unfortunately, we have not been able yet to complete any arrangements in regard to cargo insurance, but we expect before very long to do so. Cargo insurance covered a great body of information that has been gathered by the older companies for years and considered by them as part of their capital, and they hesitate very much about spreading broadcast their experience.

Rates are not, however, like they are in ordinary fire insurance. The rates are variable. Commissions are not established like in the ordinary fire insurance, and they are variable. We found brokers in this country who sent most of their business to the other side. We found a lot of insurance going out of this country directly to escape taxation here. We passed in our revenue bill a tax of 3 per cent on export insurance, but we got very little tax. It could not be collected because a lot of brokers were running around New York and other maritime cities with their offices in their pockets, and they sent their insurance by cable to the other side and placed it there. It rather alarmed us when going into the figures to find out the amount of premiums that were exported from the country. In 1919 the total was $314,509,000. Of that $55,000,000 was marine insurance and $176,000,000 for fire insurance and $81,000,000 casualty insurance. The amount of insurance in American companies owned by the British was included in that sum. These figures were compiled by Best & Co. It was figured also that $100,000,000 of premiums were also cabled out of the country, making a total of $414,000,000 worth of money which went out of the country every year for insurance premiums alone, most of that going to England.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. I will.

Mr. EVANS. Can the gentleman state now in connection with that the amount of losses which were paid under those premiums?

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not think the losses are given, but I will look over Best's figures here. No; the losses are not given. But I can say this, that all marine insurance is loaded 30 to 40 per cent, commissions and expenses, when it starts, and when you take out a fire policy to-day it is loaded 35 per cent or 40 per cent, which, of course, did not return to this country because of those commissions and expenses. A great many large insurance brokers here have their offices in London, and they cable insurance over to London, and as long as the exchange was stable, why, they managed to do very well and get away from taxation here. The tax here runs 7½ per cent and the tax on the other side is about 3½ to 4 per cent. We are about 3½ to 4 per cent on the wrong side in taxation. So after we had gotten these syndicates working and everything moving along nicely we turned our efforts to cargo insurance, and we found that there was another obstacle in the road. One was, for instance, down in Brazil, we will say, taking on a cargo of rubber. If we went to an American company we had to get a half dozen policies in a half dozen companies to cover the different marine risks. Now, in the States we divide our insurance up, and, outside of three or four States, and more, I hope, this year, the insurance is generally for a certain line, and we found that was not true of the English companies.

They have modernized their business in the last 50 years, and an English company to-day can write any kind of insurance. They can write life insurance if they choose and they can write fire insurance if they choose. They can write any kind of insurance that it is possible to conceive of. They are required, of course, to hold reserves for each special kind that they take up and to register for that line of business, and act as if they were several distinct companies under one roof.

Now, what happened in Brazil? If you went to an English bank you would find an English insurance company there, and all that a man had to do who wanted to borrow money on a cargo was to fix up a policy with one man, and another man advanced the money. But if that man wanted to get American insurance he had to get a number of insurance companies to cover his interests before he could go to a bank to borrow money, and then they all had to look into the policies before they would do anything. That was the trouble that a man would have in attempting to get insurance on foreign cargoes. It seemed as if we would have to do something to change that condition.

Another thing bothered us. We found that the English would put a rate, if necessary, below the cost in certain portions of the world and then charge a higher rate in other portions of the world. We found out that if we undertook to afford insurance facilities in this country—and we are finding that it is necessary more and more to-day—the English would give us a very low rate and would charge higher rates on some nation where there was no competition. That situation did not look good to us. We called the insurance companies together, and they said it was not a good state of affairs, but they said the only way to avoid it was to establish insurance companies in the foreign countries. But the trouble is that when we make a foreign investment we must count on that money as being away from us all the time. So this bill provides for the establishment of foreign companies and the holding of proper reserves and an allowance for a certain time, and everything over that can be counted as reserve here in the District.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. EDMONDS. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill, which comes to us from the Senate, is passed practically as it was introduced there, with no changes to amount to anything. Is not that the case?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman introduced a companion bill in the House which is practically identical with the one under consideration?

Mr. EDMONDS. Practically.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill is about 37 pages, mostly of legal phrases and terms and provisions. Is not that so? The gentleman has been here a long time and is well acquainted with the personnel of the District Committee, with its chairman and other members. The Chairman is not a lawyer. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], who introduced this bill of 37 pages of legal phrases and terms and provisions, is not a lawyer himself, is he, and has never practiced?

Mr. EDMONDS. I have never been a lawyer, thank God. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Yet the chairman, who has been a distinguished newspaper man, but no lawyer, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has been a distinguished citizen and legislator, but not a lawyer, are fathering this 37-page bill of legal phrases and terms and provisions here. Now, what I wanted to ask the gentleman is this: Does he not think it best and wise for some lawyer who favors the measure to get up and explain the legal effect of all these various clauses and phrases and terms and provisions in 37 pages of a bill which may mean the life and death of lots of insurance companies here in the land?

Mr. EDMONDS. Let me say to the gentleman that he is on the Committee on the District of Columbia, and he is a noted lawyer, and the bill was reported out of that committee unanimously.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, "the gentleman from Texas" was serious, not facetious.

Mr. EDMONDS. I am serious. I say I hope the gentleman will get up and explain.

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the gentleman this question. He intimated to the House that by reason of the fact that we had an American merchant marine now, this legislation is necessary to uphold and foster and maintain our merchant marine. What is the function of syndicate B?

Mr. EDMONDS. Syndicate B is to insure Shipping Board ships.

Mr. BLANTON. Syndicate B insures every single ship that the United States Shipping Board sells to others?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; it only insures the interest of the party purchasing it.

Mr. BLANTON. It insures the interest of the United States in the ships that are sold?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; it does not.

Mr. BLANTON. Does it not insure the interest of the United States in ships which the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation sells?

Mr. EDMONDS. When the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation sells a ship and gets $50,000 or $100,000, or whatever it may be, on account, Syndicate B insures that $50,000 or $100,000 for the outsider.

Mr. BLANTON. Then if the Shipping Board does its own insurance, and thereby protects the interests of the United States Government, and in addition to that we have section 16 making this admission—that none of the taxes or fees prescribed under sections 8 to 13, inclusive, shall be imposed upon business written within the district by "Syndicate B," a marine insurance syndicate created by agreement between the United States Shipping Board and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and a number of subscribing American marine insurance companies, under date of June 28, 1920, for the purpose of insuring all American steel steamships which the United States Shipping Board and/or United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation may hereafter sell to others, to the full extent of the unpaid purchase price thereof, and also such other American steel steamships heretofore sold by said Shipping Board and/or by said corporation as are acceptable for insurance to the Syndicate B subscribers—

Mr. EDMONDS. I think I made a mistake in answering the gentleman. I mean that when the Shipping Board sells a ship, the portion of that ship that they take a mortgage for is insured in Syndicate B.

Mr. BLANTON. But if the Shipping Board does its own insurance, thereby protecting the interests of the Government, and if these American marine insurance companies doing business in the District of Columbia under the present law are able to take care of the balance of that insurance, what is the necessity of this new marine insurance law?

Mr. EDMONDS. If the gentleman will just give me a little time I will try to explain.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Perhaps it will be well to explain right here what the gentleman means by saying that the Shipping Board does its own insuring. In fact, it has no insurance at all, has it?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is virtually it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It carries its own risk?

Mr. EDMONDS. It carries its own risk.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit me, if there is money in the insurance business, if there are profits in it that go as dividends to the stockholders, and if the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the United States Shipping Board have as many ships as the United States Government now owns in its merchant marine, why is it not good business for the United States to carry its own insurance?

Mr. EDMONDS. It does carry it.

Mr. BLANTON. Then you are not providing in this measure for insurance for our own ships?

Mr. EDMONDS. No; not at all. If you allow me to explain how this bill comes about, you will understand.

Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. EDMONDS. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to ask me a question?

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman a question, but if he is going to make an explanation I will defer my question.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to explain how the bill came about. Then I will be very glad to answer any question.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

Mr. EDMONDS. After we had gotten to this point there was a meeting of insurance commissioners in New York. We went over to that meeting. Admiral Benson went along. Mr. Deane was with us. We had Prof. Huebner as expert. Prof. Huebner is probably the best expert on marine insurance in the country. He has written two or three books about it, and he knows about it. He was employed by the Shipping Board, not by any outsider. He has no interest in any insurance company. As I say, he is considered the best expert in the country to-day on marine insurance.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Where is he located?

Mr. EDMONDS. At the University of Pennsylvania. We went over to meet the insurance commissioners, and we had a long talk with them. Most of the marine insurance people along the coast were very much in favor of trying to get a national bill for marine insurance, but after investigation to find some ways and means of doing it we found that it was impossible, because the Supreme Court has decided in a number of cases that insurance is a service and not a commodity, that it can not come under the commodity clause of the Constitution, and if we were to attempt to put anything like that through it would be declared unconstitutional. Well, we called in a number of the different experts. Prof. Huebner and myself met pretty nearly every Friday night. We talked this over and came to the conclusion that if we could get some kind of uniformity in the marine insurance laws in the different States we would endeavor to do so. The only place left for us to originate a bill that would cover marine insurance with some degree of uniformity and in an up-to-date manner was in the District of Columbia. So we prepared this bill and brought it out last year. It was not a bill prepared by the insurance companies. It was not prepared by anybody except ourselves.

We took it to several of the commissioners and they were enthusiastically in favor of it. Some of the commissioners to-day are writing in for copies of the bill. The insurance commissioner of Pennsylvania got two of the sections through, the ones in regard to foreign insurance. The great hitch with most of the States has seemed to be on the taxing proposition. As to the rest of it, they seem to be fairly well agreed. As the bill stands to-day it is a technical bill. It contains many things that I would have difficulty in explaining to you. It has been built up by studying the best insurance practices. After we got through with it we submitted it to the presidents of the companies and to insurance brokers. Some of them made some good objections. We made some changes. Other things we would not change because they affected the principles that we wanted to bring out. A great many of the older insurance companies did not like to see the younger insurance companies coming into the business. This gives the newer insurance companies an opportunity.

We then submitted it to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. They approved of it. We then submitted it to the Shipping Board. They took it up with experts from all over the country. I have a letter here from Mr. Lasker approving of it. It has been approved all along the line. Undoubtedly the technical part of it is correct. The only things that we are doing in it consist of five brief points. One is to provide for the writing of a multiple line. The second is to provide for a reinsurance company. The third is to provide for investment in the foreign company. The fourth is to arrange the taxing problem properly, and the fifth is to arrange for the licensing of brokers, all of which are necessary.

We found that in the District of Columbia there was only an insurance code, that no insurance law had been passed, I think, since 1882, and that there had not been a modern insurance law passed here. We found that they need a law badly. In some portions of the bill you will find that it runs over the line of marine insurance in order to give these people some way of working out a situation that is not provided for in the law at the present day.

Now, after all these different investigations we brought the bill out. It went to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee last session and they approved of it. When we introduced it at this session the Speaker thought it belonged to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The result of it was that it went to the District Committee. In the Senate they sent it to the Commerce Committee. That committee had insurance brokers and experts and went very thoroughly into it, and the House committee went into it very thoroughly, spending two or three days and getting information as to whether or not the bill was right. We found that there were some portions where we had made mistakes, and they were changed; but as it is now I think it is as near perfect for a modern insurance bill as you can have.

Yet at the same time men will come here and say that they do not believe in that way of taxation; and yet it was the most foolish way in the world for taxation. They taxed on the gross premiums, and so handed it to the customers and they paid it. They taxed on the gross earnings, so that an insurance company could lose money and yet pay taxes.

We had an investigation of several companies to get the amount of their taxation. We found that 71 American marine-insurance companies paid $19,500,000 taxes; that includes fire taxes, and the tax was passed on to the customer. Out of that the Federal marine tax was $3,593,000, and the marine State tax $2,037,000. So you see the companies were taxed very heavily. We went into the premiums, and found as a result that in particular premiums between our companies and some companies in England the difference was one-quarter of 1 per cent, which gave them an advantage.

Now, when the gentleman from Texas asked his question I was talking about the foreign companies; 18 companies have combined together. They have established branches in New Zealand, Australia, China, and, I think, in Spain and Portugal. In other words, we are going to fight the enemy all over the world for insurance. If this bill goes through and is copied by the States—and it has already been copied in some particulars by Oregon, Pennsylvania, and Connecticut—if it goes through in all the States, it will lead to the establishment of foreign insurance companies, combined, cooperative insurance companies, 18 or 20 combining and doing business, and in that way we will cut down the competition and not allow competitors to put up the prices in one part of the world and lower them in another.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman an additional 10 minutes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to call attention to one thing in particular. Do not get it in your minds that this bill will effect any State that you represent.

If a company originating under this bill goes into the State of New York or any State, it has to comply with the laws of that State. We have no idea at all of interfering with the taxes of a State, but we are seeking to modernize insurance and to bring it so that we will have competitive companies, capable of doing business just as cheaply and efficiently as the companies on the other side. There are no more efficient insurance companies to-day than the English companies.

Some people say we are trying to do something that will affect the State of Wisconsin and the State of Minnesota or other States, but it does not do so; it does not affect them in the least. In Texas we would have difficulty in doing insurance at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet in the report which the gentleman brings to the House there is a statement that he is presenting this to the United States Government for all the States as a model insurance law, and in passing it by Congress you are passing it hoping that the 48 States of the Union will adopt it.

Mr. EDMONDS. We do not have to hope; they are adopting it already.

Mr. BLANTON. Then there is some reason for saying that its purpose is to affect the States outside of merely furnishing a law for the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman knows that the States will do as they please.

Mr. BLANTON. Sometimes they can not do as they please; they can not do as they please in railroad matters.

Mr. EDMONDS. They can as far as insurance goes; this does not affect the States, and they would have difficulty in doing business in the gentleman's State anyway, even if this bill is passed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why?

Mr. EDMONDS. Because of State laws. They would have to change their law to do business there. Here is what is going to happen in the District of Columbia. There are three large reinsurance companies being formed to come to the District of Columbia. If we can get reinsurance companies here to supply reinsurance facilities—and I think we can stand 20 or 30 big reinsurance companies with $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 capital—we can keep the money in this country providing we can cut the costs down.

I heard of one in New York the other day, I heard of one in Philadelphia, I heard of one in Detroit that are being formed as reinsurance companies to come here. That is where the benefit comes in in this insurance act to the District of Columbia. You do not want manufactories in the District of Columbia; you do not want any smoke; you do not want anything that is going to disturb the beauty of the city, but you can bring these reinsurance companies to the District of Columbia, and the Capital of the country is the proper place for them to be. They do not go out into the States. They take what the other fellow can not take care of.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. What will be the advantage to the reinsurance companies that are organized and doing business in the District of Columbia as compared with such a company organized in a State, having in mind the matter of local taxation?

Mr. EDMONDS. In the States where reinsurance has been taken in these foreign companies the taxation did not affect it, it was only the part of the insurance retained by the companies. The State laws are different in some of the States. I have in mind now the State of New York. In other words, if I had a policy for a million dollars and I reinsured $900,000 worth of that, I would take credit for the premium that I paid out for the $900,000 to the reinsurance company, and my net premium only is taxed on the basis of the amount that I retain. That was true in New York, and, I think, in Pennsylvania, but not true in some of the Western States. There are 48 different States, and I think you could find almost anything in the different laws that you want to. We have gone through the New York and Pennsylvania laws and the New Jersey laws, and we had the California laws explained to us.

The California law is a little difficult. The reinsurance companies could do business, but it would be a little difficult for them to enter into California or in these other States that have antitrust laws. If the States would only recognize reinsurance companies, there is no reason why reinsurance companies should not be in any State of the Union, but we found in some States they had very lax laws, or very indifferent laws for reinsurance companies. Since we have brought this matter to their attention they have taken a great deal of interest in it. Of our first report we got out 60,000 copies, and they were distributed to the shippers of the country. We had 5,000 copies and the Shipping Board had 5,000 copies and 50,000 copies were purchased by the different institutions and sent out to the shippers as a matter of interest and as a history of marine insurance. The second report that we got out was on legislative obstructions to the development of marine insurance in the United States, and it tells how insurance is affected by the laws of the various States. Our bill resulted from our findings in this, the Capital of the country is the natural place for reinsurance companies. Herebefore the reinsurance business has gone to England and to Germany and all over the world. It is a proposition that is not exactly like insurance. A man does not have an office, as far as the public is concerned, in a reinsurance company. He simply has an office where he gets his correspondence, and he does his reinsurance through that office for other companies.

Mr. EVANS. Is it the purpose or object of the bill to concentrate reinsurance in the Capital in case this bill is passed?

Mr. EDMONDS. There is nothing in it to do that.

Mr. EVANS. An insurance company in New York City is subject to a State tax?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. It is also subject to a city tax?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. An insurance company located in the District of Columbia pays only the municipal tax. Is not that true?

Mr. EDMONDS. Oh, no.

Mr. EVANS. What other tax does it pay besides the Federal tax?

Mr. EDMONDS. It is right here in the bill. They pay the local tax, but catch the difference in the tax in this bill. In this bill we tax the net profits of the company, while in the gentleman's State and in my State and in every State in the Union they tax the gross premiums. In this bill we are trying to do what they do in England. We do not want to take an insurance company that has virtually lost money year after year until it has eaten up its capital and tax them before they have earned a profit.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As a matter of fact, the insurance which will be rewritten in the District of Columbia, in other words, the insurance covered by the reinsurance contracts taken by these companies formed in the District of Columbia, will absorb the business that heretofore has gone exclusively to foreign countries.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is the idea.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Because wherever it could have been placed in the United States it has been placed.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is right.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And we are simply providing a place for the reinsurance that formerly went to England, Germany, to Scandinavia, and other countries, so that it may stay in the United States.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is correct. Let me analyze this tax question: The marine taxes and fees paid by the 71 companies, for example, amounted to 6.18 per cent of the total net marine premium income of the companies. In other words, for every $100 of marine premiums received and retained by the companies, the Federal and State Governments took over $6, and this before any allowance is made for loss payments and expenses of operation. Fire taxes and fees, by way of contrast, amounted to 4.76 per cent of the net fire premiums, while marine and fire taxes and fees combined were equal to 5.10 per cent of the combined net premium income from both sources. The total taxes and fees paid during a single year by these 71 companies amounted to 22.49 per cent of their capital stock, and to 7.66 per cent of the capital stock and surplus combined. A further comparison shows that the taxes paid by these companies during 1918 were equal in amount to 105.59 per cent of the total dividends declared during the year, to 59.27 per cent of dividends declared plus the total increase in surplus for the year, to 125.62 per cent of the underwriting profit of all the companies, and to 53.7 per cent of the total business gain.

They added to your premium; they handicapped you. I will show you how this works out, for instance, in the case of Egyptian cotton. You could get a lower rate from New York, or rather if you had a ship at Alexandria to ship your cotton to London you could get a quarter per cent less in New York on that cargo from Alexandria to London than in Alexandria. When you have a cargo worth several million dollars that means something.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. [Applause.]

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time and I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 2265, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WOODS of Virginia, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

To Mr. LANKFORD (on request of Mr. LARSEN of Georgia), on account of sickness of himself.

To Mr. HERRICK, until February 18, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS from the Committee on Enrolled Bills reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9724. An act making appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 2373. An act to authorize association of producers of agricultural products.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 14, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

531. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Wrangell Narrows, Alaska, with a view of deepening the channel to accommodate present and future commerce and the determination of the relative advantages and practicability of the above improvement of Wrangell Narrows as compared with the improvement of Dry Straits, recommended in House Document No. 68, Sixty-fifth Congress (H. Doc. No. 179); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

532. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting report of the Director General of Railroads, covering the period which dates from the relinquishment of Federal operation to the end of the last calendar year (H. Doc. No. 180); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. TINCHER: Committee on Agriculture. S. 2023. An act defining the crop failure in the production of wheat, rye, or oats by those who borrowed money from the Government of the United States for the purchase of wheat, rye, or oats for seed, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 697). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BOX: Committee on Claims. H. R. 540. A bill for the relief of Bradley Sykes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 698). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GLYNN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5668. A bill for the relief of Cora T. Dering; with amendments (Rept. No. 699). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LOGAN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7052. A bill for the relief of G. C. Caldwell; without amendment (Rept. No. 700). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: A bill (H. R. 10407) authorizing the counties of Jasper, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (H. R. 10408) to authorize the leasing of public lands in Alaska for grazing and fur farming; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ANTHONY: A bill (H. R. 10409) to extend the benefits of the acts of June 27, 1890, May 9, 1900, February 6, 1907, and May 1, 1920, to include certain officers and privates of the Kansas State Militia and of all State militias who saw service in the field under command of officers of the Regular or Volunteer Army of the United States from 1861 to 1865 in suppressing the War of the Rebellion, and to the widows and minor children of such persons; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALLINGER: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, requesting the Federal Government to send the steamship Leviathan to the Charlestown (Mass.) Navy Yard to be reconditioned; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ROGERS: Memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging the Federal Government to send the steamship Leviathan to the Charlestown Navy Yard to be reconditioned; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 14, 1922.

(Legislative day of Monday, February 13, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

REINTERMENT OF SOLDIER DEAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Quartermaster General of the Army transmitting a list of American soldier dead returned from overseas to be reinterred in the Arlington National Cemetery Thursday, February 16, 1922, at 2.30 p. m., which was ordered to lie on the table for the information of Senators.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of old Marine Corps records on the files of the Navy Department (Headquarters, United States Marine Corps), not needed in the transaction of public business and having no historic interest, and asking for action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The President pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE and Mr. PITTMAN members of the committee on the part of the Senate and directed that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the chairman of the Tricouncil of Ministers of the African Methodist Episcopal, the African Methodist Episcopal Zion, and the Colored Methodist Episcopal churches assembled at Montgomery, Ala., praying for the passage of the so-called Dyer antilynching bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Association of State Foresters at Chestertown, N. Y., September 20-22, 1921, praying for the enactment of legislation relative to the control of pine-bark beetles, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Association of State Foresters at Chestertown, N. Y., favoring the control of the white-pine blister rust, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Association of State Foresters at Chestertown, N. Y., protesting against the proposed transfer of the Forest Service from the Department of Agriculture to another department, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the International Seamen's Union of America, at Chicago, Ill., January 9-24, 1922, favoring the passage of the so-called Lehlbach reclassification bill, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the International Seamen's Union of America, at Chicago, Ill., January 9-24, 1922, favoring the enactment of legislation providing that supervising inspectors of the Steamboat-Inspection Service be included under the classified civil service, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. STERLING. I present a petition of certain citizens of Menno, Freeman, and Olivet, S. Dak., praying for the revival of United States Grain Corporation. A similar petition has already been printed in the Record, and I do not ask that this petition be printed. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of any soldiers' bonus bill in cash form, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LADD presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of citizens of Baker and York, N. Dak., and vicinity, signed by J. C. Allen, Elling Pederson, and Senator W. J. Church, favoring the revival of the Government Grain Corporation, so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petitions of Mrs. A. G. Frendberg and 12 others of Hillsboro, and Henry Schlenker and 31 others of Jud and vicinity, both in the State of North Dakota, praying for the revival of the Government Grain Corporation so as to stabilize prices of certain farm products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. CUMMINS), from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 539) to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 496) thereon.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7881) to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to ratify the agreements of certain persons made with the commissioner of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii, and to issue land patents to those eligible under the terms of said agreements, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 3147) to provide for the settlement of disputes between employers and employees in the coal-mining industry; to establish a board for the adjustment of such disputes; to stabilize conditions of production; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 3148) granting an increase of pension to Lorinda Porter (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3149) to cede unreserved public lands to the several States; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. WATSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 3150) to reorganize and to promote the efficiency of the United States Public Health Service; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 3151) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Lloyd (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 3152) granting a pension to F. A. Merrill; and
A bill (S. 3153) granting an increase of pension to James Brophy; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,500 for education, civilization, industrial assistance, and advancement of the Alabama and Coushatta Indians in Polk County, Tex., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10329, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SALARIES OF TEACHERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3136) to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

VIEWS OF MR. JUSTICE CLARKE ON LEGISLATIVE QUESTIONS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, in the Chicago Journal of Commerce of February 9 the headlines of the principal article on the front page read as follows:

Justice Clarke urges prompt cancellation of war debt. Tells Cleveland commerce men political situation requires immediate action.

I have seen similar articles in a number of papers advocating cancellation of the foreign debts. I have the greatest respect and admiration for Justice Clarke. I happen to know him pleasantly. I think he is one of the very best men on the Supreme Court Bench. However, I think that the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States should keep out of any matters that are political. For a member of that body to go away from Washington or to remain here and discuss publicly a matter that is being considered by the Congress of the United States is something that I think is most unfortunate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether he considers it a political question or an economic question?

Mr. HARRIS. It is both. I do not think it is the part of wisdom for a Supreme Court Justice to publicly discuss matters to be decided by Congress. I think that the nomination of Mr. Hughes for President, a Justice of the Supreme Court, by a political party, although a man for whom I have the very high est regard, was one of the most unfortunate things that has ever happened. The Supreme Court should look after its own affairs. Its members have the highest duty to perform of any men connected with the Government, and I hope they will not interfere with other matters. At the very time Justice Clarke delivered the address in regard to the cancellation of our foreign debts the recent conference was in session and delegates from those countries were our guests. In December I introduced in the Senate a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the Senate that our foreign debts should not be canceled. On account of the conference being in session and at the request of Senator McCUMBER, chairman of the committee in charge of the refunding bill, I did not bring the resolution before the Senate at that time. I have the very highest regard for the members of the Supreme Court, as well as the court itself, and I should regret any prejudice against them on account of public utterances on matters not relating to their duties.

VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, on yesterday there was put in the RECORD, at the request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], an editorial which appeared in Collier's Weekly on the subject of President Wilson, the World War, and the American soldier. I was struck particularly by one portion of the editorial, that portion which referred to the glorious light that was in the eye of the American soldier in France, a light which attracted the attention of French surgeons and which they said was not to be found in the eye of any other soldier serving in that titanic struggle.

I can well understand why there should have been this light in the eye of the American soldier. For months before he left the country he had been the object of every possible attention, of the warmest praise, of the strongest encouragement, every effort having been made to arouse in him the fires of patriotism leading to service and to sacrifice. Banquets had been given in his honor, and speeches were made in his honor. Newspapers had trumpeted his merits, predicting triumph for him when he went abroad. He was classed as a crusader going forth to rescue civilization, to plant throughout the world a new gospel of democracy, of liberty, of the rights of small peoples to self-government. As he took his departure there was the music of brass bands, ovations, loving farewells; and he left his country no doubt thrilled to his very soul in the belief that he was a crusader, consecrated to the highest ideals, nerved to the noblest service.

That light in his eye, attracting the attention of the French surgeons, is no longer there, Mr. President, and will never be seen again by surgeons or by anyone else.

He was welcomed back home with acclamations. The returning hero, the conqueror who fought abroad and won the greatest triumph in the history of man, was enthusiastically welcomed home. "Behold the conquering hero comes." Then what? There was the burial of an unknown soldier here in Washington City. Grave Senators, the highest public officials, the most prominent citizens, attended, and the unknown soldier was buried here with pomp and ceremony, at great expense. During the funeral there was a known soldier who committed suicide in this city because he was on the verge of starvation and despair had taken possession of his soul. There was no light of glory in his eye then. His own countrymen had extinguished it by their coldness and their neglect.

On yesterday the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], addressing the Senate at length in opposition to the bonus bill, took the position that the disabled soldier alone was entitled to compensation at this time. Mr. President, did I misunderstand the Senator? I thought the Senator from Idaho was about to rise, and that perhaps I had misunderstood him. I will state it again, and if I am incorrect I invite correction. I understood the Senator from Idaho to say that the only line of distinction he could draw between the soldier and other citizens was that of disability.

Mr. President, I can not indorse that line of reasoning. Are battles won by disabled soldiers? Those who are killed in battle die "the beautiful death of a soldier," but they do not win the battle. The disabled soldier, nobly risking his life and being put out of action, does not win the battle. No matter how much the dead man may have contributed, no matter how much the disabled man may have contributed, he does not win the battle. The Hindenburg line, and all other lines, are broken by the men who are neither dead nor disabled. Two soldiers confronting the enemy, equal in bravery, equal in the sense of service, take exactly the same risk. One is shot down. The other goes forward and wins the victory.

In what degree is the patriotism of the one less than that of the other? By what process of reasoning do you reach the conclusion that the man who fortunately escapes injury or death deserves less at the hands of his country than the man who is so unfortunate in taking the same risks as to be disabled or killed? Mr. President, the test of the Senator from Idaho has never been applied anywhere at any time. It certainly never has been applied in this country.

The other night I was reading the biography of Capt. James Lawrence, who is known to fame because, when being carried below decks, mortally wounded, he said to those who were bearing him down, "Don't give up the ship. Blow her up, but do not give her up." The biography is written by Lieut. Albert Gleaves, of the United States Navy, and has an introduction by the late Admiral Dewey.

I find on page 34 of this volume an account given of the sea fight in the Mediterranean, between the Enterprise, commanded by Lieut. Sterett, on which vessel Lawrence was serving at the time, and a Tripolitan cruiser. In the sea fight many of the enemy were killed and many wounded, but not a single American sailor or marine was hurt.

The affair created great interest in the United States, and Congress rewarded Sterett with promotion and a sword and voted a month's pay to each of the crew.

That extra month's pay, Mr. President, was as truly a bonus as if they had been given outright $100 apiece. There has been some discussion here as to whether compensation is the same as gratuity. Mr. President, it is a distinction without a difference. A gift is something totally unconnected with service; it is something that is given without any precedent consideration or any consideration expected. It is totally disassociated from value received—a gift.

Mr. President, suppose you call compensation just that. It is for the service. Suppose you lift it out of the Treasury and call it a gratuity; it is based on service. Therefore it is not a gift. It seems to me that the Senator from Idaho was somewhat confused in his reasoning when he took the position that in a case like this there could be a difference between a gratuity and a compensation, both being based upon service.

The Senator from Idaho takes the position that the soldier who went overseas deserves no extra consideration; that he is on the same plane with the 20,000,000 Americans who were subject to draft but who did not leave this country. I can not think that a just conclusion, Mr. President. Those who remained had the advantages of being in touch with the home folks, with home associations, with home conditions, with those whom they loved. Those home conditions and home associations have always been considered not only valuable but invaluable. To lose them has not only been always considered a misfortune, but one of the greatest misfortunes. To be an exile against one's will is a severe form of punishment. It has always been so considered.

Why, Mr. President, that ballad of "Home, Sweet Home," which is, perhaps, more familiar to every household in the English-speaking world than any other, is based upon the exile's regret that he is an exile from home. No doubt, Mr. President, when you were at school you heard the boys declaim, as I have so often done, that poem called "Bingen on the Rhine," beginning:

A soldier of the Legion lay dying in Algiers—

And the whole poem reflects his sadness that—

There was lack of woman's nursing, there was dearth of woman's tears.

Absent from home, dying on a strange battle field in a strange land, service abroad during the World War was something different. There was no furlough, Mr. President, as there was during our Civil War.

The soldier could not rest and refresh himself among his neighbors, his friends, his relatives. There was no respite from the constant drain upon his nerves, his strength, and his spirits. He could not even correspond with his home folks. His letters were rigidly censored; there was no free communication between him and those in this country who did not even know his whereabouts or his condition. When before was there ever a censorship of the soldiers' private mail? There was none during the Civil War; there was none during the Mexican War; there was none during the Spanish-American War. Think, Mr. President, what would be your mental anxiety, your mental agony, if, having a son on the other side serving in the ranks, you could not know where he was, what his condition was, or even whether he was dead or alive. In your station, Mr. President, you could have learned, but the ordinary man, the common citizen, could not hear what had become of his boy, and the boy could not write back and tell him. Then think that they were in the midst of strange people, speaking a language they did not comprehend, undergoing the severities of a climate to which they were unused. Think of the pain of the long march; think of the sufferings of the hungry soldier; think of the sufferings of the soldiers packed in box cars so close together for from 12 to 24 hours at a time that there was no room for anybody to lie down to snatch a moment's sleep. Do you tell me that, after a soldier has undergone all this and been strong enough to maintain his health, when he comes home he should be treated as if he had never left it, and had never undergone these severities of service abroad, 3,000 miles from his own country? Of the 20,000,000 men of draft age who stayed at home, how many of them underwent an hour of the torment which nearly every private soldier will tell you he, at some time or other, had to endure out of the very necessities of the case?

I do not understand, Mr. President, why there would be any effort to attach odium to the word "bonus" or "compensation." I should not like to undertake to occupy a position which would to that extent reproach the memory of the Father of His Country. Washington took his bonus for the French and Indian war, and so did all his soldiers—a magnificent bonus in the way of land grants. Washington took his bonus for his service in the Revolutionary War. He did not get disabled; he went through two wars and never received a scratch; yet nobody doubted his bravery. He exposed himself like a private soldier. He said himself that the whistle of bullets by his ears was sweet music, but he took the bonus, although a prouder man never lived. Surely he would not have degraded himself in his own eyes if the taking of a bonus was a degradation.

When Gen. Lafayette revisited this country in 1824, I believe, Congress voted him a bonus of $200,000 and 20,000 acres of land in Florida. Land in Florida may not at that time have been very valuable, but the $200,000 at that time would be equaled to-day by a million dollars. Allowing for the difference in the value of the dollar, if Congress should pass an equivalent appropriation to-day it would be for $1,000,000, at least.

Mr. President, about one-half of all the land of Tennessee traces its title back to the bonus, the land warrants, granted to the soldiers of the Indian wars and the War of 1812. Great States in the West, such as Kansas and Nebraska, were settled, made into farms, and beautified by the soldiers who drew them as bonuses by way of land warrants.

We are told that the country is in great distress, and that the soldier must take his share along with the others and wait for the general revival. Unless this Congress does something, his hair will be white before he takes part in any such revival. There can be no revival in this country until Congress puts back into circulation as large an amount of money as has been withdrawn from it in the last year or so.

It is true, Mr. President, that our people are being taxed white; that their burdens are crushing. It is true that not a single dollar by way of increased taxation should be put upon them. I will not vote for this bonus if you put a sales tax to it. I will not vote for it if you put a gasoline tax to it. I will not vote for it if you put an increased postage rate to it. On those conditions I would spurn it, and I know the soldiers would. The soldiers do not want to tax their bonus out of themselves and out of their neighbors and friends. I thought the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was perfectly feasible and just. He proposed that the bonus be raised out of the debts which England and France owe us. It would be an ideal way to raise it. These men fought for England and fought for France when without their valor those countries would have been submerged. What would be more equitable than that those countries in repaying the money which financed their military operations should pay the bonus to the soldiers who fought to save England and France?

The Senator who had charge of the refunding bill, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], rejected that proposition, but promised that he or his committee would soon report a bonus bill to the Senate. It is only fair to him to assume that he is going to do it; but, Mr. President, since the rejection of the plan offered by the Senator from North Carolina I would raise the bonus in this way: I would put back into circulation the money that has been withdrawn from it, in round numbers $2,000,000,000. That I would give to the soldiers, and give it now, $50 apiece. Then, next year, let us take up the subject again and deal with it in the light of the circumstances which then surround us. No man can tell what will be the condition of this country and this Government a year from now. The issuance of the $2,000,000,000 would end unemployment, inspire enterprise, and usher in an era of prosperity.

I thought the plan proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] was far from perfect. It seemed to me crude, unsatisfactory, most burdensome to the Government, and not offering much promise to the soldier. I think the plan of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was very nearly ideal in its character. I can not understand why those who are sincerely in favor of a bonus would not accept it. They did not, however. Now, the question is, What is the best proposition? My proposition would be to issue Treasury notes to the amount of those Federal reserve bank notes which have been retired from circulation during the last 15 months, and to pay out the money to the soldiers. That will put it in circulation, from Maine to California and from Michigan to Florida.

Mr. President, I know of no measure which would be of greater good to a greater number; and, as I say, let the matter stop there for this year. Give them $50 down, and then next year let us take it up again; but do not let us say to these ex-service men that now that we have reaped the benefit of their service we will neglect them; now that the whole world has reaped the benefit of their sacrifice we will forget them. Do not let us treat the returned soldier, now that the ovations are over and the music has died away, as a tolerated outcast. That is what we are doing; and, Mr. President, if the awful necessity should come upon us of raising another army, our treatment of these men will make it far more difficult to raise a second than it was to raise the first.

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3076) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desires to offer an amendment or two. I should not like to have the bill passed in his absence.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	King	Spencer
Ball	Fletcher	McNary	Stanley
Borah	Gooding	Nelson	Sterling
Brandegee	Hale	Norris	Trammell
Bursum	Harris	Oddie	Wadsworth
Cameron	Harrison	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Capper	Heflin	Page	Williams
Caraway	Johnson	Pepper	Willis
Cole	Jones, Wash.	Pomerene
Culberson	Kellogg	Sheppard
Cummins	Kendrick	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Curtis	Kenyon	New	Stanfield
Dial	Ladd	Newberry	Swanson
France	Lenroot	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Glass	McCormick	Poin Dexter	Warren
Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Smoot	Watson, Ind.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] are detained at a meeting of the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION BILL.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have just been handed this morning's Washington Post, which contains an editorial from the Philadelphia Public Ledger, which I feel sure will prove of interest to Senators, though some may feel exasperation, if not resentment, at the delightfully satirical but nevertheless justifiable criticism found therein. I ask that it may be read from the desk for the benefit of the brave Republican leaders of the Senate, because it deals with a subject in which they should be interested, a subject of importance and which was discussed yesterday and will provoke further discussion, perhaps for an indefinite period.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

THE BONUS MILE.

[From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.]

Two of the most powerful lobbies ever set up in Washington are about to sidewipe each other in the scramble over the soldiers' bonus bill. One of these is the soldier lobby working for the bonus. The other is the group of spokesmen for organized agriculture.

They are not in head-on collision as yet. The farm organizations are not fighting a bonus. They are, however, fighting the impending bonus taxes. If industry and business can be taxed to pay for the bonus, the farmers will not object. They are objecting vigorously, however, to the proposal that any part of the necessary billions shall be raised by a sales tax.

The farmers want an excess-profits tax, but business objects, and Congress has laid that tax away in lavender. The motor-car owner, who is now paying about $335,000,000 yearly in taxes, objects to being saddled with an additional $120,000,000 and is lining up with the farmer against the "8-point tax plan."

The taxpayer has been applauding the work of Gen. Dawes and cheering for the Budget and tax reductions. He has been watching the limitation of armaments and calculating how much difference this may make in his tax bill. When he talks about national economy, he is thinking about what it will mean to him personally in dollars and cents. The taxpayer is worried about the bonus.

Between its pledges to the taxpayer and the expectations of the former soldier, Congress is floundering into quicksand. If the bonus should not pass, then beware the "soldier vote!" If it does pass, then beware the farmer vote, or the autoist vote, or the plain plug taxpayers' vote. If taxes fail to come down, if bonus action depresses the price of Government securities, if the tax burden should be increased—but Congress shrinks from thinking of such matters.

Congress comes to late winter in a panic. The Congressman with November only a few months away is a pathetic figure. He will be damned infallibly if he does not and certainly will be damned doubly and triply if he does. His job is to decide which course will harm him least.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is much posturing and many magnificent gestures made by individuals and legislative bodies as well as by nations. True sincerity and natural and unaffected humility, unfortunately, are not always attributes of individuals or political parties or legislative assemblies. There is too much of a disposition upon the part of individuals to take themselves too seriously and to attribute to themselves virtues and ideals which they do not possess, or, at least, to which they render most indifferent allegiance. It is of incalculable benefit to wise Senators and distinguished Representatives, as well as of immeasurable advantage to the country, that occasionally some great writer holds up the mirror before these statesmen in order that they may properly visualize themselves and ascertain the immaturity of their statures.

It has been said, and no doubt with much truth, that Senators are prone to look upon themselves as statesmen of the highest order—if not demigods—of unsurpassed dignity and power, competent to deal with mighty problems, national and international, economic and industrial and political. It would be unfortunate for the reputation which the Senate bestows upon itself if its floundering and vacillating course since it has been controlled by the Republicans were fully known to all the people—of course, I make no comment respecting the House—and those who do perceive the hesitating and halting and side-stepping of this body might reach the conclusion that the demigods had become Lilliputians. I assure the Senate I would not say anything derogatory to the dignity of this body or critical of the service which it is now rendering to the country in dealing with the problems before it.

Mr. President, the bonus question and other important matters now before us seem to be insoluble, so far as the present Congress is concerned. Where courage is required, there is vacillation, if not cowardice. Where action is demanded, there is hesitation and retreat. Where wisdom and statesmanship are needed, there is sterility and incapacity. Congress during the three years of Republican control of both the House and the Senate has been hopelessly drifting, driven without chart or compass or guiding hand before storms, little and big, with the certainty of being forced upon the rocks or driven into unknown and chartless seas. The lack of policy and leadership and the impotency of the majority of the Republicans in Congress have been so often manifested that the present Executive has been compelled to interpose in order to save the party from rout and ignominious failure.

I observe in the Herald this morning, a paper reputed to be controlled by a Cabinet officer, that the hopelessness and the impotency of the Republicans in both Houses have compelled the Executive to interpose.

The headlines of this article are as follows:

Harding to act on problem of bonus to-day—Chiefs of Senate and House, at standstill, await word—Cabinet to confer with President—Bond proposal gets new impetus—Borah begins attack.

Proceeding, the article says:

What will be done with the soldier bonus bill, bugaboo of Congress, depends on the decision of President Harding.

Leaders in both Senate and House, unable to agree on a satisfactory means for raising the revenue needed to pay the bonus, have referred the whole question to Harding, and are awaiting word from him before proceeding with the bill.

This word is expected to-day.

This is a most extraordinary statement and a still more extraordinary situation. These great Republican leaders, these wise Republican statesmen, this great party that was to save the Nation, restore confidence, and bring prosperity and raise high the national standard are revealed as pitiable and pathetic figures, alternately filled with fear and frenzy, with hope and despair, but always driven by partisanship and prejudice along the highway of failure, unfulfilled promises, and defeat. These mighty Republican leaders who were going to vindicate the dignity and honor of the Senate and the authority and prerogatives of the legislative branch of the Government and rescue the Republic from usurped Executive authority are now in terror upon their knees praying for the Chief Executive to save them from irremedial disaster.

Not long ago our Republican friends—these great Republican statesmen—were denouncing the Democratic Party for its alleged subservience to President Wilson. They charged that Congress was controlled by the President and that our form of government was menaced by the unconstitutional authority exercised by the Democratic President.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] with great force and eloquence repeatedly declared that the Senate had been reduced to a condition of servility and that Senators were but mere "rubber stamps." And other Republican Senators echoed the sentiments expressed by the Senator from California. So loud and persistent were their declamatory utterances that many of the people were led to believe them and swelled the chorus led by Republican Senators, the refrain of which echoed throughout the land, that the Senate was being deprived of its constitutional authority and the President of the United States was guilty of usurpation.

Of course, the charges were unfounded. President Wilson, with scrupulous regard for the rights and authority of all branches of the Government, pursued his way with fidelity to the truth and with a sincere purpose for the welfare of our country and the happiness and peace of the world.

We were "rubber stamps," according to Republican statesmen, when President Wilson participated, as he had a right to do, in the negotiation of the Versailles treaty. We were "rubber stamps" when President Wilson, as Chief Executive of the United States and Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, led in the mighty movement which mobilized the resources of this great country and brought under the flag of this Republic more than 4,000,000 of the stalwart and valorous sons of America to defend the honor of our Nation and hurl back the forces of militarism that threatened not only the life of this Nation but the civilization of the world.

Republican leaders charged that we were "rubber stamps" because a mighty leader, in the exercise of his constitutional authority, projected great plans and nation-wide, indeed, international, movements, the execution of which brought victory to the American Armies and the allied nations and honor and immortality to this Republic. Because Senators and Congressmen—Republicans and Democrats alike—recognized the greatness and genius of Woodrow Wilson and supported legislation which he and his associates recommended—legislation dealing with military and naval affairs of great magnitude, as well as with questions of international and domestic concern—they were denominated "rubber stamps."

When Republicans sought to depart from the course suggested by a Democratic President, they encompassed themselves in devious ways, and if they had been successful therein they would have brought disaster to our country. The charge was made that we were mere registers of Executive will and that the Senate had lost its authority and dignity when the President, after participating in the conference of Paris, brought the Versailles treaty to the Senate and urged its ratification. If we were "rubber stamps" then, pray to what condition has the Republican majority of the Senate reduced itself now?

The article from which I have just read states in the heading that the "chiefs of the Senate and House are at a standstill and await word; Harding is to act on the problem of the bonus to-day." Is it possible that the mighty chiefs of the Senate and the House are standing with cap in hand in the shadow of the White House awaiting word from the President of the United States as to what course shall be pursued by the great legislative branch of the Government? Where is the boasted independence of the Republican leaders? And where is the constitutional authority of this great coordinate branch of the Government?

Our Republican friends, when a Democrat was Chief Executive of the Nation, spoke learnedly of the tripartite division of powers, as found in the Constitution of the United States. They eloquently expatiated upon the dignity and the honor and the authority and the prerogatives—indeed, the sanctity of the Senate of the United States as well as of the legislative branch of the Government.

They resorted to antiquity, and also brought from the musty records of medieval times and culled from the pages of modern annals whatever dictum or authority or precedent could be found to support their thesis that any usurpation by the Executive would prove destructive of the liberties of the people and bring to destruction this great Republic. Any suggestion by the Democratic President was assailed as evidence of a malignant purpose to reduce to servility the Senate of the United States.

May I not inquire, where is the boasted independence of the Republican Senators? Where are the brave heroes who declaimed so loudly against the voice of the Executive being heard in legislative matters? The loud vociferations of the past have been stilled and the air of this Chamber is not fretted by Republican denunciation of Executive usurpation. And yet most measures of importance, as well as many of but little significance, passed since the Republicans controlled all departments of the Government have been the result of the plans and policies of the President, not the independent and untrammelled will of Congress.

The Republican majority are unable to agree upon tariff legislation, but carry to the Executive unfinished measures and immature policies in order that he may shape them in such a manner as to compel the support of a sufficient majority to insure their passage through Congress. Whether the legislation relates to the tariff, or to revenue matters, or to the funding of foreign obligations, or to the appropriation of hundreds of millions for the railroads and the Shipping Board, or to the formulation of policies dealing with domestic problems, including bounties for the merchant marine, the Republican Congress has been hopelessly inefficient and utterly incompetent to grapple with the questions involved; and thus it has transpired that the President has taken the helm and directed legislation. The Republican leadership in the Congress has abdicated its authority and power, and the scepter of legislative authority does not rest in the Capitol but is found in the White House.

But a few months ago, after serious and alleged deliberate consideration, the great Finance Committee of the Senate reported what was known as the bonus bill. It provided benefits for the ex-service men. It was discussed with vigor and urged with great zeal by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, now chairman of the Finance Committee, as well as by other distinguished Republican Senators. When the bill was about to pass, the President of the United States came into the Senate and his upraised hand stayed the passage of the bill and his voice reduced to silence the eloquent Senators who so loudly proclaimed the heroism of American soldiers and the debt of gratitude owing to them by the Republic. The bill was recommitted and there it has slumbered. The valorous Republican leaders and the brave Republican Senators have been silent awaiting what was supposed to be the prick of public opinion or the direction of Executive authority.

The Republican majority has been afraid to act. Even in the daylight it has seen specters and in the darkness it has seen ghosts. Now in its blind and helpless condition it is seeking light and guidance from the White House and placing the responsibility for formulating bonus legislation upon the President of the United States. This is an exhibition of the vaunted courage of the Republican Party and a manifestation of its devotion to the Constitution which does commit to Congress legislative authority and the duty of enacting legislation, constitutional in character, for the public welfare.

The editorial just read from the desk is a warranted flagellation of the cowardice and the impotency and the pathetic figure of the Republican Party as we behold it to-day. The majority in Congress are afraid to deal with the bonus question, as well as other important issues, because of the fear that their actions might affect the impending election. They are afraid of the farmers' vote if taxes are imposed which will bear heavily upon the agricultural interests. They fear the business men's vote if taxes are laid in such a manner as to compel the business interests to meet the hundreds of millions which a bonus for the soldiers would require. They are afraid of the soldiers' vote if they do not respond to what they believe is the demand of a large number of ex-service men.

Mr. President, our Republican friends are afraid of their shadows. They are like frightened children, who, as twilight advances, see lengthened shadows where friendly trees appear or horrid goblins in the friendly forms of well-known objects of everyday observation. I repeat, the Republicans in Congress are afraid to act. They lack decision and statesmanship, and so, with hat in hand and on bended knee, they seek the President and beg his aid in this hour of their humiliation and despair.

I could wish that the President would drive these heroic leaders who are bent and silent in the shadow of the White House from the Executive presence and conjure them to assert their prerogatives. I wish he would direct them to return to the House and the Senate and there initiate such legislation as they conceived under their oaths to be for the welfare of their country. I wish he would say to them, "Pass such legislation as you sincerely believe to be right and proper, and if I regard it as being in the public welfare I shall sign it, otherwise it will meet with Executive disapproval."

Mr. President, one of the tests of capacity for any party to control is found in the character of revenue legislation enacted. The Republican Party measured by this standard has utterly failed. Its fiscal policies, its tariff legislation, its revenue measures have all been disappointing; indeed, they have been violative of accepted canons and standards of justice and enlightened policies, and have brought financial disaster, economic peril, and industrial paralysis to the entire country. Fearing that they may lose the soldiers' vote impels them to project legislation that will call for hundreds of millions, and yet they are unable to formulate a plan by which to meet such payments as the legislation will require. They know that the only honest and proper way to deal with the subject is to impose such taxes upon the people as will meet whatever appropriations may be made. But they realize that they have imposed upon the people a revenue law which is in part a reproduction of legislation enacted during the war, and which in peace times bears oppressively upon the people, and is an obstacle to the revival of business and the return of prosperity. They are compelled to behold, as the result of Republican policies and Republican rule, a great Nation over which hang dark clouds of distress and sorrow—indeed, of despair. They behold business prostrate, factories closed, mines abandoned, industries destroyed, agriculture oppressed, and the entire Nation upon the verge of bankruptcy.

One year of Harding and Republican administration has brought industrial and economic disaster to the Republic; perhaps no period in our Nation's history—a period of but one short year—shows such a catastrophic change as that which has followed the advent of the Republican Party to power. Not only has there been economic and industrial paralysis, but many declare there has been a recession in that advancing tide of fine idealism which has been the past guide and should be the future guide as well as the glory of this Republic.

Discouragement and sorrow and want are encountered in every part of the land. This condition can only be attributed to the foolish policies, the unwise legislation, and the lack of statesmanship of the party in power. For two years preceding President Harding's inauguration the Republicans had been in control of the Congress and they were unable to deal with legislative problems which the war forced upon the Nation, and are to be held responsible for the tragic conditions which we now behold in our land. The Democratic President, upon a number of occasions, addressed the Republican Congress recommending legislation needed to meet postwar problems and to continue this Nation along the pathway of prosperity and world peace and honor. International policies, which would have enhanced the glory and dignity of our Nation and added to national and international prosperity were defeated by the Republicans; but notwithstanding the refusal of a Republican Congress to meet the issues and to carry out the recommendations of the President, the country, guided by a Democratic President, enjoyed prosperity.

I repeat that the Republicans are not only incompetent but they are afraid to deal with the problems confronting them. The tariff bill which passed the House has met with almost universal condemnation. The Senate Finance Committee, though it has devoted weeks to the consideration of this matter, are still unable to agree upon a measure which can be recommended to the Republican Senate. Because of the extravagance of the administration, the revenues, notwithstanding the enormous amount of taxes collected from the people, will be insufficient to meet current expenses. For the fiscal year 1923 the expenditures of the Government will be more than $5,000,000,000, and upon the bowed backs of the people will be pressed down this great burden—a burden so oppressive as to discourage enterprise, deaden initiative, and arrest the flow from the fountains of prosperity which Republican policies have closed and which Republican incompetency and folly will effectually dry up.

Unable to meet current expenses, the Republican Party is impotent to meet the more than $6,000,000,000 of indebtedness which will mature within the next three years. If there were proper economy and a wise and just system of taxation, the revenues derived would not only meet needed appropriations for governmental purposes but sufficient would be realized to liquidate the short-time certificates aggregating, as stated, approximately $6,000,000,000 and which the Government will be compelled to pay during the coming three years. The result is that the Government is issuing, or will be compelled to issue, further certificates to take up maturing obligations. This is only another way of issuing bonds in time of peace. And so, Mr. President, we will continue to helplessly drift, unable to discharge the duties and responsibility which press upon the Nation.

Further bonds must be issued and further obligations incurred. In war time it is expected that receipts and disbursements will not be equal and that the Government will be compelled to obtain loans. But in peace times a rich country such as this was, when the Democrats were in power, should provide a balanced budget and meet its expenditures from current revenues and provide such sinking funds as would be adequate to discharge maturing obligations whether funded or unfunded.

Senators will recall that when Grover Cleveland was elected President, following the disastrous administration of President Harrison, he found the country in the throes of an industrial and economic crisis. A condition was precipitated growing out of the silver issue and the unwise and unsound administration of the Republicans, which Mr. Cleveland believed required the issuance of bonds. The amount of bonds issued was small, but yet the Republican Party vociferated throughout the land in condemnation of Mr. Cleveland's course.

But, now, with revenues exceeding four and one-half billions of dollars the Republican Party from time to time is issuing short-time notes; that is to say, is borrowing to meet maturing obligations, and will be compelled to borrow billions more during the next two or three years.

How will it deal with the bonus question? It will not have the courage to meet the issue in a safe and sane manner. It is my opinion it will resort to bond issues, and thus drive into tax-exempt securities hundreds of millions of dollars which should be available for industrial development and for the revival of our paralyzed business enterprises. I predict that President Harding will project a plan which will call for the issuance of millions of bonds. Of course, these bonds will bear interest, and the people will be taxed to meet the interest thereon.

Mr. President, the American people are beginning to realize that they have been deceived. Three years of Republican control of Congress and one year of Harding administration have brought concrete examples of the disastrous consequences of Republican rule. Men who cried aloud against Wilson and Democratic policies now beat their breasts in anguish as they cry aloud for the return of prosperity and those blessings which attended Democratic supremacy. There never was such prosperity in any land as that enjoyed by the American people during the administration of Woodrow Wilson. The Democratic Party gave to the country during the eight years of Wilson's administration prosperity which has never been attained by this or by any other country. We developed industrially until the world was our market. We grew financially until nations stood with empty purses seeking our favors. Materially America wore the crown of primacy, and morally this Republic became a symbol to all the world. If an industrious and happy people are the standard by which to judge of a party, then the Democratic Party must be crowned with honor and glory. If extending commerce and assuming world leadership in trade and finance are evidences of successful political control, then the testimony is mountain high establishing the claims of the Democratic Party. If to point the way to all nations, great and small, the way of righteousness and peace and honor and justice and freedom is a demonstration of the capacity and greatness of a party and its leaders, then to no party and to no leaders has there ever come such conclusive proof of glorified achievements as that which all the world bestows upon the Democratic Party—the party of Jefferson and Wilson.

Mr. President, after one year of beneficent Republican reign, there are nearly 5,000,000 men without work, many of them without bread. Hunger and want enter unbidden in thousands of homes, and mothers and children look with dread upon the coming morn. Brave business men are seeking to meet the frightful conditions, but obstacles are encountered and depression and pessimism and despair and poverty and penury and want stalk throughout the land. No wonder our Republican friends look with terror at the approaching November elections; no wonder they seek to escape the scorpion lashes of public indignation as their incompetency and follies and blunders are comprehended by the people.

The Republican leaders in their hatred of the Versailles treaty and their enmity toward Mr. Wilson and the Democratic Party believed, or affected to believe, that with the defeat of the treaty the Republican Party would be enthroned for an indefinite period in the hearts of the American people. They promised the people national prosperity, the adoption of policies which would bring domestic peace and happiness and a reign of international amity. They have divided the people into classes; they have split political parties into groups and factions and have created fissures and chasms in the social organism; they have spread the poison of discontent and alienated the hearts of many from their country—all this and more has come to pass under the rule of this administration.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss the bonus question, but when I read a few moments ago that the President was to tell Congress what to do, and that the Republican leaders were to be silent until the White House spoke, I felt constrained to express my sympathy for those brave Senators who had so zealously contended for the rights and prerogatives of the Senate under a Democratic administration.

I desired to advise them that they were abdicating that authority for which they had so valiantly fought, but above all I wanted to commiserate with them upon their frank confession of inability to deal with public questions and devise and enact suitable legislation. Oh, Mr. President, it is a pathetic sight, as the editor wrote, to behold the Senate as it seeks safety under the mantle of Executive power and guidance by the President's hand.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Utah if he thinks we should issue bonds to pay interest on bonds?

Mr. KING. The interest on our bonds now is slightly under $1,000,000,000 per annum. We will issue more bonds which will bear interest, and we will doubtless issue bonds to pay the interest, if this plan of the majority party prevails.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. BURSUM. Does the Senator from Utah recall the value of Liberty bonds on the market at the end of the Wilson administration?

Mr. KING. Yes; I recall the value of the bonds, and I recall the fact that the Senator's party was in control of the legislative branch of the Government for two years before Mr. Wilson left the White House. I recall the fact that for three years the Republicans had controlled the House and the Senate, and that during a portion of that period Liberty bonds went down. If the Democrats had been in power in the legislative branch of the Government there would have been a different condition in the United States during the past two years.

Mr. BURSUM. Of course, the Senator recalls that the President retains the veto power over the legislation enacted by the National Congress. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that Liberty bonds now are right around par and have been going up ever since the Republicans came into power.

Mr. KING. The Republican Party has, by its policy of legislation, driven into the purchase of tax-exempt securities capital which should have been available for investment. The Republican Party will continue disastrous policies until, as stated by Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, the fountains of revenue will be "dried up."

There are many reasons that explain the rise in the market quotations of Liberty bonds. I shall not detain the Senate to canvass them, but shall content myself by repeating the statement concerning the effect of driving capital from needed investments. Business men are discouraged and will not incur the hazards following extensive borrowing for improvements and development. Men having money to loan are afraid to invest in corporate securities or stocks in industrial plants. The Republican Party has thrown the entire country into a panic, and those who have money for investment compete for securities which are tax exempt. This has brought municipal and State and National bonds to high levels.

Instead of there being competition for business investments, there is competition only for tax-exempt securities and for jobs by the hungry and starving workingmen. If the Republican Party is to be credited with the rise in Liberty bonds, it must be credited with the fall in agricultural lands and products.

When the Democrats were in control of the executive and legislative branches of the Government cattle and sheep and all kinds of agricultural products possessed value, and their production and sale brought prosperity to the farmer and to the live-stock men. The manufacturers, and, indeed, all classes, have seen their property values vanish, the laborer has seen his wages reduced, the owners of industrial stocks have seen them in many instances wiped out. These conditions have occurred under the present administration.

Mr. President, it is time for an appraisal of Republican rule. The people are awakening, the verdict will be against the party in power.

BUREAU OF AERONAUTICS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3076) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has a motion which he wishes to offer with respect to the pending bill. If the Senator from New York intends to discuss the bill, he might desire to know the character of that motion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to ask the Presiding Officer what is the pending question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator from New York that the Senator from Mississippi intends to move to recommit the bill? I have just sent for the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I state to the Senator from Utah that I had not expected to address the Senate on the bill unless and until some motion directed to it was made.

Mr. HARRISON entered the Chamber.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Mississippi is now present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield the floor for the time being.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the motion which I send to the desk, and ask that it may be read at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the motion.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions not to report the same back until the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government shall have submitted its report to Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am not opposing the pending legislation. I am in sympathy with the purpose of it. I do not believe we are doing enough for the development of aircraft, and I hope some time to see this legislation passed. But almost a year ago there was appointed a joint committee to reorganize and coordinate the bureaus of the Government. The President appointed Mr. Brown as his personal representative. That committee had a meeting on the 6th of April last year. I understand that Mr. Brown has now made his preliminary report to the President and that there will be a meeting of the committee at an early date.

The committee did not consider the proposition of coordination of the bureaus of the Government affecting aircraft. Neither has it considered the coordination of any other bureaus of the Government, although we have read in the papers that the Navy and the Army would be reorganized and thrown together and a great saving effected, as well as the coordination of many other bureaus of the Government.

It would seem to me, with a committee delegated by the Congress to look into the question of coordinating the bureaus of the Government so that some economy might be effected, some saving might be made to the taxpayers of the country, that it is a very bad piece of legislation to create a new bureau in the Government service. The Navy Department considers questions affecting naval aviation. The War Department considers questions affecting aviation in the Army. The Post Office Department does the same thing affecting aviation in the Postal Service, although that is included in the pending bill. But if this committee was delegated to do anything it was to look into such questions as are presented here.

It would seem to me that it would not affect materially the pending legislation if we might recommit it, hold it in the Commerce Committee until the reorganization committee makes its report. I hope that report will be made soon. I am ready to meet with the committee at any time to go into the consideration of these questions, so that some saving may be effected, but it would be a wise policy and an economic policy for us to withhold the passage of this legislation at this time pending the consideration of the coordination of the aviation service in the various bureaus of the Government by the reorganization committee. Therefore I offer the motion in the hope merely that the legislation may be delayed until the question of coordination can be considered by the reorganization committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the desire of the Senator from Mississippi that the reorganization work shall be done and done promptly. I do not believe there is a much more important work before the administration than the reorganization of the Government services and coordinating them so as to avoid duplications and unnecessary expense and all that sort of thing. I hope that the reorganization committee will be called together soon to consider legislation and that it will bring the legislation here very soon, but I do not see any reason why Congress should refrain from passing legislation that it may deem desirable merely because of nonaction on the part of that committee. We do not know, of course, when the committee will act.

We do not lose control of the matter. The action by the committee and the legislation it may propose will come here later, and if we deem it desirable to transfer the bureau, if it should be created, to some other branch of the Government when that report comes in, we can do it and provide for it in that legislation. Furthermore, when the bill passes here it must, of course, go to the other body of Congress, where it will be considered, and if the legislation proposed by the joint committee should come in before the question is dealt with by that body, then it could be cared for.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will yield in just a moment. The joint committee has nothing to consider unless some action of this kind is taken. The committee would have no bureau dealing with civil aviation to transfer from one department to another. It would have, of course, the Bureau of Aeronautics in the Navy and the aviation branch of the Army. It can put those together, of course, if it sees fit to unite the Army and the Navy into one organization, which personally I feel very strongly ought to be done. I have not given it mature consideration, but it does seem to me that the various arms of the national defense should be put under one organization, probably under the department of national defense or something of that sort.

But there is no bureau or anything like that governing aviation in the Post Office Department. They are simply operating some machines with postal employees in the carrying of the mails. I can see no reason why the passage of the legislation should be delayed. As I said, I do hope the reorganization work will be carried on promptly and quickly, but I can see no reason why we should delay action upon the pending measure.

I yield now to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the Senator a question. If we pass the pending bill and create the proposed bureau and it begins to function and gets a large number of employees and goes to considerable expense, as it would be compelled to do if it properly functions, and in the reorganization which has been referred to it should be deemed wise to abolish it entirely and to create a department or division or bureau, or whatever we may wish to call it, of aeronautics, such as was suggested by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New], and put under that all the activities of all the departments of the Government which deal with aircraft, military aircraft and naval aircraft and civil aircraft, would it not be somewhat awkward to deal with this organization then? We would have to abolish it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; we would simply transfer such of the force as was necessary to carry on the work in the new organization, because if we put it all together they will have to have some additional force, men of different training and experience to carry on the work. That would not be any more trouble, of course, than it would be to reorganize all the various branches of the Government. We hope in the reorganization it will result in the abolishment of some things and a diminution in Government forces in doing the work that is being done now.

But there can be practically no trouble from that standpoint, in my opinion. I think Congress has indicated pretty clearly that it would not consider the establishment of a new department to handle aviation. I think that was demonstrated when the other measure was before the Senate. I do not believe there will be very much trouble along those lines.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, like the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I am a member of the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Executive Departments, and like him I have immense interest in a prompt solution of some of the problems that are going to come before it. The committee at present is awaiting the report of the chairman, Mr. Brown, which is now, I understand, in the hands of the President of the United States, and being subjected to the critical examination and consideration of the Cabinet officers. I can not, however, sympathize with the Senator from Mississippi in his motion to recommit this bill on the ground that we should await the report of the joint committee.

It may be of interest to Senators to know that the proposal to place the bureau of civil aviation under the Department of Commerce meets with the approval of the Cabinet officers, including the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the Postmaster General, who are the only three who to-day have under them organizations actually operating airplanes.

To my mind, it is entirely logical that the work of inspection and licensing and encouragement of civilian aviation, commercial aviation, should be under the Department of Commerce.

It is not a military problem at all, nor is it a naval problem. To my great regret, I was unable to be here on yesterday during the comparatively short debate which took place upon this bill, but in reading the Record I find that some Senators—at least, I think that some Senators—misunderstand the situation. Indeed, it was suggested on yesterday by one or two Senators that the War Department ought to do this work or that the Navy Department ought to do it.

Mr. President, when one remembers that the Army Air Service is a strictly military body, maintained and trained for war and for nothing else, I think it can be seen that it is not the agent which should be intrusted with the regulation of a commercial undertaking. For one I am opposed to having Army officers placed in charge, either directly or indirectly, of great commercial undertakings. I am in favor of civilians and civilians only for that kind of work. A similar observation might apply to the proposal that the Navy Department might do this work. When I make these observations, I do not reflect in the slightest degree upon Army or Navy officers; but they are not civilians, they are employed and trained by the Government for the national defense in time of emergency, whether that emergency be domestic in its origin or without the boundaries of the United States.

The bill, Mr. President, is, of course, exceedingly simple, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] has pointed out. It merely provides a Federal agency which shall inspect the planes which are to be used, and, indeed, which are being used to-day, in the carrying of passengers for hire in interstate commerce and in the carrying of freight for hire in interstate commerce. The bill follows along the line somewhat of the Steamboat-Inspection Service. To-day the Federal Government demands of a steamboat owner or operator that his craft shall meet certain specifications and conditions as to safety, in order that the public may be insured as much as possible against damage either to life or to property. This bill seeks to establish a system for licensing pilots who are to operate machines carrying passengers or freight in interstate commerce. To-day there is no control whatsoever over the operators or over the machines. An aircraft manufacturer may sell a machine to anybody, and that person may take it away and then put it into interstate commerce, possibly in the hands of a man utterly unfit to fly it. The machine, after a period of use, perhaps through natural wear or tear or through bad handling, may become structurally unsafe; the public has no way of knowing whether or not it is safe, or whether or not the man flying it is fit to fly it; and yet the public is invited to intrust itself and its property in the hands of this irresponsible person and in this machine, the intricacies of which the public can not know about, and which no one to-day takes any pains to know about. The result is, of course, many distressing accidents; and the fact that so many accidents are occurring even at this time, when commercial aviation is but in its infancy, is one of the principal factors in holding back development.

One of the interesting developments in connection with the discussion before the Committee on Commerce is the fact that the manufacturers of aircraft are begging for the passage of this proposed legislation. They want the protection which the Federal Government can throw about their general business; they want standards established, which they shall be compelled to live up to, in the manufacture of planes which are to be put into interstate commerce and which are to carry passengers and freight. They feel—and they feel very deeply about it—that until the general public is given some assurance that the Federal Government will inspect and investigate, and license only after inspection and investigation, both pilots and planes, it will not lend its encouragement, either through the investment of capital or through the doing of business with commercial companies, and that, therefore, commercial aviation will hang back and fail to develop.

All the other great countries are doing it. England and France saw to it two or three years ago that commercial aviation in those countries was encouraged. They are doing something which I would not advocate; they are paying subsidies. I think that is unnecessary, and a very doubtful policy; but, in addition to their payment of subsidies, they have an inspection service, and to-day there is a constant service, commercial in character, going on between the principal capitals of Europe. There is a daily cross-channel service, in which many machines are taking part, between Paris and London, which has already become popular. It is now one of the standard modes of travel between the capital of the British Empire and the capital of France. From Paris other passenger lines extend to Brussels, to Strassburg, and to the south of France. They are carrying passengers every day. To date they have carried literally thousands and thousands of passengers. A fast freight or express service is being carried on now, and has been for months, and more and more people are coming to see that, having made a new conquest of an element hitherto unconquered—that is, the air—the human race is going to use that element as a means of transportation. I myself believe that we stand upon the threshold of an immense development, for the benefit of people generally, of transportation through the air, and as it is developed it will grow safer and safer. The records of the Post Office Department, carrying the mails, show how safe air transportation has become. I forget how many miles the postal flyers have covered; perhaps the Senator from Washington can remind me; but I think it is something like 2,000,000 miles.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator's statement that those flyers have covered 2,000,000 miles is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The loss of life, as I recall the statement made in the hearings, is far less than the loss of life for the same distance by railway travel or by automobile. That average may not be equaled or attained in the usual commercial endeavor, perhaps, for a few years, but it indicates very clearly the possibilities of aerial transportation. So before this agency of transportation becomes scattered and "gets a black eye" through carelessness and accidents which could be avoided, I deem it the part of wisdom for the Federal Government to exercise its constitutional power to regulate by inspection and license those who are going to fly these machines commercially, the machines which are to carry our children. For, just as surely as I am standing upon this floor, our children and our grandchildren will be traveling through the air as an ordinary means of transportation within the next generation. I repeat, therefore, it is the part of wisdom for the Federal Government to exercise its constitutional power to set up rules for safety and guidance which will not only protect the people in the matter of the machines and the pilots but also establish the rules of the road.

To-day when a man drives an automobile along a highway he is subject to certain traffic rules; every city and State establishes them. There are, however, no traffic rules for the air to-day; there are no air routes laid out; there are no rules governing, for example, night flying, flying over densely populated cities or great public gatherings. Some terrible accidents have taken place through reckless flying of machines over great, crowded districts. Witness the fall upon a bank building in Chicago of a dirigible, which exploded and killed a large number of people. Promptly the city of Chicago passed some kind of an ordinance to prevent such an occurrence in the future, but the cities acting by themselves can not protect themselves; the States acting by themselves can not protect themselves. Aerial flying is essentially interstate flying; 90 per cent of it, yea, 98 per cent of it, will be interstate, and so it is a Federal problem infinitely more than it is a State problem.

So this bill has been drafted with the assistance of all the manufacturers to-day engaged in the business, the associations of veteran flyers and others who have flown literally thousands and thousands of miles, with the advice and consent, as it were, of all of the departments of the Government concerned, and, finally, with the invaluable assistance of a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, of which the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] is the chairman. As the Senator who originally introduced the bill, I desire to take this opportunity of expressing my gratification at the fine interest which Senators on the subcommittee took in this problem.

They worked exceedingly hard at it; they have discussed it from all angles; all the pros and cons have been considered; and I am sure they visualized the vast importance of aerial flying, not to-day, perhaps, not on the immediate morrow, but in the next and succeeding generations. They know, just as I know, that it is going to be one of the great factors in commerce, in trade, and in communication of all kinds, and sooner or later the Federal Government would be compelled to undertake its proper regulation. The Committee on Commerce, under the leadership of its chairman, the Senator from Washington, has made up its mind that the time has come to take that leadership now, to seize time by the forelock, as it were, and to establish here under the Federal Government a simple and yet effective system of controlling this matter in the interest of those who are going into the business commercially and in the interest of the public at large. I hope the bill will not be recommended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] addresses himself to a subject, he exhausts it; and I pay him the compliment to say that his statements are always so lucid and so logical that it is a very difficult thing to controvert them or to differ from him. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] yesterday, in his very able address, urged many reasons for the passage of this measure. I entirely sympathize with the general statements made by both of these Senators as to the importance of civil aviation, and as to the necessity of adopting some measures for its regulation and control.

I appreciate that the States, with their limited jurisdiction, can not deal with interstate commerce, and that there is a broad field here for the assertion of power by the Federal Government. I am not quite sure that this is the sort of a bill that we ought to pass at this time. While I did not care for a department of aeronautics, I was very much in sympathy with the position of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] when he favored some Federal agency that would take charge of aeronautics.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption there?

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I take advantage of the Senator's observation to say that I was in favor of it, too, and I still am in favor of it; but the Senate turned down the Senator from Indiana and myself on that proposition and forced us to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs, and since then we have found it utterly impossible to secure any substantial support in the Congress for a combination of Army and Navy aviation with civil aviation; and, failing in that, this proposal is, as the Senator knows, to take care of civil aviation.

Mr. KING. I believe that the views of the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from New York were sound. I think that we will make a mistake if we divide this great subject among a number of agencies, branches, and departments of the Government. While I do not want to use the word "department," because that would provoke some antagonism, I believe that there could be some agency that would function all of the activities both in the Army, in the Navy, in the Post Office, and in civil interstate commerce. If we pass this bill, there is no doubt in the world but that there will be in the War Department an aeronautical section or division; there will be in the Navy Department an aeronautical division or agency; the Post Office Department will have some branch or division that will be devoted to airplane service; and it looks to me as though we are going to have four organizations. I believe it would be better to have one, and, of course, have a chief and then have a group control—one or more from the War Department, one or more from the Navy Department, one or more from the Post Office Department, and one or more representing what might be denominated civilian commerce, those selected from private life or from the Department of Commerce—and place under the control of that integrated organization all of the activities of our aeronautical work. I think it is a mistake to chop it up into pieces, as this bill proposes to do, and to afford no way for uniting those pieces after they have been severed. I wish we could have one organization, strong and vigorous, with proper tentacles leading out into the Navy and War and Post Office Departments and into civilian commerce.

I do not quite agree with my friend from New York that we can not effectuate that object. I am afraid this will be an impediment to an object which most of us at least, I think, concede to be so desirable. I dislike to vote against my friend, the chairman of the committee, and my friend from New York, because I have said over and over again that upon matters within his cognizance I would prefer his judgment to my own, because of his splendid capacity to deal with these questions; and yet, Mr. President, I feel constrained to observe that in my opinion it would be wise, in view of the imminence of this coordination, to defer action upon this bill for the present. A measure that will deal with this subject is imperatively needed. The question is, Shall we deal with it separately, in an isolated way, or shall we deal with the entire subject all at once?

That is the simple question. I beg of my friends upon the other side to hold this matter in abeyance. If they do not care to recommit it, let them leave it upon the calendar until action is taken by the committee, by the War and the Navy Departments, to see if we can not bring under one head all of these agencies.

Now, Mr. President, just a word or two, not so much by way of criticism but for the purpose of obtaining information with respect to the provisions of the bill; and I ask the attention of the Senator from Washington as well as the Senator from New York.

In line 9, on page 2, we find the words "or over any place or building over which the United States has jurisdiction."

I am not quite clear as to the constitutional power of Congress to forbid or to regulate the use of the air by a machine used in intrastate commerce exclusively. I have some doubt, and yet I have not given the matter any mature consideration—it is a mere curbstone opinion—of the power of Congress to prohibit a machine which might be owned by the Senator from Iowa, and which was used exclusively in Iowa, from flying over, in the course of a flight in the State, the corner of some military reservation, or over some Federal building that may happen to be along the path of the machine's flight. I venture to call attention to that apparently unimportant matter, and yet one which I think deserves some little attention.

Mr. President, if the bill shall be proceeded with I shall call attention to section 3. I am not quite clear as to the reasons for naming the person in charge a commissioner. It is a bureau that we are creating, and I am not advised that we usually denominate the heads of bureaus "commissioners." Of course, it is clear that they want to give him a little higher title and a little more dignity and make the position a little more impressive, and therefore we label him "commissioner" instead of "chief" of the bureau. I am opposed to the salary, to start with, of $6,000, and if we proceed with the bill I shall move to make it $5,000.

I see no necessity, in line 20, of creating deputies, assistants, and so forth. There is a chief clerk, and then the general authority for employees, and it would occur to me that the words "deputies and assistants" should be stricken out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion as the Senator goes along?

Mr. KING. Yes; I have no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is a mere authority for the appointment of such assistants as may be necessary; but even that can not be done until Congress has further acted by way of appropriation, so it seemed to the committee that we were amply protected against any undue expansion of the force.

Mr. KING. Let me say to my friend that he knows that whenever we create an office, or permit the creation of an office, or name an office, some person will be designated for it, awaiting the appropriation by Congress, and Congress will be imperturbed and a propaganda will be continued until the appropriation is made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the committee had in mind that if we are going to provide for a bureau we should, of course, give authority for whatever is necessary to do the business of the bureau; but we thought we had amply restricted it by expressly providing that these new places should not be filled until appropriations had been made for them, and if we appropriate unnecessarily, of course, that responsibility is upon Congress.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. While I have the floor, with reference to the Senator's other suggestion about the commissioner of aeronautics, of course, I should have no objection to calling him "chief" or "director," or whatever the Senator pleases. The committee had no idea in using the word except as the mere title of the man who heads this bureau. I confess that I have the impression that most of these bureaus are headed by commissioners. I suppose now, perhaps, a good many of them are called directors of bureaus, and so forth. There will not be any trouble about that.

Mr. KING. While we are on that section, suppose we strike out the word "commissioner" and insert "director" or "chief."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to calling him "director" instead of "commissioner."

Mr. KING. All right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there are various commissioners, as, of course, the Senator knows. There is the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is the head of a bureau, and there is the Fish Commissioner, who is the head of the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. KING. Oh, yes, I know; but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has thousands of employees and bureau chiefs and heads under him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As the Senator from Nebraska reminds me, there is a Commissioner of Patents; and I make no disguise of my belief that this thing is going to grow into one of the greatest bureaus in the Federal Government.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not care what the man is called who is at the head of it; his responsibilities 20 years hence will be the equal of those of any commissioner we have to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. Almost all of them are commissioners, too.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They are nearly all commissioners.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. If I believed, if the Senator will permit me—

Mr. FLETCHER. Right there, I do not want that amendment understood as being agreed to. I presume it has not yet been agreed to. It must be put to a vote before it is accepted. I should like to raise an objection to it. I think the word "commissioner" is better than "director" or "chief." I think it is more significant and more dignified, and at the same time it does not carry any higher pay; but take the Coast and Geodetic Survey, for instance. That is a bureau of the Commerce Department. We have a director at the head of it; but to call the head of this bureau "chief" or "director," it seems to me, would not be quite as significant as to dignify him by the title of "commissioner."

I think the word "commissioner" ought to stay. I hope the Senator will not press his proposal to change it, because if it is a mere name it does not signify anything more than that it is an important position. It is quite above that of a chief of a bureau. This man will have some duties and responsibilities that are a little beyond those of the chief of a bureau. At the same time he is subject to the direction of the Secretary of that department; and while his authority is not arbitrary or too extensive, still it is of such a character that I think we ought to designate him as something different from a mere chief.

I think the word "commissioner" is better than "director." I do not think the bill would be improved by changing the word "commissioner" to "director."

Mr. KING. I will complete the sentence which I was in the midst of when interrupted by the Senator from Florida. If I believed, as the Senator from New York believes, that this organization, in the form provided in this bill, were to be perpetuated, I would not object to the designation "commissioner." Indeed, what I have said heretofore indicates my great confidence in an aeronautical organization, and my belief in the necessity of an organization, one larger, more important, with more extensive duties than provided in the pending bill; but believing, as I do believe, that this is mere makeshift legislation, and that it must be superseded by an organization which will combine all aeronautical activities, I felt that it was better not to give to this official the title which the Senator from Florida concedes is more dignified and more important than the title which usually appertains to bureaus as we understand them to exist now in the executive departments of the Government.

I call the Senator's attention to paragraph (a), page 3, which provides that it shall be the duty of this bureau—

To inspect, in order to safeguard life and property, all aircraft before it is used in interstate and foreign commerce and certify as to its condition, capacity, and safety at the date of inspection, and to make the information contained in such certificate available to the public in such manner as he may prescribe.

That is, the commissioner. I appreciate that there is a precedent for legislation of this character. We have engineers who inspect the machinery of vessels which are employed on our inland seas and upon our rivers, vessels which are engaged in interstate commerce, and perhaps those that are confined within States but are upon navigable streams. It occurs to me, however, that this is a little too broad. It would make the Government morally if not legally responsible for the failure of any inspector to do his duty. His certification that an inspection had been made and the aircraft found to be safe would be a guaranty, in effect, which morally the Government could not escape.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on that theory, then, the Government should relinquish all efforts to inspect anything. We would better repeal the meat inspection act. On every piece of meat which comes through the packing houses engaged in interstate commerce there is a Government stamp, "Inspected. Passed. U. S." Does the Senator contend that that makes the Government morally or technically liable for any illness that may come from the consumption of that beef later? Every steamboat which carries passengers carries a certificate in the commander's cabin that the boat has been inspected and approved. Certainly the Government could not be held liable if that boat should sink.

Mr. KING. Suppose the Senator desired to ride in an airplane, either for pleasure or upon a journey, and he made inquiry and found that it had been inspected that morning by a Government inspector, and during the journey a casualty occurred, owing to the imperfect inspection or the incompetency of the inspector, and that that was beyond any controversy, would not the Senator feel that the Government of the United States was derelict in its duty and that there was some obligation upon its part to compensate him for the injuries which he sustained?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; not the latter. I might very well suspect that the Government had been derelict in its inspection, and if I survived the accident I might raise a big row about it.

Mr. KING. No doubt the Senator would.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But I do not think I would delude myself into the belief that I could sue the Government of the United States, or that I would have any chance in passing a claim bill through the Senate to reimburse me, especially if the Senator from Utah were sitting in the Senate.

Mr. KING. The Senator has discovered that bills are passed through the Senate nearly every day, a number having been passed yesterday, which would have far less merit than the claim of the Senator under the circumstances which I just detailed, if he should meet with an accident.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may say to the Senator, taking the illustration which he gives, if this law were in force, and I wanted to take a journey through the air in interstate commerce as a passenger, paying for the transportation, and there were two machines offered for my service, one having been inspected by the Federal Government and the other not, I would travel in the inspected machine.

Mr. KING. Unless the Senator knew that the other had been inspected by some competent person, a person, perhaps, more competent than the Government inspector, which would be merely a question of knowledge as to the character of the inspection and the persons who made the inspection.

Then, I ask the Senator from New York, does this mean that the Government will be compelled to have in every State, and perhaps in various places in every State, when there is any considerable travel, a large number of inspectors to examine and inspect the machines which are used in interstate commerce?

Mr. WADSWORTH. From time to time.

Mr. KING. Does the bill make provision for compensation for the inspections by the persons engaged in the operation of these craft who may derive profit therefrom? Will the Government have to pay for all that inspection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Section 15 provides:

That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to fix the fees and charges for such inspection, registration, and licensing authorized by this act to cover the cost thereof.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is confidently believed it will be nearly self-supporting.

Mr. KING. Then it is intended that it shall not be a burden on the Government?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; it is intended that such charges shall be levied as to pay the cost of inspection and registration.

Mr. KING. The Senator means that would cover the legitimate overhead which would be chargeable to inspection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KING. As well as the salaries paid the inspectors?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so. We do not desire to make any money out of it, of course.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that it would be indefensible for the Government of the United States to make any profit out of it, especially in the initiation of this enterprise.

May I call the Senator's attention to paragraph (i) on page 4? This paragraph authorizes the commissioner not only to operate machines, but to purchase them, when deemed necessary, for the purpose of inspecting, licensing, regulating, and controlling the operation of aircraft.

May I inquire of the Senator whether it was fully considered by the committee as to what extent they expected the commissioner would buy machines and operate them, because the Senator can see that would involve considerable capital, the employment of flyers, and the building up of a rather large and expensive organization?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the committee did give that pretty careful consideration. It was thought that under the language of the original bill the commissioner would be permitted to purchase the machines, not only for doing the inspecting work, and so on, but for actually establishing routes and carrying on routes. We tried to use language which would limit his activities in the way of purchasing machines simply to what might be necessary to do the inspecting, to do the registration, and so on. We think the language does that; that is the intention of it. We do not intend to give the commissioner authority to buy machines to maintain permanently on air routes, and so on, but he is only authorized to purchase the machines if necessary to do the inspection and registration work, the actual work the act imposes upon them in administering the law. That was really the purpose of it. I think that is the intent of the language.

Mr. KING. I think it would lead to very great extravagance and waste and to demands for very large appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The commissioner can do those things only as we appropriate the money, and we will certainly be particular, in appropriating money for these machines, to see to it that he is not buying machines for anything not necessary in actually administering the law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I call attention to one feature which may be of interest to the Senator from Utah, or perhaps the Senator from Washington has done so, though if he did, I did not hear him. The commissioner may also secure the loan of or use machines belonging to other branches of the Government. Without any question whatsoever this official, when he comes to laying out air routes which commercial traffic shall follow, will inquire of the Secretary of War if he can not lend him some of the Army flyers to do the flying. Of course that will be done whenever it is possible.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me say that we tried to emphasize that, and the language of the bill is, "Government machines to be used, if possible."

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think the provision in paragraph (a), on page 5, is too restrictive? Pilots may not be licensed except by the commissioner; that is, I understand, no person may fly as a pilot unless he obtains a license from the commissioner.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to submit a question in connection with the one the Senator from Utah has asked. Section 9 of the bill has a provision in it in regard to licensing the pilots. I am anxious to know whether there is a conflict there, and if not, what the real intent of the bill is. Section 9, as I remember it, in effect gives a Federal license to everybody who is licensed under a State law.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator that section 9 had escaped my attention. I can see that the States have the power to license, and those licenses would be taken cognizance of by the commissioner.

Mr. NORRIS. It struck me that there ought to be some regulation of that matter. I can easily see how any rule or regulation by the commissioner in regard to licenses might be absolutely nullified if he is compelled to license everybody who is licensed under State law, because there might be just as many laws as there are States, and some of them would be very lax, and in other States it would be just the reverse. The result would be that the people who did not want to go through the right kind of an examination, or properly prepare themselves to be pilots, would come in by virtue of the laws of the States which had lax laws.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There was considerable difference of opinion with reference to this proposition, and I will frankly state that this is a compromise, to harmonize the different views. I think the Senator from New York, introducing the bill in the first instance, went much further than this, and, personally, my own opinion would be inclined that way. There were other members of the committee who felt, however, that the National Government should not take full control of all aviation as to licensing pilots, and that where the State had provided for a system of licensing pilots that ought to be recognized. It was really felt by many of us that the States which have not already passed laws would, if we got out rules and regulations for the licensing of pilots to engage in interstate commerce, copy them and follow them very largely. So, harmonizing the different views, we put in section 9.

It recognizes the State pilot. If he is licensed, then he can sail in interstate commerce under this bill. We tried to compromise the different views.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I feel impelled to say a few words on the general subject of the bill, partly because of my previous efforts to have something of the kind adopted by the Congress, reference to which has been made three or four times in the progress of the debate on the pending measure. I am very much in favor of it, not because I think it all that is to be desired, not because it fills the measure of my own idea of what we should have in the way of a department of aviation, but because it is the nearest to what I think we should have of anything we appear likely to get.

Not in the sense of saying "I told you so," or anything of that sort, do I call attention now to the fact which was referred to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] a while ago, that this matter has been before Congress in some form for the last four years. I, personally, have presented two different bills looking to the same general end as is sought by this one.

One trouble with the development of aeronautics in the United States—in fact, the chief and perhaps the only one—has been that the Government has offered no encouragement whatever either to the science of aeronautics as a science or the development of aeronautics as an industry. The American manufacturer has found himself in unfair competition with foreign manufacturers right along. He has been allowed to hoe his own row under the most discouraging circumstances. It has been perfectly apparent to the men who entered the field commercially that they could not possibly hope to make any return from it for a long time at least, perhaps a term of years. They have come before Congress time and again asking that certain needed steps be taken, certain restrictions imposed, and never until this hour has Congress put itself in line to take one of those steps.

I notice in the pending bill many things that I think are not only desirable but necessary; for instance, the establishment of landing fields. We can have no aeronautical success in this country until after we have established landing fields and aerial routes. That can only be done by some central authority, and such authority is provided in the pending bill.

The chief or one of the chief causes of the large number of accidents that have occurred in the last few years has been due to the fact that inexperienced pilots, with inferior or worn-out machines, have undertaken flights. Within 30 minutes' drive of the city of Washington I have seen machines which were in use by pilots to take passengers up for pastime flights that ought never to have been allowed in the air and could not have been allowed in the air under the provisions of the pending bill. Life has been lost within sight of the Capitol by that sort of neglect. The bill provides as nearly as any bill can against a repetition of that.

While the bill does not go as far as I think it should, does not begin to go as far as certain measures which I have offered here and pressed for passage as vigorously as I know how to press them, still I am in favor of it because if it is not all that I desire it is the best that I can get, and it is a long step in the right direction. I think that it is very much needed and I very earnestly hope that it may pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to recommit the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to recommit the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I offered the motion because I believe it is wise, but the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who is a member of the Joint Committee on Reorganization, thinks that the heads of the various departments, namely, the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Department of Commerce, and the administration have agreed upon this new bureau, and in view of the fact that it seems to be the policy to put this proposition through I shall not insist upon my motion to delay the matter until the Reorganization Committee shall investigate the question of coordination of aviation in all the departments and until we consider the proposition of the joint committee. Therefore I withdraw my motion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to strike out, in line 17, on page 2, the numerals "$6,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 17, strike out "$6,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the salary of the commissioner $5,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, our Republican friends are pursuing to-day, as they have done persistently since they have been in power, a policy of retrenchment and reform and economy by increasing salaries and compensation, and thus burdening the people with higher taxes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I move to strike out section 9 of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 9. That operators and pilots of aircraft duly licensed under State laws shall be deemed to be duly licensed operators and pilots under this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like the attention especially of those Senators who are friendly to this character of legislation, as I am. It seems to me there is a very serious proposition involved, which I am seeking to remedy by the amendment which I propose. The bill provides amongst other things for the licensing by the head of this proposed bureau of pilots on aircraft. I am not complaining about that. I think everybody concedes there must be some power somewhere that will license men who desire to become air pilots, and that every Tom, Dick, and Harry shall not be allowed to carry passengers in interstate commerce in flying machines.

Section 9 makes it compulsory upon the proposed bureau of aeronautics to license every man who presents a license from any State. That is the effect of the provision as I understand it. I have been told that most of the members of the committee are opposed to it and see the great danger that is involved.

First, Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senate to the importance of the matter. Here we are proposing to establish a bureau of aeronautics. It is believed—and I share in that belief—that it is going to be a very important bureau in our Government; that it is going to develop and expand, and that thousands and hundreds of thousands of people will be carried as passengers in airplanes as time goes on. In that case their lives will be at stake; they will not be experts; they will not know how to examine aircraft in order to tell whether or not a machine is good or bad or to know by looking at a man whether he is able to manage it. That is a feature of the matter to which I wish to call attention. Men who are not qualified to operate an airplane ought to be deprived by law of the opportunity of enticing people into such machines and carrying them for money. If we are going to license pilots at all, then we ought to do the very best we can to get competent men and should allow nobody to become a pilot and to operate one of these machines unless he is competent. I can not imagine anything more important than that feature, and that is involved in this legislation.

However, now comes section 9 and compels the commissioner to license anybody as a pilot who is licensed by any State. What does that mean? Mr. President, a State anywhere in the Union can nullify the law so far as the licensing of pilots is concerned and compel the commissioner to let persons operate airplanes who can not pass an examination, who are not qualified, as a matter of fact, but who presents a license from some State. The State issuing the license may be perfectly lax, may have no regulations, except a requirement for a fee to be paid by the applicant, but it may put him on an equal basis with the man who passes a rigid examination, who is qualified, and who has received a license from some State that is strict in its regulations or from the Government of the United States. It seems to me the mere statement of the proposition is sufficient to condemn it.

I am friendly to this proposed legislation; I believe there are great possibilities ahead in the use and development of aircraft, and that air transportation is coming, no matter what we may do, whether we legislate or not or whatever we may think about it. It is one of the movements in the progress of the human race. We are now taking the initial step, and among other things we are going to provide for the licensing of a man who will be allowed to say, "I have a license from the Government; here is my machine. I will carry you for $5 or $10 or $25, and make money out of it." Then we are going to handicap our Government official by compelling him to recognize the license issued by any State, whether or not it has proper regulations and restrictions, and to treat the man holding such a license just the same as a man who is qualified.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska if he understands that the bill prohibits anyone from flying except those who may be licensed in accordance with the provisions of this proposed act?

Mr. NORRIS. Any man may fly, I suppose; but, as I understand the bill—I have not examined it closely—such a man can not carry either passengers or freight; he can not go into aviation as a commercial proposition in interstate commerce unless he be licensed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill if that is his understanding of the significance of the measure?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have been looking through the bill, but I do not find such a provision in the bill anywhere. Will the Senator call my attention to it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 5 the bill provides:

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of making effective the provisions of this act the Secretary of Commerce shall direct the commissioner of aeronautics to provide regulations, which shall become effective upon the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, for the following:

(a) Licensing pilots and such other persons engaged in commerce as may be required for the public safety.

Then section 12 provides:

That it shall be unlawful to use any civil aircraft in commerce except in conformity with the provisions of this act and such rules and regulations as may be promulgated pursuant thereto.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I read both of those provisions, but it is open to very serious question in my mind as to whether they prohibit one who is not licensed under the provisions of the bill from flying and carrying passengers. The bill provides:

SEC. 12. That it shall be unlawful to use any civil aircraft in commerce except in conformity with the provisions of this act.

Take the case of ships of commerce. There are certain rules and regulations concerning the operation of ships; they may only be operated in a certain way; and the pilots, of course, must be licensed. The navigation of a ship, however, without a licensed pilot is quite a different thing. I should think that that language would refer to the method of operation rather than to the licensing of the pilot.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not any doubt that airplanes could not be operated in interstate or foreign commerce or in commerce as defined in the act without first securing a license.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As I have said, I can not find any such provision in the bill; and it seems to me open to very grave doubt whether or not the sections to which the Senator has referred could be so construed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The committee was pretty well satisfied of that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question which has bothered me somewhat and is intimately connected with the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. Nine-tenths, probably nineteen-twentieths, of the flying that now takes place outside of the Army and the Navy is exhibition flying, which goes on everywhere, especially in connection with State fairs, with large meetings of all kinds, at various pleasure resorts, and so on. Suppose a plane is made in Ohio and its owner desired to take it to Illinois to be used in Illinois for some such purpose as I have indicated, would the journey from the place of its manufacture to the place of its use be a journey in interstate commerce?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is it intended, for instance, that the airplane shall remain in Illinois permanently; that is, does its owner live there?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am assuming that it is going there for the purpose of being used in the State of Illinois, but its ultimate destination may be unknown; it may go somewhere else finally.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. Of course, the Senator understands what I mean. It is not intended simply to take it from the place of manufacture to a point in one State to be used for exhibition purposes for a day or two and then to go on to some other place?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not engaged in interstate commerce; that is, it is carrying nothing; it is performing no function that we understand to be connected with the term "interstate commerce." I will follow that question up by asking the Senator another question. The machine having been used in Illinois for such time as its owner thought desirable, he wishes to transport it from Illinois to the State of Iowa for a similar purpose; would the journey from Illinois to Iowa be a journey in interstate commerce?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that it would be. If it would not be under the language now in the bill, I think it ought to be made so. The man who is flying that machine from, say, Ohio, where it is manufactured, to Illinois ought to be capable of handling it properly. He goes over places where a mishap by reason of inexperience or lack of training might do very great injury. If he may take it out of Illinois and go into Iowa after a week or so he ought to be trained. As the Senator puts the question, I doubt whether such a case would be covered by this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite sure that it would not be.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am inclined to agree with the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that the mere flying from one State to another is sufficient to make the flight a flight in interstate commerce. If the purpose of the Senator from Washington is—and I am sure that is his purpose—to make flying safe and not allow anyone to handle a machine who is not competent to handle it and not to allow any machine to go into use until it has been inspected and found to be a safe machine, a very vital amendment will have to be made to the bill before it will accomplish that purpose. I think commerce means something more than the mere passage of an instrumentality of commerce from one State to another. I think it must be engaged in commerce among the States before it can come within the provisions of our Constitution which enable us to regulate commerce among the States.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. In the case the Senator has put, assuming the definition that he has given to be correct—which I do, of course, and with which I agree—then if a machine which was made in Ohio should go to Illinois, there to be used in different parts of the State, and in going from Ohio to Illinois carried passengers or freight from one State into the other, the Senator would say, would he not, that that would be interstate commerce?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt that would be interstate commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. So under this bill, as I understand, in the case the Senator puts, if the pilot carried passengers or freight, either one, from one State to the other, he would have to be licensed or he could not do it. I submit to the Senator that if it does not cover the case—and I presume it does not—and he did not carry passengers and did not carry freight, and risked only his own life, the evil would be lessened almost infinitely, because he would not be allowed to endanger anybody else's life even if he endangered his own. I presume if every man flew his own machine and carried nobody else and did not deceive anybody, there would not be much use in licensing anyone.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not sure whether we have jurisdiction under the Constitution to make the provision that I have implied in my observation; but the law will be of no great importance for the present, anyhow, unless it can and does cover that point.

The Senator from Nebraska is entirely right in assuming that a license issued by a State will be very little security either for freight or for passengers so far as safety is concerned, because the States, generally speaking, will have no officer competent to pass upon this very difficult and important examination. It is because I believe that the mere passage of a flying machine containing only the flyer or the owner in order to reach a point beyond the State will not bring the machine within the provisions of this bill that I have made the suggestion that I have. I think we ought to go at least to the full limit of the Constitution in requiring licenses and requiring inspections.

I have not studied the bill sufficiently to be able to offer any amendment, but I think the suggestion is worthy of consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, referring to the very interesting question raised by the Senator from Iowa, I should like to ask him, viewing the transaction that he has described in this light, if it would not come within the constitutional power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce? The owner of the machine in the case the Senator has described is engaged in a business. Practically, what he is doing in flying in his machine from one State to the other is to carry the machine from one State to the other for the purpose of using it in business, although the business itself may be entirely State business. It seems to me it is quite clear, so far as the constitutional power of Congress is concerned, that that transaction is an act of interstate commerce. When a man transports from one State to another a machine or an instrument for the purpose of using it in business, then it is subject to regulation in so far as that passage is concerned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. I am not going to discuss these legal propositions. The law of aviation and the power of Congress, and so forth, I think are very uncertain, and very strong arguments can be made upon either side of almost any proposition that can be raised. It is all in a way ultimately largely speculative, and no one will know what the law is until the court finally passes upon it.

We have printed in the hearings the opinion of a very strong firm of lawyers in New York, contending very strongly for the constitutionality in every particular of the bill as it was originally introduced. I have in my hand a very carefully considered article by Mr. Bogert, dean of the law college of Cornell University, which discusses nearly every phase of the matter, and does it, I think, in a very fair sort of a way; and yet when you read it through you do not know whether you are right or not. I think it would be well to have this article in the Record, and I ask that it may be printed in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

[Reprinted from the Cornell Law Quarterly.]

PROBLEMS IN AVIATION LAW.

(By George Gleason Bogert, professor of law in the Cornell University College of Law; member of the committees on aviation of the American Bar Association and of the Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.)

Legislation on the subject of aerial navigation is impending. Flying and the manufacture of aircraft have become businesses of importance, but the rules of law which govern aviation remain uncertain. It is said that there are about 2,200 airplanes in commercial use in the United States and about 500 more privately owned, that 92 companies are engaged in operating and nearly twice as many in manufacturing aircraft, that about $40,000,000 is invested in the industry, and that in this country in the past 20 months machines have flown 14,000,000 miles. (E. N. Findley in New York Times Jan. 10, 1921.) Government aviation is developing and a united air service is projected. And yet, except to a limited extent in two States, it can not be said with positiveness whether an aviator is a trespasser as to the landowner over whose soil he flies, under what circumstances the aviator or his employer is liable if the machine falls to earth and does damage to person or property, and whether the States or the Nation, or both, have constitutional authority to regulate aerial navigation. Nor is there any general law, except the law of self-preservation, which forbids an inexperienced and incompetent pilot from flying anywhere in a defective machine.

It is small wonder, therefore, that since the end of the World War we find considerable agitation in favor of legislation regarding aviation. In an address in February, 1919, Mr. A. R. Hawley, then president of the Aero Club of America, urged Federal legislation to regulate the navigation of the air. (8 Flying, 149.) A committee of the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association reported September 15, 1919, and recommended acceptance of the international air convention and the adoption of Federal legislation. (Unpublished report of that committee.) Mr. Glenn L. Martin, in November, 1920, advocated immediate Federal legislation (Aerial Age, Nov. 8, 1920, p. 248), and in the same month the National Aircraft Underwriters' Association held a meeting in New York at which the president argued for speedy congressional action. (10 Aviation, 22, Jan. 3, 1921.) Mr. G. W. Harris, in an article in the New York Evening Post in December, 1920 (reprinted in Literary Digest Dec. 4, 1920), says:

"More and more the thinking men who are taking an enlightened interest in aerial navigation are convinced that the one thing most needed to encourage and advance the development of the airplane industry, as well as aviation itself, in the United States is a wise system of jurisprudence applicable to aeronautics and aerography." (See similar article in 120 Scientific American, 484, 1919.)

Voluminous testimony from numerous experts has been taken by congressional committees on the subject of a united air service, a project to consolidate all governmental and civilian aviation under a Federal department of aeronautics. The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, in its report for 1920 (p. 55), makes as its first recommendation to Congress the enactment of legislation "for Federal regulation of commercial air navigation, licensing of pilots, aircraft, landing fields, etc." No less than seven bills for control of aviation have been introduced into Congress in the last two years. The problems of aerial jurisprudence are so well recognized that a novel has been based on the question whether a landowner may maintain trespass for flight over his realty. (Herbert Quick's Virginia of the Air Lanes, referred to in 18 Case and Comment, 119.)

The more important European countries have adopted air codes, but America lags behind. True, we have statutes of some degree of comprehensiveness in Connecticut and Massachusetts and sporadic instances of incomplete legislation elsewhere, but Federal legislation and adequate and general State laws are lacking. New York went so far in 1920 as to appoint a commission to investigate and report on the status of aviation, and this commission recommended legislation with respect to a few matters, but no complete code. (Leg. doc. 103, 1920.) No action was taken by the New York Legislature. The inactivity of the States and the Nation has forced some counties and cities to the undesirable expedient of local ordinances, productive of much confusion and practically impossible of enforcement. (For example, Los Angeles County, Calif., has a county ordinance regulating flying and providing for the licensing of flyers (Aerial Age, Oct. 25, 1920, p. 200), and an ordinance prohibiting flying over New York City at a height lower than 2,000 feet, and forbidding trick flying over the city is now before the New York board of aldermen (New York Times, Jan. 12, 1921). The press of Mar. 5, 1921, reports this ordinance adopted. The writer is informed that the towns of Nutley, N. J., and Kissimmee, Fla., and the cities of Newark and Atlantic City, N. J., have local ordinances also.)

The American Bar Association and the Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws appointed committees in 1920 to report what form legislation on the law of the air should take. (Mr. C. A. Boston, of 24 Broad Street, New York, is chairman of the bar association committee. He has submitted a printed preliminary report which contains an exhaustive bibliography of aviation law books and articles. Mr. John Hinkley, of 215 North Charles Street, Baltimore, is chairman of the conference committee. This latter committee was directed to "report as soon as practical a uniform aviation law.")

The Conference of Bar Association Delegates, an organization connected with the American Bar Association, in 1919 adopted resolutions in favor of Federal action under the admiralty clause of the Constitution. (6 Am. Bar Ass'n J., 42, Jan., 1920.)

From these and many other facts of similar character which might be cited it appears that the enactment of laws—international, national, State, and possibly even local—is impending. If these statutes are to be harmonious, complete, scientific, and well drafted the several legislatures and the bar, generally, must be informed of the experience of other countries, must have clearly in mind the fundamental legal problems involved in aerial navigation, and must study carefully the constitutional limitations of the State and Federal legislatures. To bring together as much of this information as possible and to present some suggestions for action are the objects of this paper. In the space allotted the material can obviously be presented in outline form only.

INTERNATIONAL LAW.

No attempt can be made here to discuss the international law of the air in time of war. Debate on that subject began at least as long ago as the Franco-Prussian War, when French balloons flew over the German lines seeking information, and Bismarck threatened to treat their occupants as spies. Later efforts were made to get international agreement to the prohibition of the dropping of projectiles from aircraft (Aerial Land and Aerial Maritime Warfare, Ellis, 8 Am. J. Int. L., 256 (1914)), but the World War effectively proved that there were no such rules in practice. Since the war no attempt has been made to state the rules of war in the air. The international air navigation convention expressly confines itself to the law of the air in time of peace.

The development of peace-time international air law was long retarded by a conflict of views among jurists upon the fundamental question of the relation of a State to the space over its territory. Some contended that the air is analogous to the high seas, that no State exercises actual control over it, and that there should be absolute freedom of navigation of the air, with no restriction by the State beneath, just as there is freedom of navigation of the high seas. Others favored the "zone theory." According to this view navigation was to be free above a certain height, and the subjacent State was allowed sovereignty up to that height. This doctrine resembled that of territorial waters, by which the State has exclusive jurisdiction to the 3-mile limit. Yet other lawyers thought that there should be freedom of navigation of the air, subject merely to a right in the subjacent State to enact police and protection laws. Still a fourth group held that the State is the absolute sovereign of the space above its territory, just as it is of its land and inland and territorial waters. And, lastly, there was a variation of the "sovereignty theory" to the effect that while the States could prohibit flight over their territories by reason of their sovereignty, yet they ought to declare navigation of the air free, subject to certain regulations and restrictions, designed to protect life, guard domestic commerce, and insure national safety. These ideas and variations of them have been expounded many times in books and articles, appearing principally in the period from 1900 to 1914. (Hazelton, The Law of the Air (1911); Valentine, 22 Jurid. Rev. 16, 85; 23 Jurid. Rev. 324; Bellot, The Sovereignty of the Air, 3 Int. L. N., 133 (1918); The Law of Civil Aerial Transport, Hazelton, 1 Jour. Comp. Leg. N. S., 76 (1919); Hershey, The International Law of Aerial Space, 6 Am. J. Int. L., 381 (1912); Lee, Sovereignty of the Air, 7 Am. J. Int. L., 470 (1913); Kuhn, The Beginnings of Aerial Law, 4 Am. J. Int. L., 109 (1910); Myers, 26 Green Bag, 57 (1914). For a list of foreign books on the subject see Myers, 4 Jour. Cr. L., 815.) A discussion of the respective merits of these diverse theories would be academic and useless since, as will later herein appear, one of these views has definitely prevailed and the others are for all practical purposes obsolete.

The Institute of International Law, at a session at Ghent, September 24, 1906, drafted a project for the regulation of aerostats which contained the following fundamental provision (Supp. 7 Am. J. Int. L., 147 (1913)):

"The air is free. States have no authority over it, in time of peace or in time of war, other than that which is necessary for their own preservation."

M. Paul Fauchille early drafted an elaborate code which disposed of the question of sovereignty as follows (Supp. 7 Am. J. Int. L., 148 (1913)). Another projected code by the same jurist provided for a "zone of protection" 1,500 meters in height within which flying was restricted. (Wolters, Luftverkehrsrecht, 76.)

"Air navigation is free. Nevertheless the underlying States possess the rights necessary for self-preservation; that is to say, for their own security and the security of the persons and the property of their inhabitants."

In June, 1911, the international juridic committee on aviation reported favorably the following clause of a proposed air code (24 Green Bag, 430):

"Aerial circulation is free, except for the right of subjacent States to take certain measures, to be determined with a view to their security and that of the persons and goods of their inhabitants."

This last-quoted clause was later incorporated into the partially completed code published by this committee in 1914. (18 Law Notes, 5 (1914).) The extent and content of this code are illustrated by the following headings from it: Under the main heading of "Public aerial law" appear "General principles of aerial circulation," "Nationality and registration of aircraft," "Land and alighting on water," "Jettison," "Wrecks," "Legislation applicable and jurisdiction competent with respect to aerial locomotion"; under "Private aerial law" are chapters on "Property above and reparation for damage caused by aircraft." Subdivisions on "Commercial, administrative, and penal aerial law" are outlined but not completed.)

In 1913 France and Germany, as a result of the flight of German military aircraft over France, entered into a flight convention. (Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 11.) This treaty clearly recognized State sovereignty, with a right of innocent passage granted to alien aviators upon compliance with certain conditions. Military aircraft of one State might fly over the territory of the other only on invitation by the latter State; if military aircraft were obliged by necessity to land in a foreign country, they were required to report, be examined, and return as directed. Commercial aircraft of one country were allowed to enter the other only if in possession of a domestic license and pilot's certificate and a passport from a representative of the country to be entered; and such visiting aircraft must comply with the laws of the country entered.

In 1913 the International Law Association met at Madrid and adopted the following resolution (48 L. J. 561 (1913); 48 Am. L. R. 131 (1914)):

"1. It is the right of every State to enact such prohibitions, restrictions, and regulations as it may think proper in regard to the passage of aircraft through the air space above its territories and territorial waters."

"2. Subject to this right of subjacent States liberty of passage of aircraft ought to be accorded freely to the aircraft of every nation."

In March, 1916, the Pan American Aeronautic Federation, meeting at Santiago, Chile, declared air space to be State property, the navigation of the air space above the American Continent to be free to all Americans and all aliens domiciled in America, and the several States to have sovereign rights over the spaces above their respective territories. (Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 12. The third Pan American aeronautic conference was held at Atlantic City, May 20, 1920. 14 Am. J. Int. L. 642.)

By a decision of the supreme council of the Paris peace conference in March, 1919, an aeronautical commission was created "to study all air questions which may be submitted to it by the supreme council of the conference of peace, to study all air questions which the commission may deem it their duty to submit to the supreme council of the conference of the peace," and "to draft a convention relating to air navigation." Two representatives of each of the five principal powers and seven delegates from the group of smaller States sat on this commission. The representatives of the United States were Admiral Knapp and Gen. Patrick.

In taking up the drafting of an international air navigation convention the commission established the following main guiding principles:

"1. Recognition (1) of the principle of the full and absolute sovereignty of each State over the air above its territories and territorial waters, carrying with it the right of exclusion of foreign aircraft; (2) of the right of each State to impose its jurisdiction over the air above its territory and territorial waters."

"2. Subject to the principle of sovereignty, recognition of the desirability of the greatest freedom of international air navigation in so far as this freedom is consistent with the security of the State, with the enforcement of reasonable regulations relative to the admission of aircraft of the contracting States, and with the domestic legislation of the State."

"3. With regard to domestic regulations relative to the admission and treatment of aircraft of the contracting States, recognition of the principle of the absence of all discrimination on the ground of nationality."

"4. The recognition of the principle that every aircraft must possess the nationality of one contracting State only and that every aircraft must be entered upon the register of the contracting State the nationality of which it possesses."

"5. The following provisions are recognized as desirable from an international point of view to insure the safe conduct of aerial navigation:

"(i) Regulations for compulsory certificates of airworthiness and licenses for wireless equipment, at least for aircraft used for commercial purposes. Mutual recognition of these certificates and licenses by the contracting States."

"(ii) Regulations for compulsory licenses of pilots and other personnel in charge of aircraft. Mutual recognition of these licenses by the contracting States."

"(iii) International rules of the air, including international rules as to signals, lights, and for the prevention of collisions. Rules for landing and on the ground."

On October 13, 1919, an international air navigation convention was signed by all the allied and associated powers except Japan and the United States. Japan later signed, and on May 31, 1920, the United States signed with reservations. (Kuhn, International Aerial Law and the Peace Conference, 14 Am. J. Int. L. 369 (1920); and see 14 Am. J. Int. L. 421, 448, 645.) According to advices from the United States Department of State under date of January 8, 1921, Belgium, Portugal, and Slam have ratified the convention, but have not yet deposited their ratifications, pending action by the principal western European powers.

The Chamber of Deputies of France had then approved ratification and the Senate was expected to concur in a few days. The Parliament of Italy was expected to ratify before Easter, 1921. Great Britain ratified the convention by the air navigation act of December 23, 1920. The Senate of the United States has not ratified the convention, so that, of course, it is not of any effect in the United States.

The convention (for a copy of the convention see 33 Harv. L. R. 23, or Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 51) recognizes that each State has absolute sovereignty over the space above its land and territorial waters, but each contracting State grants to citizens of the other contracting States freedom of innocent passage above its territories (except over prohibited areas), provided that the conditions of the convention are observed. Regulations as to foreign aircraft shall be without discrimination. The nationality of the aircraft is determined by the place of registration, which in turn is fixed by the nationality of the owner, or, in case of ownership by a corporation, by the nationality of the chairman of the board of directors and two-thirds of the directors. Registration of aircraft and certificates of airworthiness and of the competency of the pilot are required. A foreign airship may cross a State without landing, but if it lands it must report to an aerodrome. Any State may favor its citizens in intrastate commerce. Foreign aircraft can not be seized for violation of patent rights if security for the payment of damages is given. Rules regarding landing, departure, and prohibited transport are set forth. State aircraft are defined and they are prohibited from flying over or landing in a foreign country without authorization. An international commission for air navigation is created by the convention, with power to superintend the collection and dissemination of information, modify regulations, and settle disputes between members regarding the construction of the regulations. Eight annexes to the convention contain exhaustive provisions about the marking of aircraft, certificates of airworthiness, log books, rules as to lights, signals and methods of flight, the qualifications of pilots, aeronautic maps and ground marking, collection and dissemination of meteorological information and customs. (For discussion of the convention see Kuhn, International Aerial Navigation and the Peace Conference, 14 Am. J. Int. L., 369 (1920); Richards, Hazelton, and Nye, Proceedings of International Flying Convention and the Freedom of the Air, 33 Harv. L. R. 23.)

In the form in which the convention was approved in May, 1919, it contained provisions limiting the jurisdiction of the State flown over to the punishment of aviators and passengers for the violation of regulations necessary to insure innocent passage, and granting to the State of the nationality of the aircraft jurisdiction over contracts made and torts and crimes committed on board the aircraft, except as they might affect innocent passage. This grant of extra territorial jurisdiction was opposed by the United States delegates, and as a result these provisions were stricken out of the final draft of October, 1919. (Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, pp. 14, 51.) Although all the allied and associated powers have now signed the convention, the United States reserved as to six points, Canada and Cuba as to two, and France, Italy, and Portugal as to one. The United States reservations were concerned with patents, customs, Federal control of State aerodromes, and the annex of exhaustive regulations.

The International Air Navigation Convention links the International Air Commission with the League of Nations in two ways. It provides that disputes regarding the interpretation of the main body of the convention shall in certain cases be determined by the permanent court of international justice to be established by the League of Nations; and it directs that the settlement of disputes as to the meaning of the annexes to the convention shall be decided by the Permanent International Commission for Air Navigation, which is an organ of the League of Nations. This connection with the league raises the question whether a State not adhering to the league would wish to submit its controversies for settlement to the agents of the league, and whether, if the attachment of the convention to the league were deemed undesirable, some amendment of the convention could not be made to obviate the difficulty.

The treaties of peace of the allied and associated powers with Germany, Austria, and Bulgaria contain clauses which affect the international law of aviation. The clauses in the three treaties are identical, so that the German treaty may be taken as an example. It provides in substance that allied aircraft may fly over and land in Germany, subject to the same rules which apply to German aircraft; that all German aerodromes shall be open to allied aircraft on the same terms as to German aircraft; that certificates of airworthiness, nationality, and competency, and pilots' licenses issued by the allied powers shall be recognized in Germany; that in the internal air traffic of Germany the aircraft of the allied powers shall enjoy most-favored-nation treatment; that Germany will enforce on German aircraft the rules laid down in the International Air Navigation Convention; and that these obligations shall remain in force until January 1, 1923, or until Germany is earlier admitted to the League of Nations or to the convention relative to aerial navigation. (Treaty with Germany, arts. 313-320, Supp. Amer. J. Int. L., July, 1919, p. 335; Treaty with Austria, arts. 204-211; Treaty with Bulgaria, arts. 276-283.)

Since the conclusion of the World War international flying conventions have been arranged between Great Britain and Holland, Great Britain, France, and Switzerland, and Germany and Switzerland. (Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 165; Aerial Age, Nov. 1, 1920, p. 230.) Their terms are not available to the writer.

It thus appears that the international law of aviation will probably within a few months, by the ratification of the international air navigation convention by the leading European countries, assume definite form. This convention, while undoubtedly capable of some improvement, seems in the main satisfactory. It can easily be amended from time to time by the commission which it establishes. Its basic principle, that of sovereignty in each nation over the air space above its territory, is surely acceptable to the United States. The convention contemplates registration, inspection, and marking of aircraft and licensing of pilots—requirements which are universally admitted to be necessary for the protection of the public. Federal and State commissions could easily frame regulations upon these matters in harmony with the international regulations. The convention contains no provision granting extraterritorial jurisdiction, but allows the rights and duties of aviators to be controlled by the law of the State over which they are flying. It leaves for each nation to decide for itself the difficult question when the owner or operator of an airship shall be liable for injuries to person or property which are caused by the aircraft. It does not handicap the States or the Nation in any provision they may wish to make regarding intrastate or interstate flying, for it controls merely the navigation of foreign craft in the United States and the operation of American aircraft in foreign countries.

This convention has been thoroughly considered by the Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, and that body has recommended its ratification and has suggested a few minor amendments for the consideration of the international commission. (Unpublished report of the legal committee of the National Manufacturers' Aircraft Association.) It would seem that as far as the international situation is concerned, the best step for the American Bar Association is to recommend to the Senate the ratification of the international air navigation convention. Without such ratification flight by our aviators in foreign countries which have adhered to the convention will be prohibited, for article 5 of the convention provides that "no contracting State shall, except by a special and temporary authorization, permit flight above its territory of an aircraft which does not possess the nationality of a contracting State." This would mean that upon ratification of the convention by Canada, and in the event of our failure to ratify it, flight of United States aircraft over Canada would be unlawful, except as "special and temporary authorization" was given by Canada.

MUNICIPAL LAW.

It will perhaps be useful, before stating the fundamental problems to be solved by the draftsmen of an American air code, to outline the existing condition of the statute law in Europe and America.

In England the coronation of King George in 1911 was the occasion for the first statute on aviation. (Jour. Cr. L., 815, 828.) In order to prevent aviators flying low over the coronation procession and the attendant public ceremonies Parliament passed an act giving to the secretary of state power to prohibit air navigation over such areas as he might prescribe. Violation of the act, except when caused by vis major, was to be punished by fine or imprisonment or both. (1 and 2 Geo. V, ch. 4.) In 1913 a supplementary act was passed extending the powers of the secretary of state to fixing prohibited areas for reasons of national defense and safety, and including the coast line and territorial waters within his jurisdiction. This officer was allowed by this second bill to prescribe places and conditions of landing in Great Britain by foreign aircraft. Foreign airships flying over areas which had been made forbidden zones for reasons of national defense, or refusing to obey the landing regulations, were to be signaled, and if they did not obey the signal, might be fired at. (2 and 3 Geo. V, ch. 22.) Under this act extensive orders were made by the secretary of state with especial reference to prohibited areas and the duties of foreign aircraft entering England. (Wolters, Luftverkehrsrecht, 146. Arrests were made for violations of these regulations by aviators flying from France and Germany into England without permission. Myers, 4 Jour. Cr. L., 815, 825.) In 1919 the power of the secretary of state was still further augmented by a grant of authority to regulate air navigation in the British Isles, to grant, revoke, and suspend pilots' licenses, to make rules for the registration, identification, inspection, and certification of aircraft, to license, inspect, and regulate aerodromes, to fix the conditions under which aircraft might be used for the carriage of goods, mail, and passengers, and to regulate the conveyance of goods and mail into or from the British Isles and between such islands. (9 Geo. V, ch. 3.)

Under the broad powers thus given the secretary of state he issued regulations in 1919 which cover the details of aerial navigation. (Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 65; 8 Flying, 525; Aerial Age Weekly, Sept. 27, 1920.) They require the registration of the machine, its marking, licensing of the pilot, and a certificate of airworthiness in case of all passenger or goods aircraft. Aerodromes must be licensed. Flying over a city or town except at a height enabling the aviator to land outside is prohibited. Trick flying over populous districts, flying over games and exhibitions without the written consent of the promoters thereof, and the dropping of any article except ballast is forbidden. Public officers are given a right of inspection of, and access to, aerodromes and factories.

Foreign aircraft are allowed to fly over the British Isles only on invitation. Rules regarding lights, signals, the rules of the air, traffic regulations in the vicinity of licensed aerodromes, and the arrival and departure of aircraft from the United Kingdom are stated. The importation and exportation of goods by aircraft is controlled. It is required that competent persons make an inspection of aircraft before each flight.

The British civil aerial transport committee was appointed May, 1917, and reported February, 1918. (Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 166.) This committee was given broad powers of investigation into the legal, commercial, and mechanical sides of aerial navigation. A subcommittee on legislation was directed to advise the committee on what were evidently deemed the principal legal questions, namely, (1) the attitude to be adopted by the State with regard to national sovereignty in the air and international questions connected with aerial transport; (2) the question of State ownership (if any) or the necessary State control and regulations as to customs, quarantine, and aliens; (3) necessary amendments of the common and statute law as to the airspace covering private property, and as to compulsory purchase of land for aerodromes and landing grounds; (4) the principles of liability for damage caused by or to aircraft. The committee recommended the adoption with slight modifications of the aerial navigation bill prepared by the home office in 1911. This bill consisted of 28 sections. Its fundamental provisions were State sovereignty over the space above British territory, regulations regarding flight, inspection, and licensing, a provision for absolute liability for injuries caused by aircraft, and a stipulation that flight should not of itself be regarded as a trespass but that the landowner might recover only for actual damages suffered from contract, noise, etc. The committee recommended also that the regulatory powers be vested in an air ministry, instead of being divided among various departments of the Government. (For accounts of the report see 146 L. T., 105 (1918), and Hazeltine, the Law of Civil Aerial Transport, 1 Jour. Comp. Leg. N. S. 76 (1919).)

The British air navigation act of 1920 (10 and 11 Geo. V, ch. 80, in effect Dec. 23, 1920) ratifies the International Air Navigation Convention of 1919 and gives the Government power to carry out the convention by orders in council, especially by providing for licensing, inspection, and regulation of aerodromes, licensing of operators, registration of aircraft, fixing the conditions under which aircraft may be used to carry goods, mails, and passengers, the conditions of entrance into and exit from the British Isles, fixing charges at licensed aerodromes, control of aerial lighthouses, the regulation of signals, and establishing penalties for violations. The bill gives the air council, established by air force act of 1917, broad powers of regulation and condemnation in case of war; and power to establish and maintain, or to authorize the local authorities to establish and maintain, aerodromes, and to acquire land for that purpose "by purchase or hire." Section 9 dealing with the liability of aviators for damage, is as follows:

"(1) No action shall lie in respect of trespass or in respect of nuisance, by reason only of the flight of aircraft over any property at a height above the ground, which, having regard to wind, weather, and all the circumstances of the case is reasonable, or the ordinary incidents of such flight, so long as the provisions of this act and any order made thereunder and of the convention are duly complied with; but where material damage or loss is caused by an aircraft in flight, taking off, or landing, or by any person in any such aircraft, or by any article falling from any such aircraft, to any person or property on land or water, damages shall be recoverable from the owner of the aircraft in respect of such damage or loss, without proof of negligence or intention or other cause of action, as though the same had been caused by his willful act, neglect, or default, except where the damage or loss was caused by or contributed to by the negligence of the person by whom the same was suffered:

"Provided that, where any damages recovered from or paid by the owner of an aircraft under this section arose from damage or loss caused solely by the wrongful or negligent action or omission of any person other than the owner or some person in his employment, the owner shall be entitled to recover from that person the amount of such damages, and in any such proceedings against the owner the owner may, on making such application to the court and on giving such undertaking in costs as may be prescribed by rules of court, join any such person as aforesaid as a defendant, but where such person is not so joined he shall not in any subsequent proceedings taken against him by the owner be precluded from disputing the reasonableness of any damages recovered from or paid by the owner.

"(2) Where any aircraft has been bona fide demised, let, or hired out for a period exceeding 14 days to any other person by the owner thereof, and no pilot, commander, navigator, or operative member of the crew of the aircraft is in the employment of the owner, this section shall have effect as though for references to the owner there were substituted references to the person to whom the aircraft has been so demised, let, or hired out."

Section 10, regarding penalties for dangerous flying, reads as follows:

"(1) Where an aircraft is flown in such a manner as to be the cause of unnecessary danger to any person or property on land or water, the pilot or the person in charge of the aircraft, and also the owner thereof, unless he proves to the satisfaction of the court that the aircraft was so flown without his actual fault or privity, shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £200, or to imprisonment with or without hard labor for a term not exceeding six months, or to both such imprisonment and fine.

"For the purposes of this section the expression 'owner' in relation to an aircraft includes any person by whom the aircraft is hired at the time of the offense.

"(2) The provisions of this section shall be in addition to and not in derogation of any general safety or other regulations prescribed by order in council under Part I of this act."

The law of wreck and salvage is applied to aircraft over or on the sea or tidal waters. The Crown is given authority by an order in council to make provision as to the courts in which proceedings may be taken to enforce the act, and in particular to confer jurisdiction on the admiralty courts and apply admiralty rules. The secretary of state is given authority to make regulations for the investigation of aviation accidents occurring over the British Isles. A patent infringer landing in the British Isles may prevent the detention of his aircraft by giving security. The power of the secretary of state to secure land under the military lands act is extended to include the acquisition of land for the purpose of aviation, civil or military. The act applies to Ireland and Scotland, with minor modifications. It repeals the air navigation acts, 1911 to 1919.

Great Britain has an Air Ministry with 771 persons on its permanent staff. (Aerial Age, Nov. 22, 1920.)

Turning to the British Dominions, we find that India enacted an airship act in 1911. The governor general in council was authorized to prescribe rules for flight, to license pilots, inspect aircraft, and prohibit the transport of certain articles. (Aero and Hydro, Nov. 16, 1912.) New Zealand adopted a code for aerial navigation in 1918. It defines fundamental terms, gives the governor general authority to prescribe regulations, issue and revoke licenses, register aircraft, fix prohibited areas and forbidden landing places, and establish fines. Flight and the conduct of a flying school without a license are prohibited. (Act No. 6, 1918.) The Canadian air board act went into effect June 6, 1919. (9 and 10 Geo. V. ch. 11.) It provides for an air board of from five to seven members to be appointed by the governor, one member to come from the army and one from the navy, the terms to be three years. The duties of the board are to supervise all aeronautical matters, to study the development of aviation, to construct and maintain Government aerodromes and air stations, to control Government aircraft and operate such air services as the governor approves, to prescribe aerial routes, to collaborate with other Government officers in aeronautical work, to secure to Canada appropriate rights in international air routes, to cooperate with the military and navy in air defense, to investigate and report on commercial air projects in Canada, and to draft and prepare for approval by the governor regulations for the control of aviation. The powers of the air board are said to extend to regulation of all aviation in Canada and over Canadian territorial waters, including the issue, suspension, and revocation of licenses to fly, the registration, identification, inspection, certification, and licensing of all aircraft, aerodromes, and air stations; the prescription of conditions of commercial transport, including export and import; and the fixing of prohibited areas, landing places, and aerial routes. This air board is in operation and has at least temporarily extended to aviators of the United States the privilege of flying in Canada under the same conditions as apply to Canadian aviators. (Aerial Age, Oct. 25, 1920, p. 199.)

In October, 1911, the prefect of police of Paris promulgated regulations regarding landing, the height of flight, ascent, and the dropping of objects from aircraft. (Myers, 4 Jour. Cr. L. 815, 828-29.) In the same year President Fallières of the French Republic issued a decree regulating aerial traffic. (132 L. T. 116 (1911).) These rules were soon superseded by the more comprehensive French Government air bill of 1913. The more important terms of this law were that circulation in airships was to be free, subject to Government regulation; that landing was forbidden on inclosed properties on which a building was located, except by consent of the proprietor, and also in thickly settled communities, except in places set apart. Aviator and airship were made absolutely liable for damages caused to groundsmen regardless of negligence.

Provisions were made for registration, licensing, and prohibited zones. The transport of explosives, photographic apparatus, and wireless telegraphic material was forbidden, except by special permit. A log book was required to be kept and retained for two years. Public airships were required to bear distinct marks and military airships were to be distinguished from other public aircraft. The entry into and exit from France by the air was to be governed by regulations to be issued. A duty was placed on local authorities to assist aircraft in distress. Wreckage, flotsam, and jetsam were to be reported. Permission had to be obtained for an exhibition flight. (135 L. T. 70 (1913).) A ministerial decree of May 12, 1919 (Jour. Off., 13 May, 1919; Dalloz, Bulletin Leg., 1919, p. 374), forbids flight over cities and other thickly inhabited places, except at a height sufficient to enable a safe landing to be made in case of motor trouble, and interdicts acrobatics over densely inhabited places and low flights over public exhibitions. A decree of June 6, 1919 (Jour. Off., 8 June, 1919; Duvergier, Collection Complete des Lois Décrets, p. 476), provides for an organ of coordination of all aeronautics with the duties of aircraft manufacture, organization of aerial communications, study of aviation problems, supervision of aerial navigation, distribution of information, mobilization of the aircraft industry, and direction of manufacture and purchase of Government aircraft material. France now has an undersecretary of state for aeronautics. (L'Aérophile, Jan. 1920, p. 18.) It is reported that the French authorities have very recently drawn up regulations governing inspection, licensing, and control of traffic which are almost identical with the British regulations of 1919, and that these rules will soon be embodied in a decree. (Aerial Age, Oct. 18, 1920, p. 182.)

The early German laws regarding aviation were in accordance with the then existing ideas of Government in that Empire. As early as 1910 in some of the German States aviators were required to be licensed and to give three days' notice to the police of each intended flight. The police were to inspect the aircraft before each flight, and might prohibit the ascent, if, in their opinion, the conditions made flying dangerous. After complying with these regulations the aviator must confine himself to flying over the open country and must under no circumstances appear over towns and cities. (17 Case & Com., 304 (1910); Myers, 4 Jour. Cr. L. 815, 828-29.) By decrees of October, 1910, and December, 1913 (Wolters, Luftverkehrsrecht, 47), the Prussian Government established forbidden zones for military reasons, gave the police authority to limit aviation, and accepted the certificates of the German Aviation Society as sufficient evidence of the skill of pilots. A Bavarian decree of October, 1911 (Wolters, 48), established limitations on spectacular flights, and recognized the rules of the German Aviation Society as controlling certificates, rules of navigation, and forbidden zones. In 1914 a proposed imperial aviation act was passed by the Bundesrat and was sent to the Reichstag, but the intervention of the war prevented its passage. This project provided for inspection and certification of machines, examination and licensing of pilots, and approval of flying fields by the national Government. Passenger and freight traffic was to be licensed. (Wolters, 84.) The German Aviation Society established certain rules in 1914. These covered the marking, registration, and testing of public machines; practice flights; the qualifications necessary to obtain a pilot's license and the method of obtaining the license; rules of navigation; forbidden transport; forbidden zones; and the establishment and regulation of flying fields. (Wolters, 100.) It is said that a new national bill was presented to the German Parliament in the summer of 1917 (Wolters, 50), but its contents and the disposition of it are not known to the writer. The new German constitution of 1919 (Ch. 1, sec. 1, art. 7) gives the commonwealth jurisdiction over "communication by power-driven vehicles on land, on sea, and in the air," but this jurisdiction is not exclusive. Unless and until the commonwealth acts the several states may make regulations. (Ch. 1, sec. 1, arts. 7 and 12, const., 1919.) Germany has a minister of aviation. (Aerial Age, Nov. 15, 1920, p. 280.) By Government decrees of November, 1912, December, 1912, and January, 1913, Austria provided for licensing of pilots, forbidden zones and prohibited transport, and for police measures of safety. (Wolters, Luftverkehrsrecht, 157 et seq.)

A Dutch law of 1912 (Wolters, 58, 163) provided for Government licensing of pilots, and also empowered aviation societies to grant licenses; stipulated that aviation fields must be approved by the Government; forbade flying without a license, except over a flying field; prohibited spectacular flying in the absence of a special permit, except over a flying field; forbade flight of such a nature as to endanger order or public safety; and allowed the recognition of foreign pilots' certificates. The Hague recently passed an ordinance (Aerial Age, Nov. 8, 1920, p. 256) requiring flyers to keep more than 8,000 feet above that city. This regulation has been forced upon the Dutch, due to the large number of airplane lines which cross Holland and the custom of aviators operating on those lines to fly low.

Switzerland has a federal air office. (L'Aérophile, September, 1920, p. 276.) A Serbian statute of February, 1913 (Wolters, 170), determined the nationality of aircraft by the citizenship of the owner; denied any extraterritorial rights to aircraft; required approval of aircraft by the minister of the interior and the fastening to the machine of a plate containing the name and residence of the owner, name of the constructor, and number of the license; provided for pilots' licenses to be obtained from the minister of war; forbade dangerous transport, the dropping of objects, flight at night or in a storm, the use of searchlights, and flight over fortified places. The police were given authority to require landing and to inspect at any time, and the operators of unmarked and unlicensed aircraft were to be regarded as criminals, liable to be brought down by force. Foreign military aircraft were forbidden, but foreign civilian aircraft were allowed entrance on compliance with customs and other Government regulations. It seems that prohibited areas have been established in Russia. (Woodhouse, Text-book of Aerial Laws, 136.) An Italian law of May, 1915, was largely concerned with military aviation, but it established a permanent commission for civilian aeronautics. (60 Cronaca Leg., p. 190 (1918).)

In 1911 the committee on jurisprudence and law reform of the American Bar Association, of which Mr. P. W. Meldrum was chairman, reported that Judge Simeon E. Baldwin had offered to the association the following resolution, which had been referred to that committee:

"Resolved, That no one ought to be allowed to make an ascent in the air in any form of airship who has not passed a satisfactory examination, or been otherwise tested by some public authority, with respect to his qualifications to make such ascents with reasonable safety to himself and others; nor without having first filed in some public office a bond, with surety, to answer to all persons who may suffer damage by his flight in the air, whether such injury result from negligence or from inevitable accident, or vis major.

"Resolved, That each State of the United States should regulate these matters by statute as respects flight in the air wholly within said State and as respects police regulations of all flights over its territory.

"Resolved, That Congress, under its powers as to commerce, can and should regulate by statute flights in the air between States or between the United States and foreign lands or our Territories of the United States.

"Resolved, That the following project of a bill for such statute is drawn upon suitable lines, so far as its provisions extend." (Then followed the draft of a bill for enactment by Congress defining "air ship," "aeronaut," "to fly," and "voyage"; forbidding interstate or international flying without a pilot's license; providing for the marking and registration of the aircraft, and the filing of a bond by the owner to answer for all damages attendant on the flight.)

The committee reported that it could not recommend the adoption of the resolution. The policy of the association is not to propose legislation unless it is on a subject of general interest and about which there can be no reasonable doubt as to the necessity for legislation. The navigation of the air has not become so general as to permit uniform legislation so as to fix with legal certainty rules for its government. How far the man who 'goes up in a balloon' engages in interstate commerce when he happens to be accidentally blown across an imaginary State line your committee is not prepared at this time to decide, but it is of opinion that the aviator should not be held to any greater liability than the modern common carrier. Commerce by air has not yet attained sufficient growth on which to justify its regulation by Congress; and even if legislation were desirable it is not deemed proper to say that while a common carrier by land or water is excused from loss caused by the act of God that a common carrier by air should be made responsible, whether injury resulted from negligence or from inevitable accident or vis major. Unless liability springs out of some contract or arises out of some tort, the carrier should not be mulcted in damages, whether the carrier be by land, sea, or air." (36 Am. B. Ass'n Rep., 380 et seq. For a further statement of Judge Baldwin's views see Liability for Accidents in Aerial Navigation, 9 Mich. L. R., 20 (1910).)

Although balked in his efforts to get action from the American Bar Association, Judge Baldwin, as governor of Connecticut, urged upon the legislature of that State in his message to it in 1911 the passage of an air navigation bill along the lines suggested in his resolution quoted above. (16 Va. L. Reg., 778 (1911).) This recommendation was accepted, and the Connecticut act of 1911 was the first measure regulating aviation adopted in America. (It is now Gen. St. 1918, ch. 176, secs. 3107-3117.) This act defines fundamental terms, requires registration, licensing, and marking for flight within Connecticut; makes the secretary of state the regulating officer; allows a nonresident aviator who has registered in his own State to fly not exceeding 10 days in any one year in Connecticut without a Connecticut license or registration; and provides that "every aeronaut shall be responsible for all damages suffered in this State by any person from injuries caused by any voyage in an airship directed by such aeronaut, and if he be the agent or employee of another in making such voyage his principal or employer shall be responsible for such damage."

In 1913 Massachusetts followed the example of Connecticut and enacted an aviation law. (L. 1913, ch. 663.) The statute provided for licensing and registration by the State highway commission. It fixed the "rules of the air" for machines meeting head-on, obliquely, and where one overtakes another.

It established the height at which machines might fly over cities and towns, massed assemblies, and buildings. It created a presumption that damage caused by an airship was due to the negligence of the operator. It forbade landing in public places without permission in the absence of emergency. It allowed aviators licensed in other States to fly for not exceeding 10 consecutive days in any year in Massachusetts without a Massachusetts license. This statute was repealed in 1919 and a new law passed which differs from the first principally in that it detailed regulations of flying are left to be established by the commission, instead of being embodied in the statute, and that the presumption of negligence on the part of the aviator is abolished. (Gen. Acts, 1919, ch. 306.)

The increasing tendency to piecemeal State legislation on this subject is shown by a number of minor statutes enacted in 1917 and 1919.

In 1917 Hawaii prohibited civilian flight across that Territory without a license from the governor. (Laws of 1917, Act 107.) In 1919 California and Michigan prohibited hunting from airplanes (Cal. L. 1919, ch. 300; Mich. Pub. Acts, 1919, No. 82); New York legalized insurance against loss occasioned to and by airplanes (N. Y. L. 1919, chs. 391-393); Texas authorized the formation of corporations to build and operate aircraft, with the power to acquire by purchase the necessary starting and landing fields (Tex. L. 1919, ch. 9); and Washington and Wisconsin granted the right to condemn land for aviation purposes, the former to cities and counties and the latter to county park commissioners. (Wash. L. 1919, ch. 48; Wis. L. 1919, ch. 613. In 1920 a New York State aviation commission recommended a statute requiring State registration of all aircraft flying within the State, but the legislature took no action. N. Y. Leg. Doc. 103, 1920.)

In September, 1919, at Boston, the Conference of Bar Association Delegates, an organization affiliated with the American Bar Association, adopted the following resolution, on motion of Mr. William Velpau Rooker, and without debate (6 Am. B. Ass'n J. 42, Jan. 1920):

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this conference that aeronautics and aerography should properly lie within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States and be entertained accordingly; that a committee representing each State of the United States here represented be appointed to make further inquiry into this question and report its conclusions to the American Bar Association, to the end that the proper communication may be made to the Congress of the United States and appropriate legislation extending remedies to the aggrieved at common law may be enacted."

In accordance with this resolution a committee was appointed from this conference, of which Mr. Rooker was chairman, and two reports were submitted by Mr. Rooker, one dated January 5, 1920, and the second July 1, 1920, in which Federal legislation upon aviation under the admiralty power was strongly urged.

Although there is no Federal aviation law on the books (hydroplanes have been classed as "vessels" by the Department of Commerce and so subjected to Federal water navigation laws. Opinion Solicitor for Dept. of Com., Feb. 17, 1914), there has been for some years past an unofficial regulation of aviation by the Aero Club of America. This organization has prohibited flying in competitions for prizes controlled by it except by aviators licensed by it. As a result a large number of balloonists and aviators have sought pilots' licenses from the Aero Club and have been subjected to examination. The yearbook of the club for 1919 (p. 80 et seq.) shows that 3,544 persons then possessed Aero club aviators' certificates. The club has also passed resolutions urging licensed aviators not to fly over cities and athletic contests. (Myers, 4 Jour. Cr. L. 815, 830-831.)

Pursuant to an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1915, a National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics of 12 members was established. The present membership is representative of the Army and Navy and of men of science qualified to act as technical advisers in mechanical matters. There appears, however, to be no member especially qualified to pass upon legal questions. This committee has prepared six annual reports, the latest of which recommends Federal legislation. The committee does not, however, believe that Federal legislation should be exclusive, for in a recent communication it states (letter to the writer, dated Feb. 16, 1921): "The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is of the opinion that State legislation should follow, and be in accordance with, national legislation on the subject of air navigation, and for this reason believes it would be wise for the various States to withhold independent action pending the enactment of Federal legislation on the subject." The question may be raised whether a conference between the Federal authorities and the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, at which a division of the field between State and Federal statutes could be accomplished, is not preferable to independent action by national and State authorities which may result in conflict and litigation.

At the commencement of the war with Germany a presidential proclamation forbade flying in the war zone of the United States without a license from the Joint Army and Navy board. (Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 141.) Since the whole of the United States, its territorial waters, and insular possessions and the Panama Canal Zone were designated as the zone of military operations by this proclamation, a very serious restriction on aviation was thereby effected. It seems that this proclamation was lifted January 23, 1919, but that application to the Army and Navy Board is still required. (8 Flying 61.)

A Federal bill was agitated by the Government authorities in 1919. It prohibited civilian interstate or international flying without a license from the Secretary of Commerce, and directed that officer to report recommendations for further legislation. The bill was not pressed, due to the desire to await the report of the International Aeronautic Commission, then sitting in Paris (Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 89). Since that date a number of bills have been introduced in Congress and are now pending. Among them is Senator Sherman's bill of July 23, 1919 (S. 2593, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs), which recognizes the full sovereignty of the private landowner over the space above his land, gives the Secretary of War authority to regulate international and interstate flying by fixing travel lanes so as to avoid cities and by licensing aviators. It requires the aircraft to use the lanes prescribed and forbids flying over densely populated areas. A landowner might, under this bill, give notice to the owner or operator of an aircraft forbidding flight over his land and thereafter such flight would be a trespass and might be made the basis of an action for damages and an injunction. October 8, 1919, Mr. Curry introduced a bill (H. R. 9804) to consolidate all governmental air forces and give control of such Government forces and of commercial aviation to a Director of Aeronautics. The bill is concerned almost wholly with provisions for the national defense and the organization of a separate branch of the service to correspond to the Army and Navy, but it incidentally gives the Director of Aeronautics power to license all aircraft, supervise all landing fields, and promulgate "rules and regulations governing international and interstate flying."

Senator New's bill of October 30, 1919 (S. 3348, referred to Committee on Military Affairs and reported favorably and recommended for passage Dec. 8, 1919), provides for the creation of a new Federal officer to be known as "Director of Air," who is to control all civil and military aviation, whether interstate, intrastate, or international. Power to license, establish rules and routes, and cooperate with local authorities in setting aside aerodromes and landing fields is granted to this Director of Air. The bill is evidently framed on the theory that the war powers of Congress give it authority to regulate all aviation. Mr. Hull's bill of January 29, 1920 (H. R. 12134), provides for a Department of Aeronautics, to be headed by a director, whose duties are principally the management of Government aircraft production and the control of Government property connected with aviation; but he is also incidentally charged with the establishment of rules for air navigation and aerial routes "for international, interstate, and intrastate flying," and the licensing of all aircraft operators. Mr. Kahn's bill of April 27, 1920 (H. R. 13803), provides for the national defense by the creation of a Bureau of Air, to be in charge of a Director of Air, who is to control to a limited extent the various Government air services and organize an aerial force. Supervision of all commercial aeronautics is given in a loose, general way to this officer also.

Another pending Federal statute is that of Mr. Kahn, introduced May 13, 1920 (H. R. 14601, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce). This proposed law defines essential terms and provides for an Air Navigation Commission, to be composed of one representative each from the Departments of State, Treasury, War, Post Office, Navy, Agriculture, Commerce, and from the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. These representatives are to be appointed by the President. The commission is to prepare regulations for promulgation by the Secretary of Commerce. It is to have control of all United States aircraft, whether engaged in intrastate, interstate, or international navigation. It is to license pilots and aerodromes and inspect aircraft. The basis of the bill is shown by the following clause: "Such portions of the air as are navigable by aircraft and all aircraft navigating the air are hereby declared to be within the admiralty jurisdiction of the Federal courts." Maritime law is to govern aviation in so far as it is applicable and is not inconsistent with the act and with treaties. This bill has been amended in committee, partly, at least, on the suggestion of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics (Rept. National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, 1920, p. 11). In the revised bill the administrative authority is made a Commissioner of Air Navigation in the Department of Commerce, to work under the advice of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. One purpose of the bill, as amended, is said to be to render effective any future air navigation treaty.

Mr. Hick's bill of May 19, 1920 (H. R. 14137), creates a Bureau of Aeronautics within the Department of Commerce, to be managed by a Commissioner of Aeronautics and an Aeronautic Board; the commissioner is given power to designate aerial routes and establish aerodromes and landing fields; the board is to draft rules for navigation and provide regulations for inspection, to be promulgated by the Secretary of Commerce. All aircraft flying in the United States must obey these rules. The board is given power to license all aircraft, operators, and aerodromes. United States air space and aircraft are declared to be within the Federal admiralty jurisdiction. This bill has been somewhat changed in committee at the instance of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics (Report, 1920, p. 10). The revised bill substitutes the National Advisory Committee for the Aeronautic Board and makes that committee an advisor to the commissioner in the exercise of his functions. The revised bill also purports to be offered to render effective any treaty or convention which the United States may hereafter ratify. The Hicks bill and the Kahn bill of May 13, 1920, are both approved by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics.

It is thus readily seen that there is no uniformity in State legislation in the United States and that such Federal bills as have been presented proceed upon radically different theories as to the basis for Federal legislation and the extent to which it may go.

OUTLINE OF PRINCIPAL PROBLEMS.

(A) SOVEREIGNTY OVER AIR SPACE.

In determining the form which laws regulating aerial navigation should take several fundamental problems must be solved. The first of these is, what is the relation of the States and of the Nation to the space above the United States and its territorial waters? Is such space a detached, uncontrolled realm, comparable to the ice wastes around the North Pole, outside the sovereignty of either States or Nation? Or is this space as much a part of the physical territory of each State and of the Nation as the soil and waters therein? Obviously, unless the air space above us is subject to our sovereignty, legislation regarding flying within it is as far beyond the powers of our State or Federal legislatures as would be the total prohibition of fishing in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean.

There can, however, be no effective argument against State sovereignty over the space above the land within its borders. Such space is, under modern conditions, actually within the control of the subjacent State by police aircraft and by guns. And acts within such space, of course, vitally affect the subjacent State with respect to the safety of its inhabitants and their property. Writers on international law now agree that sovereignty over air space exists. (Myers, The Sovereignty of the Air, 24 Green Bag, 229 (1914); Foulke, Internat. Law (1920), p. 287. Wilson, Aerial Jurisdiction, 5 Am. Pol. Sci. R., 171, 179 (1911), says: "It would seem that physical safety, military necessity, and sanitary regulations justify the claim that a State has jurisdiction in aerial space above its territory.") All the treaties, conventions, and municipal laws hereinbefore referred to are founded on the principle of the sovereignty of each State over the air space above its land. There can be no doubt, therefore, that either the States or the Nation, or both together, have the jurisdiction to make laws concerning flight in such space. A clause embodying the idea contained in the following preamble to the British air navigation act of 1920 might well be made the initial paragraph of our air act:

"Whereas the full and absolute sovereignty and rightful jurisdiction of His Majesty extends, and has always extended, over the air superincumbent on all parts of His Majesty's dominions and the territorial waters adjacent thereto."

The question of jurisdiction over torts and crimes committed in the air and contracts made therein may be raised here. The tendency of continental jurists has been to apply the doctrine of extraterritoriality and provide that legal relations between persons in aircraft are to be governed by the laws of the State to which the aircraft is attached by registration, and not by the laws of the State flown over. (Fauchille's Code, Wolters, Luftverkehrsrecht, 76; International Air Navigation Convention, as first drafted, Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 17.) According to this view an assault committed by an Ohioan upon a New Yorker while both were flying over Connecticut in a Massachusetts plane would be controlled by the law of Massachusetts. But the principle of extraterritoriality is, of course, contrary to the fundamental conceptions of English and American jurists. With us the natural rule is to apply the law of the subjacent State to legal relations arising between aeronauts or between an aeronaut and a lands-

man. Thus a contract made between passengers flying over Illinois would be treated as made in Illinois, and the intentional dropping of ballast on a citizen of Maryland by a Virginia aviator, flying in a Virginia registered machine over Maryland, would give rise to a prosecution or action in the courts of Maryland. None of the proposed Federal laws seem to cover this question. It would appear to be a matter to be disposed of by a uniform State aviation law, through the insertion of a section making legal relations arising in the air over a given State, and legal relations arising between an aviator flying over such State and a groundman in such State, subject to the laws of that particular State. (This view is supported by Hazeltine, The Law of the Air, ch. 2. Concerning crime in the air, see Myers, The Criminal in the Air, 4 Jour. Cr. L., 815 (1914). A. K. Kuhn recommends that the State of the aviator's nationality and the State where the crime is committed have concurrent jurisdiction over the crime. The Beginnings of Aerial Law, 4 Am. J. Int. L., 109 (1910).)

(B) PRIVATE PROPERTY IN AIR SPACE.

The sovereignty of the State and the property of the individual are distinct concepts, although each is exclusive and alienable. (Westlake, Collected Papers, 131.) Does a landowner own the space above his land in the same sense that he owns the soil? Is he entitled to exclusive possession of such space? Assuming that he does not reduce all of it to possession, as, of course, he will not, is he entitled to exclude others from entering such space, even though he suffers no actual damage? Is an aviator, flying at any height, a trespasser as to the subjacent owner? In order to establish airways must aerial transport companies purchase or condemn rights of way? Can the State or the Nation authorize flight over private lands without providing for compensation to the subjacent owners, if the due process clauses of the constitutions are to be respected?

These questions go to the essence of aviation law. If the space is owned absolutely by the surface owner and all flight is a trespass, there can be no development of aerial transportation without a constitutional amendment by which the people of the States give up their property rights in space to some extent and allow an easement of passage. Otherwise the expense of acquiring rights of way and defending trespass and injunction suits would bankrupt all aerial transportation companies. That such exclusive private ownership of space exists and that a Federal constitutional amendment surrendering authority over this space to the National Government is, therefore, imperative before a single step can be taken toward legislation, is the view recently expressed by Maj. Johnson, legal adviser to the Director of the Federal Air Service. This writer says (The brief of Maj. Johnson has not been printed, so far as the writer knows. The amendment suggested by him reads as follows: "Congress shall have power to provide for regulating the use for air travel of all space over the earth and within the borders of the United States and its Territories and all countries over which the United States has jurisdiction, including the 3-mile limit on the seas; and to provide for regulations for landing fields, a fixed code of signals and signs for the navigation of the air and the landing of aircraft. Congress shall have further power to provide for the enforcement of said regulations and to establish air admiralty courts, or grant to the existing courts the jurisdiction of the admiralty law of the air, which jurisdiction shall include the punishment of all crimes committed on aircraft, whether in the air or in port at landing fields, and over all civil cases over which admiralty courts now, or hereafter, generally have jurisdiction, which have their source in air travel."):

"It is therefore a safe conclusion that, technically under the present grants and prohibitions of the constitution and the common law rule of ownership of space above property, neither the United States Government or the States have any jurisdiction over the air."

This view of space ownership springs from a rigid and literal interpretation of the common law maxim, cujus est solum ejus est usque ad coelum. (Coke on Littleton, sec. 4a.) This maxim was taken from the Roman law and is found in the modern civil law codes (Code Napoleon, sec. 552), but a qualification of it has been accepted, as is shown by the following section from the German Civil Code (Loewy's translation, sec. 905): "The right of the owner of a piece of land extends to the space above the surface and to the earth under the surface. However, the owner can not prohibit interferences which take place at such height or depth that he has no interest in their exclusion." (Other similar statutes are said to exist in Austria, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Holland, Uruguay, Argentina, Mexico, Japan, and Switzerland. Footnote, Loewy's trans. German Civ. Code, sec. 905; Wilson, Aerial Jurisdiction, 5 Am. Pol. Sci. R. 171, 172 (1911). It is said in a report on the French Government air bill of 1913, appearing in 135 L. T. 70 (1913), that M. Thierry, who presented the bill to the French legislature, said that the commission which framed it advised that the French law did not give the owner of the soil property in the space above not susceptible of private appropriation.)

This ancient maxim finds a limited survival in some American State codes, as, for example, that of California (Cal. Civ. Code, sec. 829), which provides that "the owner of land in fee has the right to the surface and to everything permanent situated beneath or above it."

But, notwithstanding the persistence of this rule, its application to the space not immediately adjacent to the soil and the structures on the soil is wanting. All the decisions are regarding intrusions into the space very near the surface, where the actual use of the soil by the surface occupant was disturbed. It is believed that an examination of the cases will show that cujus est solum is not law, but is merely a nice theory, easily passed down from medieval days, because there has not been until recently any occasion to apply it to its full extent.

It has been held to be a trespass to thrust one's arm into the space over a neighbor's land (Hannabalon v. Sessions, 116 Iowa, 457 (1902)) or to shoot over another's land (Whittaker v. Stangvick, 100 Minn., 386 (1907) and for one's horse to kick into such space (Ellis v. Loftus Iron Co., 10 C. P. (Eng.), 10 (1874)). Overhanging branches constitute a legal wrong, either a trespass or a nuisance. (Lemon v. Webb, 1895 App. Cas., 1; Smith v. Giddy (1904), 2 K. B., 448; Grandon v. Lovdal, 70 Cal., 161 (1886); Tanner v. Wallbrunn, 77 Mo. App., 262 (1898); Ackerman v. Ellis, 81 N. J. L., 1 (1911); Countryman v. Lighthill, 24 Hun (N. Y.), 405 (1881).) A board attached to defendant's building and overhanging plaintiff's land constitutes a trespass. (Puerto v. Chieppa, 78 Conn., 401 (1905); contra, Pickering v. Rudd, 4 Camp. (Eng.), 219 (1815).) In Pickering v. Rudd Lord Ellenborough said (p. 221): "Nay, if this board overhanging the plaintiff's garden be a trespass, it would follow that an aeronaut is liable to an action of trespass quare clausum fregit at the suit of the occupier of every field over which his balloon passes in the course of his voyage." This result Lord Ellenborough did not approve, but Blackburn, J., in Kenyon v. Hart (6 Best & Smith (Eng.), 249, 251 (1865)) remarked: "I understand the good sense of that doubt, though not the legal reason of it."

So also projecting eaves (Harrington v. McCarthy, 169 Mass., 492 (1897); Aiken v. Benedict, 39 Barb. (N. Y.), 400 (1863); Huber v. Stark, 124 Wis., 359 (1905)), cornices (Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 58 Mich., 482 (1885); Lawrence v. Hough, 35 N. J. Eq., 371 (1882); Crocker v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 61 App. Div. (N. Y.), 226 (1901)), roofs (Murphy v. Bolger, 60 Vt., 723 (1888)), and walls (Barnes v. Berendes, 139 Cal., 32 (1903); Norwalk Heating & Lighting Co. v. Vernan, 75 Conn., 662 (1903); Langfeldt v. McGrath, 33 Ill. App., 158 (1889); Codman v. Evans, 7 Allen (Mass.), 431 (1863); Lyle v. Littel, 83 Hun (N. Y.), 532 (1895)) have been held to be wrongful and to give rise to an action of some sort. In Butler v. Frontier Telephone Co. (186 N. Y., 486 (1906)) it was held that ejection would lie for the space occupied by a telephone wire strung across plaintiff's land at a height varying from 20 to 30 feet. Vann, J., expressed himself as follows:

"The surface of the ground is a guide, but not the full measure, for within reasonable limitations land includes not only the surface but also the space above and the part beneath. . . . 'Usque ad coelum' is the upper boundary, and while this may not be taken too literally, there is no limitation within the bounds of any structure yet erected by man. So far as the case before us is concerned the plaintiff as the owner of the soil owned upward to an indefinite extent. . . . According to fundamental principles and within the limitation mentioned space above land is real estate the same as the land itself. . . . Unless the principle of usque ad coelum is abandoned, any physical, exclusive, and permanent occupation of space above land is an occupation of the land itself and a disseisin of the owner to that extent."

The English cases show that the stringing of a wire across land at low heights (30 to 34 feet) is regarded as a trespass (Finchley Elec. Lt. Co. v. Finchley Urban Dist. Council (1902), 1 Ch., 866 (1903), 1 Ch., 437; Wandsworth Board v. United Tel. Co., 13 Q. B., 904 (1884)). Leading text writers agree in substance that, in the words of Pollock, "the scope of possible trespasses is limited by that of possible effective possession" (Pollock, Torts (10th ed.), 364; Salmond, Torts, p. 163; Chapin, Torts, 349).

The operation of subways and tunnel streets as far below the surface as 150 feet has been regarded as wrongful as against the surface owner, in the absence of purchase or condemnation of the right (Matter of New York, 160 App. Div., 29 (1913), affirmed, 212 N. Y., 547; Matter of Wilcox, 213 N. Y., 218 (1914); Matter of New York, 215 N. Y., 109 (1915)).

It thus appears that the only rights in space which have actually been protected by the courts have been rights in space immediately adjacent to and connected with the surface. There are no decisions to the effect that it is a wrong against a landowner to interfere with the space over his land at such a height that the use of the surface is not affected in the slightest degree.

All the codes now in existence and all proposed codes, so far as known to the writer, treat the landowner's property in the space above his land as subject to a right of passage by aircraft. None of these codes require condemnation of an aerial right of way and none provide that the mere flight through the space above shall constitute a trespass. (But see Senator Sherman's bill, Sen. 2593.) The report of the British Aerial Transport Committee in 1918, made the basis of the British aerial navigation act of 1920, expresses a fair and sensible attitude on the question of space ownership in the following sentences (146 L. T., 105 (1918)):

"To retain this doctrine [usque ad coelum] in its entirety would be fatal to civil aeronautics. On the other hand, to allow unrestricted flying over private property at all altitudes would interfere with the reasonable rights of landowners. The interference would take the form either of trespass or of nuisance. The committee think that the following recommendations would, on the one hand, give reasonable protection or compensation to landowners, and, on the other, impose on aviators no obligation which could not be covered by insurance at reasonable rates, and so avoid hampering the development of civil aeronautics. The committee therefore recommend that the bill should provide as follows: (a) No action for trespass should lie except for material damage to person or property, whether caused by flight, ascent, or landing, or the fall of objects from aircraft. (b) That this right of action for trespass should include one for injury caused by the assembly of persons on the landing or ascent of aircraft elsewhere than at authorized aerodromes or landing places. (c) That the obligation on the aviator in an action for trespass should be absolute, negligence not being a necessary element in his liability and 'unavoidable accident' no defense. (d) That an action for nuisance should lie for damages only, and then only if breach of flying regulations is proved as well as actual nuisance."

Learned writers on the subject of the law of aviation have agreed that a natural easement or right of passage should be granted to aircraft and that flight over land at such a height as not to interfere with the use to which the land is actually put should not of itself constitute a trespass. (Baldwin, The Law of the Airship, 4 Am. J. Int. L., 95 (1910); Hazeltine, The Law of the Air, ch. 2 (1911); Zollman, 53 Am. L. R., 711 (1919); 18 Law Notes, 62 (1914); 21 Law Notes, 170.) In a French case decided in 1912, aviators were held liable for flying at low heights over land, whereby animals and workmen were frightened. This was an interference with the use of the surface, although there was no contact. (24 Jurid. Rev., 321; 48 Am. L. R. 914.)

In declaring a right of passage in the air legislatures would be following the analogy of the right of navigation in waters flowing over private lands. The ownership of the bed of a navigable stream by a private person does not make navigation on the surface of the stream a trespass. Ownership of the stream bed is subject to an easement of navigation in favor of the public. It will be far less burdensome to the owner of the surface to declare an easement of public navigation in the air at such a height as does not interfere with the use to which the landowner actually puts his ground, whether that be agriculture or the support of a skyscraper. (This idea is expressed by Mr. R. F. Clarke in an article from the New York Herald, reprinted in 32 N. J. L. J., 325 (1909).) It would seem reasonable also to give the aviator an easement of landing in case of absolute necessity, on condition that he respond for actual damage done. This would prevent forced landings from being classed as trespasses, but would compensate the groundman for actual loss. (Myers, 26 Green Bag, 363, 366.) The aviator's easement should be one of passage only and not one to hover or anchor over the land. The right of passage over a highway has been held not to give a right to loiter in the road to watch the training of horses in an adjoining field (Hickman v. Maisey (1900), 1 Q. B., 752); and so it should be unlawful to float in the air over land for the sole purpose of observing operations on the surface. (Valentine, 22 Jurid. Rev. 85, 97 (1910).)

(C) BASIS OF THE AVIATOR'S LIABILITY FOR DAMAGE.

A third problem, the answer to which should be incorporated into any complete air code, is, when shall the aviator or his employer be held liable for damage caused by his aircraft or by objects falling from it? Such damage may occur (1) to persons or property on the surface; (2) to persons or property in the air.

Is the aviator to be likened to the operator of an automobile and proof of actual negligence, that is, the want of ordinary care, to be required for recovery? May the aviator engaged in carrying passengers or freight be subjected to the severe rule sometimes applied to common carriers on land and be held to a high degree of care? Or may it be said that injuries caused by aircraft are so generally caused by some form of negligence, and proof of actual negligence is so difficult due to the usual destruction of the machine and the witnesses, that the maxim res ipsa loquitur should be applied and a presumption of negligence aid the plaintiff? Or should the law be so severe toward the aerial navigator as to say that Rylands v. Fletcher (1868, L. R. 3 H. L., 330) shall apply to him, that he is like one who cages a wild beast on his premises—liable for any damages occurring to anyone from this dangerous instrument which he has caused to come into the community. Is one sending an airplane into the air bound to realize that he is creating a seriously dangerous condition, for the results of which he is absolutely liable? And, lastly, should the common law, with its rule of contributory negligence, be applied to aviators, or are they to be regarded as navigators within the admiralty law?

The Connecticut statute (Conn. Gen. St., 1918, ch. 176) makes the aviator absolutely liable for damage to person or property, whether caused by his negligence or due to unavoidable accident or vis major. The Massachusetts act of 1913 created a presumption of liability from the mere fact of injury, but this provision was omitted from the existing statute, adopted in 1919. (Mass. Acts, 1913, ch. 663; Mass. Acts, 1919, ch. 306.) The very recent British act of 1920 places a burden of absolute liability on the aeronaut, unless the groundman was guilty of contributory negligence. The International Air Navigation Convention does not attempt to decide the question.

The British Aerial Transport Committee in their report in 1918, on which the present British act is based, gave the following reasons for the fixing of absolute liability (146 L. T. 106, 1918):

"Admittedly persons on land are practically powerless to insure their own safety by precautionary measures against damage caused by the fall of aircraft or of objects carried therein. It is a matter of some doubt whether under existing principles of law persons suffering such damage would be called on to prove an affirmative case of negligence or intentional trespass. It is possible that the courts might hold aircraft to be within the class of those things which the owner keeps or uses at his peril. We think it preferable that the principles applicable should be defined by legislation rather than that they should be left for solution by a series of judicial decisions; we think, too, that as far as damage done by aircraft is concerned the deprivation of the landowner of what is almost certainly an existing right of property should be compensated by what will be in effect an insurance of himself and his property against such damage. Nor do we think that in practice the expense of insuring himself against third party risks will prove very burdensome to the owner of aircraft."

If it be said that liability without fault is inequitable, it may be replied that the principle is one frequently applied in our law, where the public protection requires it.

Thus, the owner of a deer who frees the animal in a public park is liable, without proof of negligence, to a visitor in the park who is injured by the animal. (Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S., 645 (1878).) A balloonist has been held liable, though no negligence in the operation of the balloon was shown, (a) for the damage caused by the fall of the balloon and operator on the plaintiff's land and (b) for the damage caused by a crowd attracted to the plaintiff's land by the defendant's fall. (Guille v. Swan, 19 Johns. (N. Y.), 381 (1822).) One blasting on his land, without negligence and for a lawful purpose, has been held absolutely liable for the death of a traveler on an adjacent highway who was killed by a piece of wood thrown by the blast, the court saying that "the safety of property generally is superior in right to a particular use of a single piece of property by its owner." (Sullivan v. Dunham, 161 N. Y., 290, 300 (1900).) A statute making the owner of a motor vehicle liable for injury caused by the negligent operation of the machine by a member of the owner's immediate family has been sustained. (Hawkins v. Ermaninger, 179 N. W. (Mich.), 249 (1920); 19 Mich. L. R., 33.) The employer of a balloonist has been held liable for injury to a traveler on a highway where such injury was caused by the descent of the balloon, the theory of the court being that the fall of the balloon on the highway was reasonably to be anticipated. (Canney v. A. & M. Assn., 76 N. H., 60 (1911).)

The doctrine of absolute liability on the part of the aviator has been favored by numerous writers. (Baldwin, 36 Am. B. Assn. Rept., 380, and 9 Mich. L. R., 20 (1910); Hazeltine, Law of the Air, ch. 2; Myers, The Air and the Earth Beneath, 26 Green Bag, 363, 365; Zollman, 53 Am. L. R., 879 (1919).) It appears that there have been French and Belgian cases making the aerial navigator an insurer of the safety of persons and property below, so far as his own acts are concerned. (26 Green Bag, 363, 365.) These decisions are somewhat surprising in view of the provisions in continental codes that there shall be no liability without fault. (Hazeltine, The Law of the Air, ch. 2.)

The helplessness of the landsman and the difficulty of proof surely make inadequate and unfair a rule holding the aviator for ordinary negligence only. Suppose that A's aircraft falls on B's land and kills B. The representatives of B will ordinarily find the aviator dead also and the machine a mass of wreckage. To prove what caused the fall will be impossible in most cases. To hold the aviator to the common carrier's high degree of care would be no more helpful to the landsman than to adopt the standard of ordinary care. The occupant of the surface can not in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred prove the want of any care, nor can he prove anything about the cause of the descent of the airplane.

Although some writers have tried to assimilate the navigation of the air to navigation of the water and have sought to apply the rules of admiralty to both, such a course does not seem logical. Navigation in the air is intimately connected with the land and resembles railway transportation instead of ocean-going or other water traffic. There appears to be no reason for applying the peculiar admiralty rules regarding negligence to aerial travel. It is reported that a German case regarding responsibility where two aircraft collided has applied the doctrine of contributory negligence. (20 Va. L. R., 318 (1914).)

That the doctrine of proportional negligence should be applied, see Zollman, 53 Am. L. R., 879.)

It would seem that, if a recent English case (Woods v. Greathed, 151 L. T., 10 (1921)) is to be followed, the operator of a machine who suffered a collision in the air without negligence on his own part, would not be liable for damages to persons or property caused by the fall of his machine to the land below. In the case referred to the defendant's automobile collided with the car of A and the defendant's car was thrown on the plaintiff's reality. The plaintiff was not allowed to recover damages, since the defendant's car had come upon the plaintiff's premises wholly without fault or design on the part of the defendant.

Some writers have gone so far as to urge that the aviator should be required to give a bond or take out insurance to protect the public as a condition to the obtaining of a license. (Myers, 26 Green Bag, 363, 366.)

(D) REGULATIONS TO PROTECT THE PUBLIC.

There is unanimity that a very important part of any code regulating aerial navigation should be concerned with protecting the occupants of the surface. Statutes very generally provide for registration and marking of aircraft to secure identification and proof of ownership; inspection of machines and certificates of airworthiness as prerequisites to the right to the use of such machines in flight; compulsory examination and licensing of pilots; and the restriction or prohibition of trick flying, low navigation, and flight over densely populated areas, exhibitions, games, and zones set apart for reasons of national defense.

It would undoubtedly be wise to follow the example of other countries in granting to State and Federal officers authority to promulgate these rules rather than to attempt to set the regulations out at length in statutes. Administrative regulations have the flexibility needed in the government of a rapidly developing industry like aviation. Code rules are set and difficult to modify in the light of experience. State and Federal statutes should cover the protection of the public by a single section granting to chosen agencies power to promulgate regulations to accomplish named objects. The prohibition of the hunting of game from aircraft might well be included. The international air navigation convention and the British regulations will furnish excellent suggestions for administrative rules to be issued by our State and National agencies.

(E) REGULATIONS TO PROTECT AVIATORS AND FOSTER AVIATION.

Projected laws and statutes already in force are likewise in accord in the establishment of certain rules which are chiefly for the protection and aid of aviators, although they incidentally make life on the surface safer also. Such regulations are those laying down "rules of the air," corresponding to the "rules of the road" for automobiles; fixing standard methods of landing and departure; mapping out airways, so as to promote safety in flight and to avoid congestion of aerial traffic over thickly settled districts; and regulating landing fields and aerodromes. Some authorities would require the landsman to mark high buildings and wires with lights and other signals to protect the aviator. (Myers, 26 Green Bag, 363, 366.)

As in the case of rules to protect the public, the details of these regulations might well be left to an agency of the State or Nation rather than fixed in the law itself. The statute might well confine itself to a designation of the subjects to be regulated and the objects to be sought by such regulation.

(F) SHALL AVIATION LEGISLATION BE STATE OR FEDERAL OR BOTH.

All are anxious for uniformity of legislation on the law of aviation. All wish to avoid conflicting local codes. For these reasons many writers have advocated exclusive national legislation. (Brief of Maj. Johnson, counsel to Dir. U. S. Air Service, p. 29; Kuhn, 14 Am. J. Int. L., 369, 381; Zollman, Governmental Control of Aircraft, 53 Am. L. R., 879 (1919); Report of Committee on Legislation, Manufacturers' Aircraft Association, Sept. 15, 1919, in which the details of a Federal bill are set forth.) This would undoubtedly be desirable if it were constitutionally sound. But the desirability of uniformity does not confer on the National Government power to legislate. If it did, we might have a Federal divorce statute.

At least four clauses of the Federal Constitution have been assigned as authority for exclusive Federal legislation on the law of the air. These are (1) the admiralty clause, (2) the war clause, (3) the treaty-making clause, and (4) the interstate-commerce clause. Space will permit of the suggestion of only a few of the arguments possible under each heading, and those in merest outline.

Admiralty jurisdiction as a basis for Federal legislation: The Federal Constitution provides (Art. III, sec. 8) that the jurisdiction of the United States courts shall extend "to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction." This clause has been construed to give the Federal Government power to enact laws on the subjects of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. A number of able writers have contended that this grant of power is sufficiently broad to authorize Congress to assume jurisdiction over aviation. (William Velpen Rooker, Report to Conference of State and Local Bar Associations, July 1, 1920; memorandum of J. A. G. Office to Senator SPENCER, Dec. 17, 1920; brief of Col. Howell, J. A. G. Dept.; Laws of the Air, Maj. W. Jefferson Davis, 4 U. S. Air Service, 17, Dec., 1920), the conference of State and Local Bar Associations has so resolved (6 Am. B. Assn. Jour., 42, Jan., 1920), and bills now before Congress proceed on that theory. (H. R. 14601, introduced by Mr. KAHN, May 13, 1920.) In a recent case in a Federal district court (The Crawford Bros., No. 2, 215 Fed., 269 (1914)) this thesis was advanced and an attempt made to libel an aeroplane for repairs. The court held that aeroplanes were not subject to admiralty jurisdiction, for "they are neither of the land nor sea, and not being of the sea or restricted in their activities to navigable waters they are not maritime." (P. 271. For favorable criticism see 28 Harv. L. R., 200; 3 Cal. L. R., 143; and for unfavorable comment see 49 Am. L. R., 599.)

Admiralty jurisdiction is essentially connected with the sea and navigable waters and with navigable things floating thereon. (The Thomas Jefferson, 10 Wheat. (U. S.), 428 (1825).) "The character of craft included in the admiralty jurisdiction is any movable floating structure capable of navigation and designed for navigation." (Hughes, Admiralty, p. 114.) It does not include all water navigation, for craft operating on inland waters which have no navigable outlet, and so are useful only in intrastate traffic, are not subject to courts of admiralty. (Stapp v. The Clyde, 43 Minn., 192 (1890).) Nor does admiralty have control of everything floating on the sea or other navigable water, for a fixed, floating dock has been held to be beyond the reach of the Federal courts under the admiralty head. (Cope v. Vallette Dry Dock Co., 119 U. S., 625 (1886).)

Only by maintaining that admiralty jurisdiction includes all transportation can it be rationally argued that it covers aerial navigation. This hypothesis is obviously too broad, for it would place railroads and other land carriers under admiralty. Aerial navigation is more akin to transportation on the earth's surface than it is to sea travel, for aerial navigation, in the case of landings, ascents, and accidental descents, intimately affects the inhabitants of the surface while the events of water navigation ordinarily have no effect on any persons except sailors and passengers.

It is true that admiralty jurisdiction is, in a certain sense, broader now than when the Constitution was adopted. It covers steamboats and all the other water craft invented since that time, but its development has been purely in the field of transportation on the water and never has it gone into transportation in another element.

Congress can not confer on agencies of the Federal Government powers not granted to such agencies by the Federal Constitution. This has been clear since Marbury v. Madison (1803; 1 Cranch (U. S.), 137), when Congress sought to give the Supreme Court authority to issue writs of mandamus to public officers. Nor can Congress by calling aviation law "admiralty" make it so. If the Federal legislature could, by torturing the words of the Federal Constitution into wholly unnatural meanings, fix the bounds of Federal control there would be no limit to the powers of our National Government. "No State law can enlarge it (admiralty jurisdiction), nor can an act of Congress or rule of court make it broader than the judicial power may determine to be its true limits." (1861: The Steamer St. Lawrence 1 Black (U. S.), 522, 527.)

The war power as conferring on the Federal Government exclusive authority over civil aviation. It is the theory of some members of Congress that the power of that body to raise and regulate an army and a navy, conferred by the Constitution (Art. I, sec. 8), gives the Federal legislature the right to assume exclusive control over civil aviation, intrastate and interstate. (Sen. 3348, introduced by Senator NEW, Oct. 30, 1919.) The argument no doubt is that in time of war a large number of machines and operators must be immediately available, that civilian airplanes and operators can quickly be turned to military and naval uses, and that therefore the stimulation and control of commercial aviation is necessary to preparation for war.

Undoubtedly Congress has power to create a united Federal air service and to merge the present military, naval, and post-office air departments under one head. But it may be doubted whether Congress can lawfully subject the manufacture of aircraft and all flying, whether over several States or wholly within a single State, to Federal control for the purpose of providing an ample supply of pilots and aircraft in time of war. The Federal Government can provide those pilots and aircraft without taking over civilian aviation. Motor transport on land is equally essential to a successful army, and yet it will hardly be contended that the Federal Government in time of peace could justify regulation and control of the automobile industry on the ground that such control was necessary to the production of a sufficient quantity of trucks and automobiles and a sufficient number of drivers in time of war. The same argument would apply equally well to other industries necessary to the support of an army, as, for example, the business of manufacturing and growing food. There would be no limit to the power if it were construed to have this effect. If a supply of pilots and aircraft for war purposes could not be obtained except through civilian aviation, and if civilian aviation would not flourish except under exclusive Federal regulation, the proponents of Federal regulation under the war power would have a stronger position, but neither of these suppositions seems correct. There appears to be no decision of a Federal court sustaining the assertion by Congress in time of peace of such broad powers under the war clause.

Power to make treaties as granting exclusive authority to the Federal Government to control aviation. It is well known that the Federal Government has exclusive power to make treaties with foreign Governments (Constitution, Art. II, sec. 2; Art. I, sec. 10), and it has been recently decided that where the execution of such a treaty requires Federal legislation such legislation will be upheld, even though it interferes with the internal affairs of a State not otherwise subject to national control. (1920: State v. Holland, 40 Sup. Ct. R., 382. In this case a Federal law for the protection of migratory birds, enacted in fulfillment of a treaty with Great Britain, was sustained, although it interfered with State control of birds, and although a previous act of the same purport, but not enacted under a treaty, had been held unconstitutional on the ground that it interfered with the State's reserved rights.) Thus all that the Federal Government need do in order to acquire jurisdiction of a subject is to enter into a treaty with a foreign power regarding that subject.

Some advocates of exclusive Federal control of all aviation have urged that if the International Air Navigation Convention were ratified by the United States the Federal legislature would then be under a duty to enact laws to insure the carrying out of that convention and could on that ground assume control of all aviation in the United States. (Maj. W. Jefferson Davis, the Laws of the Air, 4 U. S. Air Service, 17 (Dec., 1920): brief of Col. Howell, J. A. G. Dept., not printed; memorandum of J. A. G. Office to Senator SPENCER, Dec. 17, 1920.) Some of the proposed Federal aviation laws purport to be introduced "to render effective the provisions of any treaty or convention relating to air navigation that may hereafter be entered into by the United States." (H. R. 14061; H. R. 14137; printed in their amended form in 1920 report of the Nat. Adv. Com. for Aeronautics.) It has been suggested that the London Radio-Telegraph Convention of 1912 and the act of Congress passed to give effect to that convention furnish an analogy. (Memorandum of J. A. G. Office to Senator SPENCER, Dec. 17, 1920; 37 U. S. St. L., 302; 38 U. S. St. L., pt. 2, p. 1672.) This act controlled all radio-telegraph stations in order to give force to the convention.

One objection to this theory is that the International Air Navigation Convention has not been ratified by the United States, and, judging by the attitude of the Senate toward the League of Nations and the treaty of Versailles, all pacts made at Paris in 1919 are to be treated with suspicion and disfavor. Until the convention is ratified all Federal legislation will have to wait, if it is to depend solely upon a treaty for its support. It will require an existing treaty to give validity to legislation, not merely a prospective convention.

Secondly, a query may be raised whether the provisions of the International Air Navigation Convention, which concern international aviation only, necessarily require any Federal legislation on the subject of intrastate aerial navigation. Congress probably could comply with the convention if it enacted laws insuring foreign aviators entering the United States the rights and privileges guaranteed to them by that convention. But the conditions upon which interstate and intrastate flight are to be allowed may well be entirely different from those governing international aviation, so long as certain discriminations against foreign aviators are avoided.

The interstate-commerce clause as authority for Federal control: There can be little doubt that the commerce clause of the Constitution (Art. I, sec. 8) would be held to cover interstate flight, as it has been construed to apply to interstate telegraphy and telephony. (Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S., 640 (1888); Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Commercial Milling Co., 218 U. S., 406 (1910).) Hence a Federal act regulating international and interstate aviation only would undoubtedly be constitutional. At least one bill introduced into Congress had been drawn upon this principle. (S. 2593, introduced by Senator Sherman, July 23, 1919.)

The objection that aviation would be handicapped by conflicting State and national rules, if Federal legislation were confined to international and interstate aerial navigation, can be met by the adoption of a uniform State aviation law. This State act could obviate the expense and trouble of double licensing and examination of pilots and double certification of the airworthiness of the craft by doing away with the necessity of a State license, examination, and certificate, if the aviator and machine possessed a Federal license and certificate. Under such a uniform State statute all pilots and machines would make use of the Federal licensing, certification, and registration plan, and thus be qualified for intrastate or interstate flight. The States would not give up their rights to amend the State laws and require State licenses and certificates if the Federal regulations proved at any time unsatisfactory in their requirements or their administration.

It is believed that the regulation of interstate and international aviation by the Federal Government and the control of intrastate aerial navigation by the States (preferably through a uniform act) are the only constitutional methods of action at present. The Federal law should cover licensing of interstate and international pilots, registration, and certification of aircraft to be used in international and interstate flight, and regulations for the safety of the public and the aviators where interstate or international traffic is involved. The uniform State bill might well include a declaration of State sovereignty over the air space; a statement of the landowner's property in the space above his land, subject to an easement of passage; a provision against liability by the aviator except in case of contact or actual interference with the use of the surface, and then an absolute liability, not dependent on negligence; requirements for the licensing of pilots engaged solely in intrastate flight (unless a Federal license had already been obtained) and for the inspection and certification of aircraft engaged solely in intrastate flight (in the absence of a Federal certificate already issued); provisions for the registration of intrastate aircraft; and a grant of power to a State agency to promulgate regulations for the protection of the public and the aviators as nearly like the Federal and international rules as local conditions would permit.

It may be argued that the power to control interstate commerce includes as an incident the power to govern intrastate commerce, when necessary for the complete and satisfactory exercise of the former power. (Brief of Col. Howell, not published; Houston East & West Texas Railroad Co. v. United States, 234 U. S., 342 (1914).) This principle undoubtedly has been recognized by the Supreme Court, but it is one which should be sparingly applied. Liberally construed such a doctrine means the destruction of all State rights. Hardly a Federal power but what could be somewhat more conveniently exercised if some portion of the State's sovereignty were added to it. This rule for the extension of the power of the Federal Government should require a strict necessity for its application. If mere convenience is to be a sufficient cause, then assuredly the reservation to the States of the control of intrastate commerce is meaningless and futile. Only in so far as aviators flying within a State adopt methods which endanger or handicap interstate or international traffic, should the Federal Government interfere with them. If intrastate operators are flying under reasonable local regulations and without conflict with interstate or international aerial navigators, they should be left unrestricted by the National Government.

Perhaps an all-powerful national air board and an all-inclusive national air code would be the desideratum if we were starting de novo, but, under our peculiar dual form of government, with a National Government of delegated powers, it is difficult to see how such results can be accomplished without ignoring the Federal Constitution. (The possible unconstitutionality of Federal control of intrastate aviation was recognized by the representatives of the Federal Government on the International Aeronautic Commission. They reserved on that portion of the International Air Navigation Convention which promised Federal control of all aerodromes, because of the doubt whether such control of private aerodromes would not appertain to the several States. Woodhouse, Textbook of Aerial Laws, 50.)

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I was not expressing any doubt about the constitutionality of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. My suggestion led to the conclusion, if it leads to any, that the bill will accomplish no useful purpose just at this time unless we put into it a provision that an airplane can not pass from one State to another, or above one State to above another, until it is examined by a Government inspector and found to be safe, and until the person who proposes to fly the machine shall have been examined and shall have received a license from the Government of the United States. Otherwise, as the bill now is, I think a person can fly a machine from one State to another for the purpose of using it solely within the State to which it goes; and that is the general use now made of flying machines aside from those of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken in that. We have accounts here and statements here with reference to many services now, compared with the number of services that are being maintained, where they are running machines regularly between different States and between this country and other countries or islands tributary to us. Of course the primary purpose of this measure is to look after these regular routes. I am rather inclined to agree with the Senator that the man who has a machine made at a certain place, and simply wants to take it over to his home in another State, without intending to go back and forth in commerce, might not be covered by the bill, but that is the very least of the business that is really intended to be covered and that we hope to have developed in this country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have not been able to be present during all of the debate on this important measure. I was told, however, that some question arose as to the power of the Congress to enact legislation of this character, and I have been a little curious to know just exactly what the nature of the contention is in that regard. For myself I can not conceive of any objection upon constitutional grounds, at least, that could be made to legislation of this character.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I do not know of any contention that has been made as to the unconstitutionality of this bill as it is now proposed to the Senate. The bill as originally introduced covered all kinds of flying, intrastate as well as interstate, local, and every kind; and under the original bill no machine could be taken up on a man's farm, and from one corner to the other of his farm, without first having a license from the Federal Government, and so on. Serious question was raised as to whether the Federal Government had authority to pass legislation of that kind, and, as the Senator sees, the bill was modified so that we avoided that question. I have heard nobody contend that the bill as framed now is unconstitutional. The question may have been raised somewhere, but I have not heard it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am utterly unable to see any distinction between the power of Congress to regulate transportation from one State to another by land or by water and its power to regulate such transportation by air, and I was curious to know upon what ground objection was being made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President, I will talk for a while. I want to say to the Senate now that there were three votes on the amendment that I offered when the Chair was in doubt, and, as a matter of fact, I may say to the Chair there were two votes against it, and I was the only one that I heard who voted for it. There were two who voted against it, and the balance of the Senate did not vote.

Mr. President, I want a vote on this proposition. I think Senators realize the importance of this particular vote and this amendment. It is a matter of life and death to thousands of people that we are going to decide by our action on this amendment, as I understand. Nobody has defended this section. As I understand, we are going to decide by our action on the amendment whether or not we are going, in fact, to throw the thing wide open and let anybody be a pilot. If this amendment does not prevail, a single State, located anywhere, can provide by law for the licensing of people, even by mail. A State can pass a statute which will say that anybody who will send to the treasury of the State $100 will be given a license to fly flying machines and be a pilot, and the official of the Government of the United States will have to accept that license and let him go and carry the people who want to ride.

I ask the Senator from Washington, the chairman of the committee, if that statement is not correct, and why it is that this provision is in the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suppose, technically, that statement is correct; and yet I can not conceive that any State will follow such a course as that.

While I am on my feet, if the Senator will permit me just a moment, I will say that personally I sympathize very much with the position of the Senator. As I think I stated awhile ago, this was a compromise in the committee to harmonize different views, as I think every Senator knows we have to do upon measures where controversial questions are involved.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; I understand. Now, may I ask the Senator, since the Senator has spoken about what happened in the committee, how many votes there were in the committee for this provision? Will the Senator tell the Senate that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we did not take a record vote. My recollection is that there was only one Senator in the committee who reserved the right to oppose the provision on the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I mean, to get section 9 in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I say, there was only one Senator who reserved the right to oppose it on the floor. We took up the bill section by section, and when we adopted this section one member of the committee reserved the right to oppose it on the floor. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] reserved the right to oppose it—that is, to oppose section 9. I do not think the Senator wanted to oppose the whole bill, but he reserved the right to oppose section 9.

Mr. NORRIS. But what I am trying to get at is how many members of the committee were in favor of section 9. I judge, from what the Senator from Washington says, that he was not in favor of it and that he is in favor of it now only because the committee put it in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say frankly to the Senator that there were many different views on many different sections of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; I understand that; but I am merely asking about this one matter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know; and I am coming down to that soon if the Senator will just permit me.

Mr. NORRIS. All right. I will give the Senator all the time he wants.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall not take very much time. We had agreed upon various provisions, and there was one member of the committee who was pretty strongly opposed to the entire bill. He was very strenuous for something of this kind. He was opposed to centering the authority in the National Government to regulate all the pilots, supplies, and machines, and I think it was largely in order to secure unanimity with reference to the measure that some of us who had views somewhat in line with those of the Senator from Nebraska yielded those views, and agreed to the incorporation of this provision in the bill. I state the situation frankly to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. To get down to a real, concrete proposition, let me ask this question: Was there more than one member of the committee who wanted section 9 put in?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know there was another member of the committee who joined him in insisting upon the adoption of section 9.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it comes down to this: That there were two members of the committee at most who wanted section 9, and the balance of the committee submitted to them in order to get a unanimous report and to avoid opposition on the floor. Is that a fact?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am inclined to think that states the situation pretty well.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I am trying to get. Now the Senate has it in a nutshell, Mr. President. We are inclined to follow the recommendation of a committee. Members of the Senate are convinced that this section ought to go out, but they say, "We have to be with the committee; we do not want to follow somebody else, especially when that somebody else happens to be a man who does not always follow the committee himself." I understand it, Mr. President. Now we have gotten the facts out. The committee are really for this amendment. There are only two on the committee who want to retain section 9; everybody else wants it out. So here is an instance where, if you want to be with the committee, you should vote for the motion to strike this section out, and not only be with the committee but be right; not only have the approval of the committee in your hearts but have your own conscience approving your action and still be in the band wagon. That is where the committee is. The committee have submitted their views and squelched them in order to get a unanimous report and to get the other two members to support the bill. I want to compliment those other two members. Of course, I do not know who they are, but they are pretty wise fellows. They are opposed to this legislation. They do not want any legislation like this, and perhaps they are right. If you are an enemy to this legislation, you want section 9 left in the bill, because it kills it "deader than a doornail" and makes it a farce.

So these two members of the committee, able and conscientious men, being anxious to defeat the bill, have hoodooed the balance of the committee and gotten them to consent to put in this amendment and thereby kill the legislation, because, Mr. President, Congress will not long permit a thing of that kind to remain on the statute books. The thing I fear is that some of our fellow citizens, on account of what is in this bill, will lose their lives. Many innocent men, women, and children will be killed because of the licensing of incompetent pilots, and in order to make money the States will be tempted to make the examinations lax, yes, to waive any examination whatever and to license everybody who will pay the fee.

For a great many years we have had the spectacle of one of the States of the Union opening its doors to permit divorces to be granted, and for a good many years the sign was really up over that State, "Come all ye who want to be separated from your matrimonial ties and we will give you relief, when you board a while in our expensive hotels and pay the fees that are necessary to get it." We had the spectacle of everybody who was dissatisfied, men and women, who wanted to be free from the bonds of matrimony, and had no legal cause to be made free in their own States, flocking to that State to have the matrimonial ties severed and start out anew to fool somebody else.

Mr. President, that did not kill anybody. There are people who think that when married men and women can not get along the best thing to do is to separate them and make them entirely free. That only affected them. Innocent people were not affected. It did not injure the homes and firesides of those who were living in happiness and contentment, obeying the mandates which come to men and women in the married state.

But here is a proposition, Mr. President, which strikes at the lives of innocent people. Either we ought to strike out of this bill the licensing feature provided in it, wherein the commissioner is given authority to license pilots, or we ought to strike out the other one. If we are going to have a license system, to license these pilots by the Federal Government, why nullify it by putting in section 9?

We can not control the action of the States. Even if they all have some regulations, Mr. President, some of them will be lax. The man who wants his license but is not qualified is the fellow you want to look out for. The man who is not qualified to operate a flying machine will go to that State, or it may be the law will not require him to go there; he may be allowed to merely write a letter. The law might be even so lax that he can get his license by telegraph, wire his money for the license and a license be wired back, and the Federal Government must submit. It would be a mockery. That is an extreme case, I concede. The Senator says he does not conceive how a State would be so lax. With 48 States legislating on the licensing of pilots in interstate commerce, what kind of a mess would you expect anyway, assuming they were all trying to do their best?

Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Washington and to the other Senators present that I am ready to stop talking any time the Senate is ready to order a roll call on this motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am ready.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. That is one time when talking did some good.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has precluded himself from speaking further on this measure by entering into this agreement. I think we have gotten off cheaply. It strikes me, however, as strange that a Senator who comes here as the representative of a sovereign State should express so much contempt for the State whose commission he bears. I rather imagine the Federal Government can be no better than the units out of which it is composed, which are the States, and it seems to me that is no place for a Senator to rise and express so much disdain for State government.

The Constitution of the United States recognizes that the States are sovereign, and we take an oath that we will obey the Constitution, and then a Senator comes here and expresses utter lack of confidence in the ability or the honesty of the State to administer wisely such a comparatively nonimportant thing as the licensing of pilots. There are a thousand men running automobiles in interstate commerce to-day to every man who is operating or will operate a flying machine. Every one of them who is licensed at all bears the license of his State, and no other authority is ever attempted to be exerted over him. One State recognizes the authority of another State.

The Supreme Court of the United States sits here in this very building. The lawyers licensed in Nebraska, however careless may be their methods of granting licenses to practice law there, after they have been admitted to practice before the supreme court of their State three years, can come here and have the Senator from Nebraska introduce them, and have them licensed to practice before the highest court of the land, and carry in the hollow of their hands the honor and property and life of any citizen of this Nation who happens to employ them.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the Senator say three years?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no such provision in the bill. If the Senate will put a limitation of three years in the bill and provide that a State license shall exist for three years before it becomes effective on the Federal Government, it would improve the bill very much.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not wish to be impertinent, but I should like to ask if the Senator from Arkansas owns a car here?

Mr. CARAWAY. I know the Senator from Wisconsin does not want to be impertinent, and I shall tell him that I have a car with one flat tire and a starter that will not work.

Mr. LENROOT. That answers the purpose of the question, is the Senator aware, when he speaks of not giving full faith and credit to the action of the States, that the adjoining State of Maryland does not recognize an auto license granted under the authority of Congress?

Mr. CARAWAY. I recognize that the adjoining State of Maryland does not want a community here of just a few square miles, where nearly everybody owns a car, including the Senator from Wisconsin, who did not pay a tax on it here, operating cars in Maryland without paying something to Maryland for doing it. That is the situation. It is not that they require you to stand an examination to operate your Ford in Maryland, but that you pay some tax for using the roads, and, of course, I am with them. They paid their money for building their roads.

Mr. LENROOT. I am from Wisconsin, and the State of Maryland does not exact any tax on cars having a Wisconsin license. It is only a car carrying a license under the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States which is required to pay an extra license in Maryland.

Mr. CARAWAY. And for that reason the Senator from Wisconsin has made no effort to have the law repealed, because it recognizes his Wisconsin license. This is an experimental measure. I do not know, and no one here knows, what problems may be met in solving the navigation of the air. If you want to delay it for 10 or 15 or 20 years, make your laws so obnoxious that the people will stay out of the air. There is no possibility, I take it, that a man is going to be any better by having had a Federal license issued to him than if he has his permit from a State to fly.

The Senator from Nebraska says he wants to get into what he calls the band wagon, and I do not want that to become a habit with him, because he has been useful, and if he gets to riding in the band wagon, with his feet hanging out, he will not be any more than a number, and will lose a great deal of his usefulness. I do not want him to succeed, because habit sometimes destroys very useful men.

Anyway, it does not strike me—and this I say seriously, and then I shall be through—that we can afford to say that we can not trust the States, which elect us, to license the man who wants to run an airplane. You get your commission from the State, and I presume you would resent an effort by the Federal Government to supervise the choice of a Senator who should be elected by the State of Nebraska, but you are very much opposed to having a man who is going to run a flyer in the air licensed by no other authority than the sovereign State of Nebraska.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I confess that I am guilty of being a member of the committee who reserved the right in the committee to oppose the incorporation of this section in the bill.

It is true, as the Senator has stated, that upon the merits of the proposition it is only fair to say that a majority of the committee were of the opinion that the section ought not to be incorporated, but it was incorporated through the circumstance indicated by him. I do not wish to criticize the majority of the committee or the chairman of the committee for making that compromise. The rules of the Senate as they exist would perhaps justify it. Of course, upon a bill of this kind that is not of major importance; unless there is almost unanimous agreement, action by the Senate can be indefinitely postponed. Compromises are sometimes necessary where they would not be necessary if it were possible for the Senate under its rules to transact business by a majority in a reasonable time.

But, Mr. President, upon the merits of the proposition, if we are going to exact licenses at all from interstate operators, the Congress of the United States ought not in this or any other case to accept a license from a State to take the place of a license from the Federal Government under laws enacted by us. The purpose of the whole bill, so far as licensing of operators is concerned, is to make travel through the air safer. If, as the Senator from Arkansas intimates, we should accept with full faith and credit the action of a State as equivalent to a license under the United States Government, we would do a very great injury to the progress of aeronautics, because travel through the air will develop just to the extent that the public are convinced that travel through the air is safe and conducted by experienced operators.

When the Senator talks about accepting the action of a State as equal to that of the Congress of the United States, I wonder if the Senator from Arkansas would wish his State in corporation matters to accept the corporation laws of some other States of the Union that we have had, at least, and under the operation of the laws of his State accept them with all the powers and all the grants that I undertake to say the State of Arkansas does not accept any more than my State accepts.

Now, here is an opportunity to vote upon the proposition on the merits, and it is very clear to me that if the bill is to accomplish its purpose, secure qualified operators of airplanes, secure operators in whom the public will have confidence, so that there may be development, then the amendment ought to be agreed to and section 9 should be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] should be adopted. I think if section 9 remains in the bill it would be a great deal better not to require any Federal license at all than to require a Federal license and at the same time allow the license of any State to qualify an aviator in interstate commerce. The reason for that belief is that with that provision in the bill the opportunity and consequently the tendency would be for those desiring to act as pilots of machines engaged in interstate commerce to secure a license where the standard was lowest and where it was easiest to obtain. The consequence would be that not only the Federal license and requirements for license would be disregarded and rendered useless, but also the license and requirements of every State in the Union which had rigid requirements or proper requirements, because they could be evaded by the obtaining of a license in some State where the standards were much lower.

Of course there are provisions in the bill which are important that are not affected by the question of license, such as regulating air lanes of travel and authorizations for executive regulation of planes passing each other, making toward the safety of aerial navigation. These are important and not affected by the question of license. In so far as the license itself is concerned and that feature of the bill, I repeat that it would be much better that it should be left out of the bill altogether than to require a license and authorize the fixing of certain Federal standards and then put in the bill a provision by which they could all be evaded.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was temporarily called from the Chamber. May I inquire of the Senator from Washington whether his position is that there should be no standard fixed either by the State or the Federal Government, or that if a standard is fixed by the State it shall be of no value and may be superseded by the standard established by the Federal Government?

Mr. POINDEXTER. My position is that there ought to be a standard fixed by the Federal Government, and that ought to be mandatory upon every person engaged in interstate commerce in the air. In the absence of that, the States ought to be left to their own regulation without nullifying their provisions by giving the Federal sanction to a license issued in a State that has the lowest standard of requirement.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, if his view prevails, it would leave the Federal Government, where it exercises authority at all, in supreme control of the entire subject of aviation interstate in character, and no State might issue a license to an aviator or to a pilot which would authorize him to fly in interstate commerce or which might be recognized by the Federal Government.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My position is that the same rule should be applied to this sort of interstate commerce that has been applied to the regulation of other methods of interstate commerce. There is nothing novel about it. Wherever the Federal Government undertakes to regulate interstate commerce, in so far as we have legislated in the past its regulations are exclusive of any other jurisdiction. No State can in any way whatever interfere with them. I think we ought to adhere to that policy.

Mr. KING. Of course, under that policy it will only be a little while until the Federal Government will require licenses for drivers of motor vehicles, and a man may not drive his own machine or his own chauffeur may not drive the owner's machine from Maryland into New York unless he gets a Federal license. We will all be subject to the dominating power of the new federalism. We can not breathe, or take any step whatever, or exercise any right, individual or State, but we will be subject to the all-powerful Federal Government. It would be a splendid Prussianized Government to live in under the theory of a good many of our public men.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would be a good deal like a case decided, I think, by the Supreme Court of Georgia, where the statute required a locomotive engineer to blow the whistle whenever he saw an animal on the track. The train ran over a flock of geese and killed them, and the owner of the geese sued the railroad company because the engineer had not complied with the regulation. It was argued in the opinion that the animal kingdom was very extensive, that even worms might be included in it, but it was stated that it would be perfectly ridiculous to apply that statute to such a case as a fish-worm being on the track because it was construed to be a member of the animal kingdom; consequently it was necessary to draw the line somewhere, and they thought the goose was a proper place at which to draw the line.

Mr. KING. Of course, the theory of the Senator is that each State is a goose, and that the proper way is to assume that because it is a goose the State has no rights, and therefore we shall have a devouring vulture, the Federal Government, to eat up the goose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to strike out section 9.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read section 9. The reading clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That operators and pilots of aircraft duly licensed under State laws shall be deemed to be duly licensed operators and pilots under this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness in his family.

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "yea."

Mr. PHIPPS (when Mr. NICHOLSON's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. NICHOLSON] is detained on account of a death in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the week.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana. I do not know how he would vote if present and therefore I do not feel at liberty to vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I do not see him in his seat. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "nay."

Mr. DIAL. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. STANLEY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST]. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. RANDELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BROUSSARD] is absent from the Senate and from the city on official business. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] are detained at a hearing before the Committee on Finance.

I also wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Ball	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Spencer
Borah	Kendrick	Newberry	Stanfield
Brandagee	Kenyon	Norris	Sterling

Edge	McCumber	Reed	Williams
Elkins	McKellar	Robinson
Ernst	McKinley	Shields

So Mr. NORRIS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not sure as to the purpose of section 19 of the bill, and in order that I may obtain the views of the committee I move to strike out that section. In order that Senators may get my point of view, I will read the section. It is as follows:

SEC. 19. That the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction over all claims and controversies involving aircraft, their owners, lessees, charterers, and operators licensed thereunder, with the right of appeal as in other cases.

I am not sure, Mr. President, that the latter part of the sentence qualifies the former; I am not sure whether it is intended that the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction over all controversies relating to the aircraft which may be used in purely intrastate commerce. I see no reason, even if that is the view or is not the view, why we should attempt to legislate in connection with this bill in regard to judicial matters and the conference of power upon the Federal courts. The jurisdiction of the Federal courts with respect to controversies between citizens of different States is well defined. Certainly, we do not want to modify existing juridical matters; we do not intend to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, or to shear the Federal courts of jurisdiction. We can not intend to impinge upon the authority and jurisdiction of the State courts. It seems to me that this section is absolutely out of place. If it is an attempt to restrict the jurisdiction of the State courts, it is wrong; and if it is not intended to increase the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, then there is no necessity for it, because their power now under existing law is well defined, well recognized, and well understood. So it seems to me that there is no necessity for this section, and that it ought to go out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am perfectly willing that the section shall be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I now move to strike out section 21, on page 10, for the reason that in preceding sections the authority is given to the Secretary of Commerce to promulgate rules and regulations and that section contains an unnecessary duplication.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am inclined to think that that section ought to be left in, for there may be some regulations which do not come under the special provisions of the proposed act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah to strike out section 21 of the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish in the Department of Commerce a bureau to be known as the civil bureau of aeronautics.

SEC. 2. That the word "aircraft" as employed in this act shall embrace every type of flying machine, conveyance, or vehicle now known or hereafter invented, devised, or developed, whether or not used in the carriage or transportation of persons or property, or without persons or property, flown, operated, or navigated in or through the air, and that the term "civil aircraft" as employed in this act shall embrace all forms of aircraft except those operated by the Army and the Navy.

The term "commerce" when used in this act means the flying, navigating, or operating of any civil aircraft in interstate or foreign commerce, or in, over, or through the District of Columbia, the Territories, dependencies, reservations, national parks, or over any place or building over which the United States has jurisdiction.

SEC. 3. That there shall be at the head of such bureau when established a commissioner of civil aeronautics, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum. There shall be also a chief clerk of said bureau who, in addition to the usual duties of a chief clerk, may act as commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary, and such other deputies, assistants, and employees as may be required from time to time, and for which appropriations shall have been made, and the Secretary of Commerce may, at any time, utilize the services of such officers or employees of any other bureau or division of the Department of Commerce as he may deem necessary in the administration of this act, or he may take from such bureaus or divisions such parts thereof as he may deem advisable to create the bureau of civil aeronautics or to consolidate such parts with that bureau.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Commerce, in conformity with the provisions of this act, to foster civil aviation in every way possible and to do all things necessary therefor, cooperating or consulting with all other established governmental agencies, Federal or State, and taking advantage to the fullest degree possible of the facilities they can offer. This shall include the following duties:

(a) To inspect, in order to safeguard life and property, all aircraft before it is used in commerce and certify as to its condition, capacity, and safety at the date of inspection, and to make the information contained in such certificate available to the public in such manner as he may prescribe.

(b) To establish aerial traffic rules and regulations for the manner of navigating and operating civil aircraft in order to safeguard life and property.

(c) To investigate and recommend air routes.

(d) To encourage the establishment of landing fields and air stations.

(e) To make recommendations to the Weather Bureau as to the necessary meteorological service.

(f) To study the possibilities for the development of civil aviation in the United States and to collect and disseminate information relative thereto.

(g) To investigate, record, and make public the causes of accidents in civil aviation.

(h) To exchange with foreign Governments through existing governmental channels information pertaining to civil aviation.

(i) To operate and for this purpose to purchase, when appropriations shall have been made to do so, such aircraft as the Secretary of Commerce may deem necessary for inspecting, licensing, regulating, and controlling the operation of civil aircraft, and for determining air routes, landing fields, and air stations, Government machines to be used if possible and the consent of the department having control of the same can be secured.

(j) To prepare and maintain a comprehensive survey and inventory of all industrial and civil aeronautical resources under the jurisdiction of the United States. The Secretary may direct the commissioner of civil aeronautics, or any other officer or employee referred to in section 3, to perform any or all of the aforesaid duties.

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of making effective the provisions of this act the Secretary of Commerce shall direct the Commissioner of Civil Aeronautics to provide regulations, which shall become effective upon the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, for the following:

(a) Licensing pilots and such other persons engaged in commerce as may be required for the public safety and upon good cause the suspension or revocation of such licenses.

(b) The registration, identification, inspection, and certification of all civil aircraft in commerce.

(c) The registration, identification, inspection, and certification of all civil landing fields or air stations used in commerce.

SEC. 6. That no civil aircraft shall be used in commerce unless owned by a person who is a citizen of the United States or its dependencies, and in the case of a partnership unless each member is such citizen: Provided, That in the case of a corporation or association no such aircraft shall be owned by such corporation or association unless the president and board of directors or the managing officers thereof, as the case may be, are citizens of the United States and the corporation or association itself is organized under the laws of the United States, or of a State, Territory, District, or possession thereof, and 75 per cent of the interest therein is owned by citizens of the United States.

SEC. 7. That all rules and regulations authorized under the provisions of this act shall, by the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, be formulated by the Commissioner of Civil Aeronautics after consultation with other established governmental agencies concerned, and upon the approval of such rules and regulations by the Secretary of Commerce they shall be promulgated by him and shall have the effect of law and be enforceable from the date of such promulgation unless otherwise provided therein. The Secretary of Commerce shall have the power to suspend or revoke such rules and regulations and to alter or amend the same and promulgate new rules and regulations, such alterations, amendments, and new rules and regulations not to take effect until at least six months shall have elapsed, and to take such steps as he may deem necessary to bring such changes to the notice of those affected.

SEC. 8. That, by the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, the Commissioner of Civil Aeronautics shall, after consulting with other departments of the Government concerned, establish the conditions in order to safeguard life and property under which persons may be carried and property imported and exported in civil aircraft in commerce, and to prescribe the areas within which aircraft entering the United States, its Territories and dependencies, or the waters thereof, are to alight and the conditions to be complied with by such aircraft, which shall become effective upon the approval of the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 9. That the same rights, privileges, and treatment shall be accorded to alien pilots operating foreign aircraft in this country which the country of that alien extends to our pilots operating their machines in such country, except that any prohibition against our licensed pilots shall apply to such alien pilots.

SEC. 10. That it shall be unlawful for any licensed pilot to guide or control any aircraft, while engaged in commerce, in a manner designed to give a demonstration of trick flying or aerial acrobatics or to divert the aircraft from a normal flight.

SEC. 11. That it shall be unlawful to use any civil aircraft in commerce except in conformity with the provisions of this act and such rules and regulations as may be promulgated pursuant thereto.

SEC. 12. That any violation of the provisions of this act, or of any rule or regulation promulgated in conformity therewith, shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or both.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of Commerce and such assistants as he may designate shall have power to conduct hearings, to subpoena witnesses, to send for documents and other papers, to administer oaths, and to take such testimony as may be necessary in determining the qualifications of individuals for licenses or registration certificates to operate aircraft or in the suspension or revocation of such licenses or registration certificates, or to enable him, or them, to make effective any of the provisions of this act, or any rule or regulation promulgated in conformity therewith.

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to fix the fees and charges for such inspection, registration, and licensing authorized by this act to cover the cost thereof, which fees and charges shall be collected by the Secretary of Commerce and covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 15. That for the purpose of encouraging the development of civil aviation in the United States, full cooperation shall be given by the Secretary of Commerce to the owners or operators of civil aircraft, and that the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce may, in cases of emergency, sell to any owner or operator of civil aircraft landing on an air station or landing field under their respective jurisdictions aviation fuel, oil, supplies, and provide necessary mechanical services of an emergency character, under such regulations as they may approve and promulgate for their respective services. The proceeds from such sales and services shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the appropriations involved.

SEC. 16. That the Secretary of Commerce shall publish annually a bulletin setting forth all licenses issued or revoked, together with field reports of all flying activities, accidents, and field and route data, under the control of the bureau.

SEC. 17. That the commissioner of civil aeronautics shall annually, at the close of each fiscal year, make a report to the Secretary of Commerce giving an account of all moneys received and disbursed by him and describing the work done by the bureau, and the Secretary of Commerce shall transmit such report to Congress with the annual report of the Department of Commerce.

SEC. 18. That all salaries provided herein and all expenses incurred under the provisions of this act shall be paid out of such money as may be appropriated therefor by Congress, and such appropriations as may be needed to carry out the objects and purposes of this act are hereby authorized.

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to make such additional rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 20. That if any portion of this act be declared invalid, it shall not affect any of the other portions thereof, which other portions shall continue in full force and effect.

SEC. 21. That this act shall take effect immediately, and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to create a bureau of civil aeronautics in the Department of Commerce, to encourage and regulate the operation of civil aircraft in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes."

INCREASE OF SALARIES IN PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7077) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 477 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 477. The salaries of the officers mentioned in the preceding section shall be as follows:

"The Commissioner of Patents, $6,000 a year.

"The First Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $5,000 a year.

"The Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $5,000 a year.

"Five examiners in chief, $5,000 a year each."

SEC. 2. That so much of section 440 of the Revised Statutes as follows the words "in the Patent Office" and refers to said office only be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner, $4,000; 1 solicitor, $5,000; 5 law examiners, at $4,000 each; examiner of classification, $4,200; 2 examiners of interference, at $5,000 each; examiner of trade-marks, $3,900; 1 first assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs, $3,000; 1 second assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs, at $2,700, and 1 at $2,500; 1 third assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs, at $2,200, and 1 at $2,050; 6 fourth assistant examiners of trade-marks and designs—2 at $1,800 each, 2 at $1,650 each, and 2 at $1,500 each; examiners—48 principals, at $3,900 each; 100 first assistants—40 at $3,300 each, 30 at $3,100 each, and 30 at $2,900 each; 100 second assistants—40 at $2,800 each, 30 at $2,500 each, and 30 at $2,350 each; 100 third assistants—40 at $2,200 each,

30 at $2,050 each, and 30 at $1,925 each; 100 fourth assistants—40 at $1,800 each, 30 at $1,650 each, and 30 at $1,500 each; financial clerk, who shall give bond in such amount as the Commissioner of Patents may determine, $2,500; librarian, $2,700; 8 chiefs of nonexamining divisions, at $2,500 each; 8 assistant chiefs of nonexamining divisions, at $2,100 each; private secretary, to be selected and appointed by the commissioner, $2,000; translator of languages, $2,400; assistant translator of languages, $2,000; clerks—22 of class 4, at $1,800 each; 33 of class 3, at $1,600 each; 100 of class 2, at $1,400 each; 125 of class 1, at $1,200 each; 100, at $1,100 each; skilled draftsmen, 1 at $1,800 and three at $1,600 each; 3 draftsmen, at $1,400 each; forty copyists, at $1,100 each; 36 messengers, at $1,080 each; 13 laborers, at $1,080 each; 47 examiners' aids and 39 copy pullers, who shall be selected without regard to apportionment, $720 each.

"For special and temporary services of typewriters certified by the Civil Service Commission, who may be employed in such numbers, at $3 per diem, as may, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Patents, be necessary to keep current the work of furnishing manuscript copies of records, $7,500.

"For purchase of law, professional, and other reference books and publications and scientific books, and expense of transporting publications of patents issued by the Patent Office to foreign Governments, $10,000.

"For investigating the question of public use or sale of inventions for two years or more prior to filing applications for patents, and such other questions arising in connection with applications for patents as may be deemed necessary by the Commissioner of Patents, and expense attending defense of suits instituted against the Commissioner of Patents, $2,500.

"For the share of the United States in the expense of conducting the International Bureau at Berne, Switzerland, $750."

SEC. 3. That section 487 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 487. The Commissioner of Patents, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may prescribe rules and regulations governing the recognition of agents, attorneys, or other persons representing applicants or other parties before his office, and may require of such persons, agents, or attorneys, before being recognized as representatives of applicants or other persons, that they shall show that they are of good moral character and in good repute, are possessed of the necessary qualifications to enable them to render to applicants or other persons valuable service, and are likewise competent to advise and assist applicants or other persons in the presentation or prosecution of their applications or other business before the office. And the Commissioner of Patents may, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, suspend or exclude, either generally or in any particular case, from further practice before his office any person, agent, or attorney shown to be incompetent or disreputable, or guilty of gross misconduct, or who refuses to comply with the said rules and regulations, or who shall, with intent to defraud in any manner, deceive, mislead, or threaten any applicant or prospective applicant, or other person having immediate or prospective business before the office, by word, circular, letter, or by advertising. The reasons for any such suspension or exclusion shall be duly recorded. And the action of the commissioner may be reviewed upon the petition of the person so refused recognition or so suspended or excluded by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia under such conditions and upon such proceedings as the said court may by its rules determine."

SEC. 4. That the third paragraph of the act of January 12, 1895 (ch. 23, sec. 73, 28 Stat. L., p. 619), as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Third. The Official Gazette of the United States Patent Office in numbers sufficient to supply all who shall subscribe therefor at $5 per annum; also for exchange for other scientific publications desirable for the use of the Patent Office; also to supply one copy to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress; also to supply one copy to eight such public libraries having over 1,000 volumes, exclusive of Government publications, as shall be designated by each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, with 100 additional copies, together with weekly, monthly, and annual indexes for all the same; of the Official Gazette the 'usual number' shall not be printed."

SEC. 5. That section 4883 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4883. All patents shall be issued in the name of the United States of America, under the seal of the Patent Office, and shall either be signed by the Commissioner of Patents or have his name printed thereon and attested by an Assistant Commissioner of Patents or by one of the law examiners duly designated by the commissioner, and shall be recorded, together with the specifications, in the Patent Office in books to be kept for that purpose."

SEC. 6. That section 4898 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4898. Every patent or any interest therein shall be assignable in law by an instrument in writing, and the patentee or his assigns or legal representatives may in like manner grant and convey an exclusive right under his patent to the whole or any specified part of the United States. An assignment, grant, or conveyance shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, without notice, unless it is recorded in the Patent Office within three months from the date thereof or prior to such subsequent purchase or mortgage."

"If any such assignment, grant, or conveyance of any patent shall be acknowledged before any notary public of the several States or Territories or the District of Columbia, or any commissioner of any court of the United States for any District or Territory, or before any secretary of legation or consular officer authorized to administer oaths or perform notarial acts under section 1750 of the Revised Statutes, the certificate of such acknowledgment, under the hand and official seal of such notary or other officer, shall be prima facie evidence of the execution of such assignment, grant, or conveyance."

SEC. 7. That section 4906 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4906. The clerk of any court of the United States, for any District or Territory wherein testimony is to be taken for use in any contested case pending in the Patent Office, shall, upon the application of any party thereto, or of his agent or attorney, issue a subpoena for any witness residing or being within such District or Territory, commanding him to appear and testify before any officer in such District or Territory authorized to take depositions and affidavits at any time and place in the subpoena stated. But no witness shall be required to attend at any place more than 40 miles from the place where the subpoena is served upon him; and the provisions of section 869 of the Revised Statutes relating to the issuance of subpoenas duces tecum shall apply to contested cases in the Patent Office."

SEC. 8. That section 4921 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4921. The several courts vested with jurisdiction of cases arising under the patent laws shall have power to grant injunctions according to the course and principles of courts of equity, to prevent the violation of any right secured by patent, on such terms as the court may deem reasonable; and upon a decree being rendered in any such case for an infringement the complainant shall be entitled to recover, in addition to the profits to be accounted for by the defendant, the damages the complainant has sustained thereby, and the court shall assess the same or cause the same to be assessed under its direction. If on the proofs it shall appear that the complainant has suffered damage from the infringement or that the defendant has realized profits therefrom to which the complainant is justly entitled, but that such damages or profits are not susceptible of calculation and determination with reasonable certainty, the court may, on evidence tending to establish the same, in its discretion, receive opinion or expert testimony, which is hereby declared to be competent and admissible, subject to the general rules of evidence applicable to this character of testimony; and upon such evidence and all other evidence in the record the court may adjudge and decree the payment by the defendant to the complainant of a reasonable sum as profits or general damages for the infringement: Provided, That this provision shall not affect pending litigation. And the court shall have the same power to increase such damages, in its discretion, as is given to increase the damages found by verdicts in actions in the nature of actions of trespass upon the case; but in any suit or action brought for the infringement of any patent there shall be no recovery of profits or damages for any infringement committed more than six years before the filing of the bill of complaint or the issuing of the writ in such suit or action, and this provision shall apply to existing causes of action. And it shall be the duty of the clerks of such courts within one month after the filing of any action, suit, or proceeding arising under the patent laws to give notice thereof in writing to the Commissioner of Patents, setting forth in order so far as known the names and addresses of the litigants, names of the inventors, and the designating number or numbers of the patent or patents upon which the action, suit, or proceeding has been brought, and in the event any other patent or patents be subsequently included in the action, suit, or proceeding by amendment, answer, cross bill, or other pleading, the clerk shall give like notice thereof to the Commissioner of Patents, and within one month after the decision is rendered or a decree issued the clerk of the court shall give notice thereof to the Commissioner of Patents, and it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Patents on receipt of such notice forthwith to indorse the same upon the file wrapper of the said patent or patents and to incorporate the same as a part of the contents of said file or file wrapper; and for each notice required to be furnished to the Commissioner of Patents in compliance herewith a fee of 50 cents shall be taxed by the clerk as costs of suit."

SEC. 9. That section 4934 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4934. The following shall be the rates for patent fees:

"On filing each original application for a patent, except in design cases, $20.
 "On issuing each original patent, except in design cases, $20.
 "In design cases: For 3 years and 6 months, $10; for 7 years, $15; for 14 years, $30.
 "On every application for the reissue of a patent, $30.
 "On filing each disclaimer, $10.
 "On an appeal for the first time from the primary examiners to the examiners in chief, $10.
 "On every appeal from the examiners in chief to the commissioner, $20.

"For uncertified printed copies of specifications and drawings of patents, 10 cents per copy: Provided, That the Commissioner of Patents may supply public libraries of the United States with such copies as published, for $50 per annum: Provided further, That the Commissioner of Patents may exchange copies of United States patents for those of foreign countries.

"For copies of records made by the Patent Office, excluding printed copies, 10 cents per hundred words.

"For each certificate, 25 cents.

"For recording every assignment, agreement, power of attorney, or other paper of 300 words or under, $1; of over 300 and under 1,000 words, $2; and for each additional thousand words or fraction thereof, $1; for each additional patent or application included or involved in one writing, where more than one is so included or involved, 25 cents additional.

"For copies of drawings, the reasonable cost of making them."

SEC. 10. That the provisions of section 4934 as herein amended shall take effect 60 days after the approval of this act.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

RELIEF AGAINST DEPRESSION AND UNEMPLOYMENT.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill the Senator from California has called up, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2749) to prepare for future cyclical periods of depression and unemployment by systems of public works. I do not know that a notice confers any right, but I am anxious to have that bill disposed of.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President—

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield to the Senator from Illinois, who desires to submit some remarks.

FOREIGN CAUSES OF DOMESTIC DEPRESSION.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I wish to address myself as briefly as may be to certain questions at issue in the country, and more especially upon the theme that the Democratic political campaign of 1922 has begun. Already the Democratic speakers here in Congress, or gathered in Tennessee, New York, and Ohio, have made it plain that they have discovered their issue and found their political opportunity in the economic distress which has fallen upon America, no less than upon all of the other countries of the world. Of course, we of the majority must expect to be held to our tasks by the criticism of very able opponents. If we were to weary in our labors to make good the waste of war; if we were to tire in our efforts to repair the injury to industry, agriculture, and public credit wrought in ignorant arrogance by the Democratic Dictators, we should be pricked to put forth new energies by those leaders on the other side who will search for the imperfections which lie in all human measures and who will ably express those differences of policy and of opinion which must exist in every free assembly. But we know, too, sir, from dreary experience of recent debates and from the recent speeches of conspicuous critics of President Harding that we must listen to the frenzied phantasies, the demagogic diatribes, the raucous rhodomontades of those who would shout and shriek their way to the position of leadership held by Democrats like the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. This I say, sir, has been borne out wherever Democratic chiefs have met and spoken, wherever they have sought to reform their broken lines, to give heart to their disheartened forces, and to summon to their sides some of the millions who repudiated them, their leadership, and their works in the last presidential election.

A fortnight ago there emerged from the political limbo of lost souls the individual whom the Democratic captains, in emulation of P. T. Barnum and Mark Twain, gaily nominated for the Presidency, to afford the American people some mental relaxation after the boredom and irritation engendered by the expiring administration. An analysis of the 2,000 words delivered by Gov. Cox on January 25 teaches us that he has forgotten nothing and has learned nothing since the people last retired him from public view. He resumes his abuse of the senior Senator from Massachusetts, who, after 30 years in the Nation's service, with blithe hardihood seemingly continues to endure both billingsgate and balderdash. How Capt. Brennan and Capt. Murphy must have laughed to read that after 18 months Gov. Cox had spoken, again to upbraid Senator Lodge for being an American!

I thank God for that stout old American, who loves his country! Gov. Cox, we hear, is going to Massachusetts to defeat Senator LODGE. Israel Putnam, Nathan Hale, Samuel Adams, John Stark—come forth, New England patriots, all of ye, to hearken to James Cox pour forth his imprecations upon the gray old head of HENRY CABOT LODGE because he loved the League too little and America too well!

If you will follow phrase after phrase to the end of the 2,000 words in which Gov. Cox has framed the issues and presented the platform and the program for the Democratic Party you will find that some, at least, of the Democratic leadership holds that—

First, the world-wide and short-lived prosperity which feverishly followed the armistice was Democratic;

Second, the economic depression into which the whole world has since fallen was wrought not by the waste of war but by the Republican Party.

You will discover:

Third, that Democratic leaders believe that although the greater part of Europe is maintaining armies of which she can not meet the costs; that although her debtor Governments have not overcome their deficits; that although they can not pay the interest due America, we should lend, lend, lend more, more, and more;

Fourth, Democratic leaders still hold the irrevocable conviction that we must put upon our necks the bonds of the League of Nations.

What, sir, are the facts discernible to those who will look through the fog of phrases? Every informed, intelligent, and honest man knows that the present depression of prices and collapse of trade are due first to the ruin and waste wrought by the war. There are some, and among them Democratic Senators, who hold that the depression in American prices was precipitated, and the contraction of credit accelerated, through the action of the Federal Reserve Board during the Democratic administration. If the waste of war be the cause of our distress, every informed, intelligent, and honest man must allow that the causes which may retard, the removable causes which may delay, the return of general prosperity are inextricably related to one another. They are profligate public expenditure, resulting either in punitive taxation or a depreciated currency, or both.

In the light of these facts, Mr. President, let us consider for a moment the ills bequeathed us and the measures taken by our Government to cure them. Since our partisan critics are blaming a Republican administration, let us consider the financial burden left us by the Wilson administration and the Republican efforts to lighten it.

I do not dwell now upon the new laws for the protection and relief of agriculture, although three of these, at least, are of enduring importance. I do not speak of the legislation we have passed to sustain the export trade. I do not put forward the Budget act. The country is coming to know that the legislative program already written by this Congress is more far-reaching and comprises more constructive measures than any written in time of peace at any one session within the lifetime of any of us now living. Therefore I wish now to call attention to dollars spent and dollars saved, considering their inestimable influence on our prosperity.

The indelible record shows that $11,000,000,000 were expended upon the Artillery program, the aircraft program, and to meet the cost of the Shipping Board and the United States Railroad Administration during the war. For this vast outlay the Democratic administration sent to the fighting front less than 200 cannon and less than 200 aircraft manufactured in America on the account of the American Government during the Great War; for this vast sum the Democratic administration during the war produced but a single Shipping Board built ship to carry soldiers across seas and made of the American railroad system but one vast railroad wreck.

Here we know that $11,000,000,000 were in great part wasted. With what waste or with what wisdom were expended the other $11,000,000,000 advanced to other Governments by a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury we can never know; but we do know that, wasted or well spent, the two sums together constitute $22,000,000,000 of the $24,000,000,000 of the American national debt.

For the fiscal year 1920 a Democratic administration asked, exclusive of the service of the debt, an appropriation of $9,700,000,000 by a Republican Congress, which voted three billions less than were asked for by the Democratic administration.

For the fiscal year 1922 the Democratic administration submitted estimates for $4,800,000,000, exclusive of the service of the debt, and a Republican Congress voted appropriations in the sum of a billion dollars less than the amount asked for by the Democratic administration.

A Republican administration, with rigid frugality, is spending millions less than were voted, and has submitted for the ensuing year estimates lower than those submitted for the previous year by a Democratic administration by nearly $800,000,000.

For the fiscal year of 1923 we shall spend, exclusive of the interest on the debt, a little over one-third of the sum sought to be spent by the Democrats for the fiscal year of 1920. In three years we have slashed by two-thirds the original prodigal spending program of the Democratic administration.

The rejection of the profligate Democratic estimates of expenditures by a Republican Congress so conserved the resources of the Government that since the Republican victory in 1918 the national debt has been diminished from the surplus revenues by over $2,000,000,000.

Furthermore, the revenue act passed by the present Congress will reduce the sum of Federal taxation for the current calendar year by the estimated amount of three-quarters of a billion dollars and for the calendar year 1923 by an estimated half billion dollars more. Before this year has run its course we shall have found our way back to a prewar rate of expenditure for the normal purposes of the Government in time of peace.

There is no other Government in the world, Mr. President, which so persistently, consistently, and drastically has reduced public expenditure as that of the United States since the Republican Congress came into power after the election of 1918. If our agriculture and industry have been stricken by the depression common to the world, appropriations have been reduced, the burden to the taxpayer has been lightened, and there has been no governmental deficit in the United States.

Turn, if you will, to Asia, to Europe, and to the Americas below the Rio Grande. You will find everywhere unchecked public expenditure, deficits in the public revenues, a depression in trade, and a depreciated currency as measured by the American dollar. Our Government, beyond peradventure, is solvent. Our Government, beyond cavil, has reduced and is reducing its armed forces by land and by sea. Our Government, beyond question, has reduced by thousands, and by thousands more is reducing, the number of public employees. Our Government, beyond all argument and beyond denial, is saving, saving.

If this Government, indisputably and immediately solvent, has been able to reduce, has been able almost amazingly to curtail its annual expenditure; if it has been able almost to disband its land armies, and has dismissed its civil employees not by scores but by brigades and divisions; is it unbecoming that we should inquire what steps have been taken by the other States whose associate in the war we were, and whose creditor we are, to make an end to their deficits, to rehabilitate their currencies, to restore their credit, and to resume interest payment upon their debts?

I have not been able to find any evidence that until this last month there had been any appreciable reduction in the number of civil functionaries by any of the debtor States of continental Europe, whether they were our enemies or our associates in the late war; but I have before me a table of land armaments maintained by seven of the continental States, as prepared last week by responsible American military authority:

	Men.
Belgium.....	115,000
Jugoslavia.....	140,000
Czechoslovakia.....	150,000
Rumania.....	190,000
Italy.....	250,000
Poland.....	290,000
France.....	750,000

There are, then, nearly two million armed men encamped and garrisoned about the capital of the League of Nations, to which Gov. Cox and Dr. Wilson will summon the Democratic Party to drag free America in the next election.

The currents of public opinion have steadily borne the destiny of America eastward—

The other day quoth James E. Cox, the quondam candidate for the Presidency—eastward, nearer each day to the seat of the League of Nations at Geneva.

If you will read the record of the League, written by those who have served it—the record of the League which I hold in my hand to-day, you will learn that in the field of arbitration it has failed as often as it has succeeded, and that its successes in no wise differ from minor arbitrations of frontier disputes in bygone days. You will learn, too, Mr. President, if you will examine the record further, that in the restoration of European credit, in the curtailment of deficits, in the limitation of armaments by sea and by land, in the restraint of rancors between the peoples, in the quieting of old enmities and in the abatement of new hates, in the solution of great questions, in the establishment of any true concord in Europe, the League has failed, utterly failed. And yet the Democratic leaders fancy that the American people will turn this year to that which they rejected in the last election.

If two years ago the League promised to enmesh the American people in the military rivalries of Europe, if it promised war rather than peace, I dare ye friends of the League to count the bayonets which beckon us to Geneva to-day! With the dual monarchy riven and dismembered, with Germany utterly disarmed, to-day there are as many soldiers in Europe as there were in 1914, while marshaled about the glorious banners of the imperishable people of France there are over three-quarters of a million men—as many as when before the Great War she faced the unhumiliated hosts of the allied autocrats.

The League which at best has set up a second Hague tribunal, and which at worst has served to preserve an unenforceable treaty, certainly has done nothing to quiet Europe or to disarm its hosts. In its stead the supreme council has met to compose the policies of those ancient rivals whose differences broke forth during the Washington conference and blocked the fullest consummation of our peaceful purposes. The Genoa conference, which was to have undertaken what the League and the supreme council would not or could not do, halts for the conciliation of their imperial purposes. The reduction of European armies, the restoration of European credit, the resumption of American exports, must wait while the two dominant democracies of Christian Europe divide their Moslem inheritance! Those gentlemen who would make a virtuous league out of our economic necessities, refuse to see that if we are to help Europe in her reconstruction she must help us so to do. Europe must settle her political differences, reduce her armies, retrench her expenditures, and check the inflation of her currencies before we can grant new credits.

During the war the Government of the United States lent to the European Governments $11,000,000,000. Since the signing of the armistice European industry, European municipalities, and the European national Governments have found credits in the United States to the estimated amount of $7,000,000,000 more. It is not too much to say that during the last six or eight years American advances to Europe have aggregated $20,000,000,000. Even last year our exports exceeded our imports by two billions, two billions for which obviously we got neither goods nor cash. The sum of interest annually due the Government of the United States from the seven European Governments of whose 2,000,000 armed men I have spoken would amount to two hundred and eighty-five millions, a sum equal to more than half the annual cost of their armies. Considering these figures and contemplating the reform of European policy manifestly prerequisite to the establishment of new European credits in America, I ask you to read the following from the text of the speech of the Democratic presidential candidate and leader of the Democratic Party:

Europe requires credit. America had a prosperity upon which credit could have been given. American gold advanced, would scarcely have left our vaults, because it would have been merely the base of financial transactions for the products of our farms and factories. Our vast surplus would have brought happiness to Europe and maintained prosperity at home.

Gov. Cox says:

America had a prosperity upon which credit could have been given.

Where, I ask you, was the security—the security, I say—upon which the payment of interest or capital could be based?

Let me ask who would have paid in current coin for the surplus goods which Gov. Cox would have us send abroad and on account of which he says Europe can borrow but can not pay? Who would pay the purchase price in current coin, and how would peoples and Governments which can not meet the interest on the debt to our Government, which in the four years since the armistice have borrowed $7,000,000,000, how would they give security for the capital lent or how would they pay interest on the vast loans which Gov. Cox believes should be made in excess of the advances already made? Gov. Cox must mean that he would have the American Government or American banks lend billions more, and that without security and before Europe puts her house in order.

America, Mr. President, I venture, stands ready to help, but not if the advances which she makes indirectly maintain in Europe thousands of public functionaries, while she is dismissing them by the thousand at home; not if the advances which she makes indirectly maintain great armies, when she has almost disarmed by land and when she and the other maritime powers by agreement have limited arms by sea; not if her advances indirectly keep alive the rivalries and animosities which thwart the fruitful work of peace in which she would help Europe.

America believes that Europe may profit by the labor and by the example of the international conference on Monday adjourned. The modest man who summoned it and those who have guided its course never pretended, like the proponents of the league, to a regeneration of all mankind, nor even to the establishment of Utopia in a single hemisphere. If the conference has not accomplished all that it might have done, it has done far more than the wisest hoped that it might accomplish. It has given promise to Russia that when her people are prepared to exercise it, their sovereignty within their own frontiers will not be disputed. In a measure unequalled since the impact of western Europe upon eastern Asia, it has assured China the collaboration of the world to maintain her independent integrity and to find the means for securing her unity. It has put an end to a ruinous competition in naval armament. It has made an end to suspicions, to old resentments, and to newer rivalries between the maritime and Pacific powers which injured commerce and threatened peace. It has removed very far from us Americans all menace of war. In 12 weeks the Washington conference has done more to cast off the shackles upon trade, to lift the burdens off the backs of the taxpayers, and to break down the hindrances to international good will; it has done more for peace and more against war than has the League of Nations during all the three times 12 months of its existence.

Presently we shall be able to appraise the parts which the delegations and the several delegates have played, but we should be poor-spirited and mean Americans if we did not now accord to the true statesman who leads the opposition yonder the credit which is his due. His own work, great as it has been, will appear greater in history than it can appear to-day. That is no less true of the labors of the conference. It was summoned to undertake the realizable in the universal human purpose to banish war and exorcise hates. How ready shall we be to do our part in the rehabilitation of the Old World if another conference will do as much for peace and disarmament on land and in Europe as this one has done for disarmament at sea and for peace in the waters of Asia.

Already there are signs that the seed sown in Washington will bring forth not only the good fruits for which we hoped, but other and richer still; how soon and in what measure, only the Almighty can know.

Arborescunt diligens agricola quorum adspiciet baccam ipse numquam.
The faithful farmer plants trees of which he himself will never see the fruit.

As toiled in faith the humble husbandman, so in calm confidence and unstudied self-effacement labored the President of the United States to sow the seeds of peace. The rôle which he chose for himself was as modest as were the formal purposes of the conference. History will determine how great his part has been, by its judgment of the compacts completed here, but Warren Harding and his compatriots know now that the restoration of Europe can be found only in the spirit of mutual concession, of common sacrifice, of good will, of realizable idealism which marked the conference at Washington. It is in this spirit, and in this spirit only, that Europe, putting aside hatred and revenge for concord and peace, can bring us to help in the work which she proclaims she can not do alone.

I thank the Senator from California for yielding to me.

Mr. JOHNSON rose.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from California desire to address the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator desires to proceed, I do not wish to try to get recognition at this time.

INCREASE OF SALARIES IN PATENT OFFICE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7077) to increase the force and salaries in the Patent Office, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the bill which is now presented to the Senate represents a congressional effort to afford the necessary aid that the Patent Office may efficiently function. The bill is not unfamiliar to Members of the Senate. In substantial form it passed at a former Congress, but by reason of an amendment which was hardly germane to the subject matter there were differences in conference and ultimately, although passing both Houses, it did not become a law. The present measure has passed the House of Representatives and is reported by the Committee on Patents as transmitted from the House.

Familiarity at all with the Patent Office demonstrates the necessity for the bill. The increase in business in the Patent Office has been so disproportionate to the aid that has been accorded that office that it has fallen far behind, and unless some assistance be rendered we will reach soon an intolerable stage where it will be quite impossible ever efficiently to administer that office at all.

The bill provides for certain increases in salaries and for certain additions to the force. The payment of the amount required will not be taken from the Treasury at all. The receipts of the office are sufficient under the bill to justify the additional expenditures and to make unnecessary any draft at all upon the Treasury.

I wish to make that very clear, because in adopting and passing the bill we do not put any tax on the people or burden on the Treasury at all.

Now, because there had been hearings in the House, which were exhaustive, because at a prior time there were hearings upon the bill before the Senate committee, and because, as I assume, the Members of the Senate are thoroughly familiar with its provisions and with its designs, I do not deem it essential to go in vast detail into the various provisions of the measure. I am quite prepared to answer any queries that may be propounded, or to afford any information that may be desired, but beyond the statement that the bill, in the opinion of the House of Representatives and in the opinion of the Committee on Patents, is absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the Patent Office, I do not think more need be said at this time.

With that preliminary statement, unless there shall be something that some Senator desires to suggest, I ask that we may have a vote on the measure.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator if this was a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON. It was.

Mr. HARRISON. The committee were for the bill unanimously?

Mr. JOHNSON. The committee were for it. The House passed the bill. It is substantially the same bill that a previous Congress passed, and it failed then only because there was a difference existing in the conference upon an amendment which related, I think, to the Federal Trade Commission and which was not really germane to the purpose of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POLITICAL CAMPAIGN ISSUES.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I had intended to reply in brief to the speech of the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick], but I think I will let it go over until to-morrow, as I understand it is the desire to have an executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 15, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 14 (legislative day of February 13), 1922.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 14, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Be not silent unto us, O God, but may we draw from Thy presence composure and endurance. Reach through every loss and brand it with Thy sympathy; put forth Thy hand on every gain and bless it for Thy use. Shapen our minds and temper them to Thy will; touch our hearts and soften them to Thy call. We ask Thee to harden in us the heroic qualities of self-denial and self-sacrifice, and may they be emphasized in all our work. As it is the property of God to always have mercy, we turn to Thy infinite love, and here may we always have a place and find that peace which the world can never give. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a speech made by Mr. HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, at Quantico on Sunday night concerning Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by Mr. HUMPHREYS, of Mississippi, on Abraham Lincoln. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think that ought to be in eight-point type.

The SPEAKER. Yes; in eight-point type. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the address referred to:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

[Speech delivered by B. G. HUMPHREYS to the Marine Corps at Quantico, Va., on Sunday, Feb. 12, 1922.]

Ladies and gentlemen, 113 years ago Abraham Lincoln was born—born into the most humble environment humanly possible. Beyond the narrow circle of the very limited acquaintance of his parents this occurrence was unnoted and unknown, and yet it was an event which the increasing millions of the earth will celebrate with appropriate services through the generations before us.

God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform, and as I grow older and note how usual it is for the purposes of man to go astray, observe his vain struggles against the currents which sweep him on, see how little able he is to direct the course of his goings forth, I am impressed more and more by the wisdom and the truth of Shakespeare's couplet:

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough hew them how we may.

The news of his birth was not heralded abroad as the birth of another prince of the royal blood. There were no unusual manifestations in the firmament, no shepherds saw a light of strange beauty or heard the angles sing together. Yet out of that little cabin in the hills of Kentucky, the home of poverty and maybe of squalor, was to come a great light which in the fullness of God's providence would fill the earth and bless it.

It is difficult to get an accurate spiritual picture of a character like Lincoln. He came into fame in such troublous times, in days when the minds of men were inflamed with passion, when party strife was so intense and party spirit so intolerant; when the great war, with its immeasurable miseries and its unspeakable griefs and the bitter hatreds and maledictions and the lust for vengeance held high carnival in the hearts of men. All these contending and uncharitable elements almost obscure the real Lincoln as he lived and walked and had his daily being. But out of the clouds and fog and mists of unwarranted adulation and undeserved abuse two qualities seem to shine in ever-increasing brightness, and these are gentleness and courage.

In his beautiful poem of the Crimea, Bayard Taylor tells us that the bravest are the tenderest, the loving are the daring, and so the world has come to say of Lincoln as Mark Antony said of Brutus:

He was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that nature might stand up and say to all the world, "This was a man."

I shall not to-night undertake to recount even the high points in his career of great achievement or in any way attempt to assay the qualities of his genius. We are merely to pay our tribute to his memory, to acknowledge our gratitude for the blessing which his living brought to us as participants in the rich legacy he left to all mankind. I am of the South. To us no heritage could be so sacred, no legacy so rich as that our fathers fought and bled and suffered in the heroic legions of the gray, but I think that man has read our country's history to little purpose who does not catch an inspiration of patriotism from every battle field of this Republic.

I was in Canada a few years ago, and visited the Plains of Abraham, where the English under Wolfe and the French under Montcalm met in the bleeding business of war some 200 years ago. Both of these valiant soldiers were killed in that momentous battle, and a few years ago the descendants of the English who fought with Wolfe and the descendants of the French who fought with Montcalm erected upon this field a common monument to them both. On it is inscribed this beautiful legend:

To Wolfe and Montcalm:

Valor gave them a common death,
History gave them a common fame,
Posterity gave them a common monument.

When you boys from the North and you boys from the South, at Belleau Wood and through the Argonne, were carving in letters of light across the very face of the rock of ages the glory of the American marine, with every drop of your precious blood there shed, you were blotting out the last faded trace of sectionalism in this good land and hastening the day when a common monument to Lincoln and Davis and Grant and Lee and blue and gray shall greet the heavens upon every battle field of the War between the States.

And so we have paused here for the moment to-night to catch a new inspiration, to gird up our loins in a still higher resolve to press on undaunted through whatsoever difficulties may beset our paths toward the goal of all patriotism—"One God, one law, one element, and one far-off divine event to which the whole creation moves."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 5013. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to sanction the use of certain titles on tablets and other memorials; and

H. R. 9060. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lease a certain tract of land to the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas.

ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MASON, OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, the 26th day of February next, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10329, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] will resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10329, the Interior Department appropriation bill, with Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10329, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee ceased its labors on this bill there were points of order pending to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]. Is there anything further to be said on the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for a moment on one phase of the point of order. I want to call the attention of the Chair to a decision rendered by the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who must be admitted as one of the leading parliamentarians of the House, on one phase of this point of order directly in point. He based his decision on a long line of decisions running back for years. That decision was this, that where an appropriating committee had authority to bring in certain items of appropriation in a bill, but did not bring them in, and they presented the bill to the House without such amendment to be considered in Committee of the Whole, the membership had a right to depend upon the items that are contained in that bill and only such items, and they are not to be deemed as put on notice that new, extraneous items will be offered to the bill by the committee.

That decision held, Mr. Chairman, that even though an amendment is offered from the floor by the chairman of the committee having in charge the appropriation bill, it would have the same effect if it were offered by any other Member from the floor, not a member of the committee. This amendment is offered by the chairman, not coming from the committee. The committee did not see fit to place it on this bill. The committee had long hearings on this bill. The committee had before it this very item, because they brought it in here under a separate resolution at a different time. They did not see fit to put it in this bill, and the membership have the right to believe that when this bill was put upon the calendar on a report from the committee such an item would not then be offered by a member of the committee or the chairman. I offer that as authority sustaining not only the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] but the additional one which I made against the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is necessary to restate the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has read the record carefully.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation bill covers the appropriation for the Indian Service, including treaty items, items authorized by special legislation, and gratuity items which are in order under the rulings of the House. There is a heading in the bill, "Relieving distress, and so forth," under the Indian Service. Under that heading the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has offered an amendment providing for an appropriation relieving distress among the Indians.

A Member on the floor has the same right of offering an amendment to the bill that the committee has; precisely the same. The only question is whether the amendment is germane to the bill if it is offered as a separate paragraph. There are cases where an amendment offered on the floor has been held not germane to the bill, although possibly such an item might have been included in the appropriation bill itself. But there is no case which holds that where an amendment is germane to the bill a member of the Committee of the Whole has not the same right that the Committee on Appropriations has to propose an amendment on an item in the bill.

In this case the item is plainly germane to the bill, plainly germane to that portion of the bill to which it is offered, and the question as to the right of a Member from the floor to offer it, it seems to me, can not be gainsaid. I do not think there is any doubt about the right of any Member to have offered this amendment, a germane amendment to the bill, if it is otherwise in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Since the adoption in 1920 of the rule giving the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction over all matters of appropriation the rulings relative to what may properly be included within a general appropriation bill have very materially changed. It is plainly the function of the Committee on Appropriations now to appropriate for all purposes, including deficiencies; and so far as the Chair is able to ascertain from such decisions as have been made, the Chair can see no reason why a deficiency can not be appropriated for in a general appropriation bill. That is a matter largely within the discretion of the Committee on Appropriations itself. If it is true that that can be done—and the Chair has no doubt about it—it would seem that an amendment offered from the floor of the House which sought to include a deficiency appropriation in a general appropriation bill might and doubtless would also be in order and germane.

The point of order, however, must be sustained to the amendment as offered, because, in the opinion of the Chair, there is manifestly legislation in the amendment. The amendment first makes certain appropriations which shall be available during the current fiscal year, then, in a second provision, places a limitation upon the appropriation, and, finally, in this language includes a legislative provision:

And the War and Navy Departments and the United States Shipping Board shall, upon receipt of formal request therefor, and without charge, turn over to the Indian Service at the point of storage any such surplus food, clothing, or other supplies—

This is plainly legislation not within the jurisdiction of this committee, and because of the presence of that language in the amendment, the point of order being urged to the entire amendment and not to any particular section of it, the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CRAMTON. I offer the same amendment, omitting the language within the brackets.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 26, after line 13, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, and to remain available only until June 30, 1922, for the relief of destitution among Indians, to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for the furnishing of food, clothing, and other supplies: Provided, That where able-bodied Indians have no means of support this appropriation may be used to pay such Indians for work performed in the construction of roads or other improvements on the reservation, or for the purchase of necessary seeds and implements to enable them to cultivate their farms: And provided further, That where relief is given under this resolution to any tribe of Indians having available tribal funds held in trust for such tribe in the Treasury of the United States the expenditure for such relief shall be reimbursed from such tribal funds to the extent that they may be available."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment provides in the last proviso that the funds shall be reimbursable from the tribal funds. I think if the amendment were reversed and the whole of this appropriation were to be reimbursed—

Mr. BLANTON. If that is all the point of order, I desire—

Mr. WALSH. I am discussing the point of order. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to be cut off from making an additional point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the gentleman will not lose any rights, and it is not necessary for him to jump right into the middle of a Member's statement.

Mr. BLANTON. I have to do it.

Mr. WALSH. No; the gentleman does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have his opportunity.

Mr. WALSH. This is legislation, and I do not think this committee have any authority to report it. They have no jurisdiction over legislation pertaining to the tribal funds except in so far as the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House has reported legislation which has been acted upon by the House. I do not recall any legislation which permits the Committee on Appropriations, in making a new appropriation for a specific purpose, to say that that appropriation shall be reimbursable. It is true that there are items in the appropriation bill where the requirement is carried that they shall be reimbursed from the tribal funds, but that is under specific authority heretofore put into the law, and this is where relief is given under this provision.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If we have authority to make an appropriation out of moneys in the Treasury for a certain purpose, and also have authority to make an appropriation out of the tribal funds for the same purpose, have we not the authority to say that the money appropriated out of the Treasury shall be reimbursed from the tribal funds as a matter of appropriation? If this amendment had been offered to appropriate out of the tribal funds, unquestionably it would have been in order, because we have the same authority to appropriate from tribal funds or money in the Treasury that we have to appropriate from the Government's available money in the Treasury. Now, if we have the authority to appropriate in both cases, have we not the authority to say we appropriate out of money in the Treasury and at the same time say that we appropriate sufficient out of the tribal funds to reimburse the Treasury for the money advanced?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if we had authority to appropriate from the tribal funds in this particular instance, the contention of the gentleman from Illinois would be correct; but it is my contention that the Committee on Appropriations has no authority to appropriate from the tribal funds for this particular purpose. This is for a specific purpose, to be used in a certain way under certain conditions. Now, while they may have authority to appropriate out of the Treasury to relieve destitution among the Indians, the jurisdiction which has been given to the Committee on Appropriations, as I recall it, does not confer the jurisdiction upon them to appropriate solely from tribal funds for this specific purpose.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Prior to 1916 the Secretary had the privilege of using tribal funds without appropriation. Congress had no supervision over them except he was required to make a report of the expenditure of the funds after the appropriation had been made. The Indian appropriation act passed in 1916 took that power away from the Secretary, and it is provided that thereafter no expenditures should be made from the tribal funds without a specific appropriation by Congress. Now, the Secretary having had the right prior to that to use the funds without appropriation, this limitation passed in 1916 did not take away from Congress the right to appropriate it because it said that the funds should not be used without specific appropriation by Congress.

Mr. WALSH. In 1916 the legislative committee of the House, the Committee on Indian Affairs, made the appropriation.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman is interested in the language of the act referred to by the gentleman from Oklahoma I can give it to him.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps it will have some bearing on the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Indian appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1917, contained section 27, which I will read in part. It provides that—

On the first Monday in December, 1917, and annually thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives estimates of the amounts of the receipts to and expenditures which the Secretary of the Interior recommends to be made for the benefit of the Indians from all tribal funds of Indians for the ensuing fiscal year—

And so forth.

Provided, That thereafter no money shall be expended from the Indian tribal funds without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments—

And so forth.

It can not be spent without specific appropriation by Congress.

Mr. WALSH. That disposes of the contention I have been making, and I do not care to press the point of order further.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order because it contains legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill. I call the chairman's attention to this language, which is legislation:

Provided, That where able-bodied Indians have no means of support this appropriation may be used to pay such Indians for work in construction of the roads and other improvements on the reservation.

I submit that there is no law authorizing the appropriation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman's point of order is based on the proviso authorizing the appropriation to be used to pay the Indians for work performed in the construction of roads, and so forth. I assume that the gentleman would not have questioned an appropriation for $100,000 for building roads on certain reservations, the work to be performed by the Indians. Congress has the right to make such an appropriation, and the committee had the authority to recommend such an appropriation in this particular bill. It happens that instead of an outright appropriation for a specific amount of money this indefinite amount within $100,000, any portion of $100,000, can be used for building the roads, and in building those roads as a matter of economy instead of giving free rations the money may be spent in hiring Indians who are able-bodied to work on the roads.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is urged to the language read by the gentleman from Texas, as follows:

Provided, That where able-bodied Indians have no means of support this appropriation may be used to pay such Indians for work performed in the construction of roads or other improvements on a reservation, or for the purchase of necessary seeds and implements to enable them to cultivate their farms.

Under the ordinary rules, it would seem to the Chair that the Committee on Appropriations had the right to put such limitation on the use of the appropriation as it desired, or if it did not desire to limit the use of it, to explain the purposes for which it should be used. In addition to that the Chair is of opinion that the act of November 2, 1921, entitled "An act authorizing the appropriation and expenditures for the administration of Indian affairs, and for other purposes," plainly gives the Appropriations Committee the right to appropriate for the purposes involved in this language.

That act provides in part:

That the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate, for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes:

General support and civilization, including education.

For relief of distress and conservation of health.

For industrial assistance and advancement and general administration of Indian property.

Under the provisions just quoted the Committee on Appropriations was authorized to make direct appropriations for the purposes mentioned in the proviso. Thus, whether this proviso be treated as a limitation, an explanatory provision, or an appropriation, it was in order as a part of the original bill, and, in the opinion of the Chair, is proper as an amendment.

The Chair is of opinion that the language is not subject to the objection urged, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment which is pending. I move to amend the pending amendment by inserting the provisos formerly in the amendment which were omitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Amend the amendment by inserting after the word "farm," following the first proviso of the pending amendment, the following:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purchase of food, clothing, or other supplies that can be furnished by the War or Navy Departments or by the United States Shipping Board from surplus stock in time to meet the present emergency, and the War and Navy Departments and the United States Shipping Board shall, upon receipt of formal request therefor, and without charge, turn over to the Indian Service at the point of storage any such surplus food, clothing, or other supplies: And provided further, That a sum equal to the total value of all supplies furnished by the governmental agencies shall be reserved from the appropriation made herein and be covered back into the Treasury."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered is the same provision with reference to the use of Government supplies which formerly appeared in the resolution when reported by the committee. Speaking first of the amendment to the amendment, the purpose of that amendment to the amendment is simply in order to secure desired economy. The Government, through the Shipping Board and the War and the Navy Departments and elsewhere, has a large amount of surplus food and clothing which, if sold at all by the Government, is sold at ridiculously low prices. The purpose of this pending amendment to the amendment is to insure that in so far as possible, instead of taking dollars out of the Treasury, we will take the surplus food and clothing and make use of them, and whatever the value of such food and stores is that are used, the dollars taken out of the Treasury will be reduced thereby. I am sure no one would object to this part of the amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Would it be necessary for the Indian Bureau distributing the surplus goods to wait for any new declaration of surplus from these departments?

Mr. CRAMTON. That would depend on circumstances. If there are surplus food supplies available that have already been declared surplus, they will not need to wait.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If it has all been declared surplus, they will not have to wait, but if they have to wait for a new declaration of surplus, I would say that it might be some time before this appropriation is available.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is true. Of course, the amount they use will depend upon what amount is immediately available.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Why could not this situation be taken care of by increasing the appropriation set forth in line 13 of the paragraph to $470,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman refers to the paragraph that has already been passed over?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GRAMTON. I thought of that, and it seemed at first the easier way to do it, but the difficulty lies here; This is an emergency item, and its use is limited to the current fiscal year. The paragraph the gentleman refers to is for the year 1923, and it did not seem wise to confuse the two items.

Mr. WALSH. That could be made immediately available.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is available until June 30 and not thereafter.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to delay the proceedings on this amendment, except to state that I think it is unwise to embark on this proposition in this way and to appropriate in February after four or five months for an emergency that existed last August and upon which, in spite of the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has written a letter to the chairman of the subcommittee having this in charge, there seems to be grave conflict in respect to what the facts actually are in view of the statements made by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. RUPPICK] on the floor the other day. I trust that we can save $100,000 by not accepting this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPPORT OF INDIAN SCHOOLS.

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for, and other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,675,000: Provided, That not to exceed $40,000 of this amount may be used for the support and education of deaf and dumb or blind or mentally deficient Indian children: Provided, That all reservation and nonreservation boarding schools, with an average attendance of less than 45 and 80 pupils, respectively, shall be discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1923: Provided, That this limitation as to attendance shall not apply to the Hope Indian School for Girls at Springfield, S. Dak., which school is hereby continued. The pupils in schools so discontinued shall be transferred first, if possible, to Indian day schools or State public schools; second, to adjacent reservation or nonreservation boarding schools, to the limit of the capacity of said schools: Provided, That all day schools with an average attendance of less than eight shall be discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1923: And provided further, That all moneys appropriated for any school discontinued pursuant to this act or for other cause shall be returned immediately to the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That not more than $200,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the support of Indian day and industrial schools where specific appropriation is made.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GENSMAN: Page 26, line 17, after the figures "$1,675,000," insert a colon and add:

"Provided, That $32,000 of said sum be used in fitting and repairing the Rainy Mountain School in Oklahoma and conducting school therein."

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this bill, being a bill making appropriation for the Department of the Interior, which takes in the Indian Office and Indian activities on the part of the Government, and in support of my amendment to appropriate the sum of $32,000 for the Rainy Mountain School, I wish to say that had the committee familiarized themselves with the situation of this particular school, its proximity to Indians, and the facilities it gives for the education of the Indian, I am sure this appropriation would have been written in the bill. Let me call your attention to the fact that the Wichita Mountains, in which the Rainy Mountain School is located, is almost centrally located for the Indians. To the south and southwest are a number of allotments of the Comanches, on the north are the Kiowas, on the east are the Comanches and a few Apaches. Then further to the northeast are the Wichitas and affiliated bands. As a matter of fact, this school is practically in the center of their allotments. I want to call the attention of the Members to the fact that the Indian to-day is becoming more of a home-loving, home-abiding man. Years ago his tendencies were nomadic, but he is rapidly becoming a home-loving citizen. He does not like to send his children a long way from home to attend school, like the white man; he loves his family and takes a great pride in his children; he desires that they attend either a public school or a Government school, where he can go to see them once a week. The Rainy Mountain is an old institution and has been of great service to the Indian and has aided greatly to his advancement and general betterment. The effect of the school is very obvious even to the casual observer. It has been the pride of the Indians in that vicinity. They have learned to love it and appreciate its effects, so apparent to the Indians who come daily in contact with former students. The buildings are intact, and with a very little repair could be made what it was in days gone by—a beautiful school surrounded by acres of land adapted to agriculture and, above all, surrounded by beautiful mountain scenery and a place where teachers, as well as pupils, can enjoy their work. We preach upon the floor of this House the necessity of bringing the Indian to the ways of the white man, that he should be taught to lay down the bow and arrow and take up the plow. I have closely observed the Indian for the last 20 years and I say to the Members of this House that the Indian has done more toward learning the white man's way, he has done more for himself in that regard, the members of the various tribes, the headmen and chiefs, the Indian preacher, have done more to civilize Indians than has the white man. In the Indian the Government has a most studious pupil, apt and willing and anxious to learn, using every facility to learn the ways of his white brother. I insist that he is more anxious to learn than we are to teach him.

The Indians have called upon me on numerous occasions to use my influence to restore to them the Rainy Mountain School. Twenty or more came to Washington, and a part of their mission was to get an appropriation for this school. It was one of the early Indian schools of the country, and they have always appreciated it. The southwestern Indian in Oklahoma lives to some extent in the past; he remembers the great benefit derived from the Rainy Mountain School. In talking to the younger men of his tribe, he realizes its benefits. It is located away from city or town, the bad effects of which are not felt by the student; he looks upon it as the only place where he feels that his child will be safe and entirely under the control or supervision of the Government. The Indian has implicit confidence in the White Father.

The other day the House appropriated quite a sum for the benefit of certain needy European people. I insist that charity begins at home; the appropriation of that money was over my protest and vote, and I know that I am voicing the sentiment of nearly every man in Oklahoma when I say we owe more to the Indian than we do to the inhabitants of any foreign country. I have talked this over with a number of the Members of the House; I have done everything I can to familiarize my colleagues with the real Indian and his ways, his needs, and his wants. The amount asked for is not great; in fact, it is meager, and I hope that the Members see fit to make this appropriation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the committee appreciates the interest and the very intelligent interest of the gentleman from Oklahoma in all these matters affecting the Indians and the Indians particularly of his State. However, the committee did not feel they could accept an amendment for the restoration of the Rainy Mountain Boarding School. I will call the attention of the committee to the fact there are about 230 schools now provided for in this school item. The question of education of the Indian children is a great problem and especially the discontinuance and reestablishment of boarding schools along the lines of particular policies is a very important question which I question whether the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union has general information to warrant their acting upon an amendment such as the gentleman has offered, and I hope that the administration of the Indian Service will not be embarrassed by an amendment of that character.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. How long since this school has been in existence?

Mr. CRAMTON. Perhaps the gentleman from Oklahoma can state that better than I.

Mr. GENSMAN. Well, I can not state just exactly how long it has been in existence, but I know—

Mr. MANN. How long since it has been in operation?

Mr. GENSMAN. Just a short time. It was discontinued some little time back, probably a year or so.

Mr. MANN. Why was it discontinued, may I ask?

Mr. GENSMAN. I think the thought at that time was that the Indian would become a white man, of course that is the underlying principle, quicker if the children were sent to the white man's school.

Mr. MANN. Was this discontinued because of the reduced number of pupils?

Mr. GENSMAN. I am not quite sure, because in the immediate vicinity, to my certain knowledge there were 500 or 600 Indians within school age.

Mr. CRAMTON. It was not discontinued within the last year; I am not advised further back than that.

Mr. MANN. That limitation has been in existence several years, and a great many schools were discontinued because the number of pupils was so reduced that the schools were not authorized.

Mr. GENSMAN. I am sure that is not the case in this particular instance.

Mr. MANN. If there were any other Indian schools discontinued in recent years I would like to know.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course, in reference to the gentleman's statement that it is better for these children to be kept at home with their own people rather than to take them away to boarding schools, the gentleman's amendment removes in many cases children who are now in day schools, living at home, who would be taken to a boarding school away from home.

Mr. GENSMAN. It is not what is ordinarily known as a boarding school. It is a boarding school in a way, but the Indians live right around there, 15, 20, and 40 miles. If the child gets sick—

Mr. CRAMTON. It is to have a boarding school and take to it those who are now in day schools and living at home.

Mr. GENSMAN. It is to take to it such Indians in the country who are really, as a matter of fact, getting no education at all. Some go to school at 15 cents a day, and the school-teacher pays no attention to them. It is the policy to make the Indian a white man as fast as possible, but some of them have no place to go.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the policy of the Indian Bureau and the policy of Congress has been ever since I have been here to merge the Indian children into public schools of a State just as fast as that could be done. The suspension of this school was an act in pursuance of that policy. The Rainy Mountain School is a school down in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache country, and was closed about two or three years ago. It was closed for the reason that the attendance had run down and the school has needed to be repaired. The capacity of the school was 165 pupils, and at the time it was closed there were only 110 in attendance. The children who went to that formerly have been placed in the State public schools and in other boarding and Indian day schools in pursuance of the policy which I have just suggested. My information is that it will cost from $30,000 to $40,000 to repair these buildings so they will be in condition so that the school can be operated. And that is one reason why the school was suspended. I am advised by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that no children have suffered on account of the suspension of this school, and that they are all continuing in attendance at school, either in the State public schools or in the Indian day and boarding schools.

Now, I am sorry to differ with my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. GENSMAN], because he is such a likeable fellow that one always wants to do what he wants done, and I always take pleasure, as he knows, in helping him with every meritorious case he has, and sometimes I am willing to stretch the word "meritorious" a little. But in such a case as this, where the reasons for the suspension of the school are so strong, and where the repairs necessary would be so large before the school could be opened up, and where the recommendation of the bureau is so strong for the suspension of the school I can not afford to follow him. My friend from Oklahoma knows that that country, down among Kiowas and Comanches, is one of the most beautiful countries there is in the United States. It is true we have had a few droughts there in the last few years, but the lands are fine, and the country is very thickly settled, and it is as well supplied with schools, I dare say, as almost any other section of these United States. Therefore I can not see the necessity for continuing this school, especially after the recommendation of the Interior Department that it should be discontinued.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. GENSMAN. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I appreciate the nice things he has said about me, but I would prefer that he would give some of those nice things to the Indians rather than hand the stuff to me. [Laughter.] I am interested in the Indians, and I know the gentleman is. I believe I know the situation out at the Rainy Mountain School better than he does, in view of the fact that he lives among the Five Civilized Tribes and has been associated with them while I live with the blanket Indians. I know they do not talk like the white man; they are not taught like the white men. It is true they go to the white man's school, but take a little Indian that can not talk English and send him to school, and his associates and the children themselves know that it is a fact that he is not wanted there by the children, and he is not wanted there by the school-teacher, and he is not wanted there by the patrons, because the patrons know that he is paying only 15 cents a day to the school.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GENSMAN. It is a fact that they discontinued the school for the purpose of getting these children over into the white man's school, but as my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] says, the capacity of that school was 165, and at the time it was discontinued they admitted 110.

Mr. CARTER. That was only about 66 per cent attendance. That is very small. That in itself ought to justify the discontinuance of the school.

Mr. GENSMAN. I do not agree with the gentleman's arithmetic.

Mr. CARTER. There is not much difference. If the gentleman figures it out he will find it is about 65 per cent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Oklahoma or somebody stated that somebody had paid 15 cents a day for schooling these Indian children. Who gets that 15 cents?

Mr. CARTER. That is paid for the Indian child going to the State public school. The State public school fund gets that.

Mr. WALSH. Fifteen cents a day for the education of a child?

Mr. GENSMAN. And then does not pay any attention to them.

Mr. CARTER. I do not agree with the gentleman that they do not pay any attention to them. My observation with reference to the Indian children in the public schools is that they really pay a little more attention to those children than to the white children, because they need a little bit more attention.

Now, what the gentleman from Oklahoma has said about a full-blood Indian child not speaking English, not being able to qualify for the white man's public school, has some truth in it, but the gentleman himself will admit—and he is better acquainted with these Indians himself than I am, as he lives right among them, although I lived among them at one time—but the gentleman knows quite well that only a minority of these children when they reach school age do not speak English. The majority of them speak English, so that the majority are placed in the State public schools, and the minority still have the privilege of going to the day schools and the other boarding schools, which the bureau advises me have full capacity to take care of them.

Mr. GENSMAN. Does the gentleman mean to contend that the little Kiowas, Apaches, and Comanches at the age of 6 or 7 or 8 years are able to speak English?

Mr. CARTER. I do not know whether those children at the age of 6 or 7 or 8 are able to speak English, but at the time they reach 10 or 12 years the majority of them speak English. And there should be no discussion over that, anyway, because the Indian Commissioner says that he has ample facilities to take care of all those that do not speak English in the other Indian schools in the Kiowa and Comanche country.

Now, I know what it means to a man to have one of these schools knocked out in his section of country. A lot of demands are made upon him by the people for the continuation of the school. They had 25 or 30 of them in my district when I first came to Congress. Now they have only 3. They have gradually reduced the number. But not one of those was suspended without pressure being brought to bear upon me to have them continued. When those influences were brought to bear on me I sought to have them continued, but it was not long before I saw the uselessness of it, not only here but the uselessness of it in Oklahoma, where the children could be taken care of at other Indian schools and public schools. I do not want to do the gentleman or his district any damage. But the best place in the world to educate an Indian child, in my opinion, when he learns to speak English, is in the public school, where he gets the association of the white children. That is the adopted policy.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. I want to get the gentleman's idea. Does the gentleman believe in the policy of discontinuing these schools? In the gentleman's own district was it not a wise policy?

Mr. CARTER. There is not a particle of doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. CARTER. The Indians have gone into the public schools. Some of the non-English-speaking Indians from the mountain districts among the Choctaws have gone into the public schools, have learned to speak English, have made as good progress as the white children, and are doing much better than they did in the old Indian schools.

Mr. GENSMAN. To what tribe does the gentleman refer?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] was asking me about my district.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, there is one other point to which I wish to refer. It has been mentioned that there is an allowance made of 15 cents a day for these children in the public schools. That is equivalent to $75 a month for 20 pupils.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Is not that a rather reasonable amount?

Mr. CARTER. My recollection was that it was 12 cents a day, but if the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GENSMAN] says it is 15 cents a day, I accept that statement. I think Mr. Meyer testified before the committee that it was 10 cents a day.

Mr. FRENCH. At 10 cents a day it would be $50 a month for 20 children, which I think is a rather full allowance in comparison with the amount which we allow for white children in the public schools.

Mr. CARTER. That is true, but, on the other hand, the gentleman must remember that each of these Indian children has the advantage of daily association with the white children in the school, and each Indian child has the chance to emulate what the white children are doing and to learn a great many things from the white children that he would not learn in the Indian school.

Mr. GENSMAN. The gentleman does not mean to tell the committee that you can take $50 a month, without a schoolhouse or without any investment or without any school-teacher or anything, and give 20 children any school facilities?

Mr. CARTER. That is a controversy between the gentleman from Idaho and the gentleman from Oklahoma which I do not care to have taken out of my time and which has no connection with this matter.

Mr. GENSMAN. The gentleman said they could get along with it. I do not want that impression left on the committee.

Mr. CARTER. If I said that, I did not intend to say it. I do not think so.

Mr. GENSMAN. I did not think the gentleman meant that and I do not want the committee to understand that.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to say further that I do not understand that that $50 a month for 20 pupils, or if the daily rate is the higher rate which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GENSMAN] suggests, that $75 a month for 20 pupils includes construction of school buildings, but is rather for the maintenance of the teaching force, heating, and other current expenses.

Mr. CARTER. That is the pupils' contribution to the school. You may call it overhead or maintenance for the buildings or whatever you want to, but that is the only part he contributes, going to this particular school.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just one word and then I am through. If you continue this school, you must not only make the appropriation requested by the gentleman's amendment, but in addition to that you must provide an appropriation of $30,000 to $40,000 for improvements on the school buildings so that they will be habitable, if the word of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs can be taken at par, and in the past I have usually learned to take his statements at par.

Mr. CRAMTON. And in addition to that, since this item is for a certain number of schools, if we instruct them to reopen the one that has been closed, they must close one that is now open.

Mr. CARTER. And not only that, but it opens up a Pandora's box of troubles concerning this system which will never end.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to address the committee for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to take up any further time, but I have been charged here with trying to keep a school in my district for personal reasons. I am not trying to keep from losing this school; it was lost to the Indians during the term of office of my predecessor, Scott Ferris. I am trying to get back for these Indians something that was lost. I say candidly to you that not a single white man has written me concerning this Rainy Mountain School or talked to me about it. Nobody except the Indians has talked to me on the subject. It is not a political proposition with me. These Indians do not vote. It is not a matter of personal interest to me except that I want to give these Indians the best service I have in me. I think this Congress wants to give the Indians the best opportunities that the Government can afford to see that their children become the same as the white men just as soon as they can. There is not a bit of politics in it in the world. I recognize the fact that the Committee on Appropriations may not want this amendment tacked onto their bill, and you will notice that they jumped on me at the first opportunity that presented itself. They have brought in this bill and they ought to stand by it; but the proposition is this: These Indians are entitled to something. We took that country away from them. The Indian thinks just as much of his child as you think of yours.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GENSMAN. In a moment, when I finish this statement. The Indians think just as much of their children as you gentlemen here think of yours. They do not want their children sent away to some of these schools and perhaps get sick and die without their knowing anything about it. They want to be in a position so that when these children are sent to school they can go there and see them when they are sick, and can see how they are getting along, and once in a while go and visit them. They have the same feeling for their children that you have for yours. I have asked for only $32,000. That will repair the school and start it up and get it on its feet again, and if you do that I think you will better conserve the interests of the Indians; and I understand that is the prime object of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GENSMAN].

The question being taken, on a division [demanded by Mr. GENSMAN] there were—ayes 19, noes 24.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee whether or not this proviso—

Provided, That all day schools with an average attendance of less than eight shall be discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1923—will be so enforced as to discontinue the Indian schools now in existence before the end of the school year? In my district we have quite a lot of schools where the attendance is comparatively small, and the language carried in the bill would authorize their discontinuance at any time, and if it is done before the end of the school year their course of study would be disrupted and they will not be in a position to go into a district school and take up the work there to advantage.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say that the language in question is the same language that occurs in the current bill. I assume that whenever they have dropped below the required number they have been discontinued, but only at the end of the school year. For instance, the school year ends in May or June, and this provision will require the discontinuance "on or before" the 1st of July. I assume that due consideration will be given to the matter, as the gentleman suggests. In fact, the language of the bill is the same as in the current law.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I think the practice has been to close the schools at the end of the school year.

Mr. CRAMTON. I dare say that is true.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I am not familiar with the language in former bills, and I wondered whether these schools would be closed before the end of the school year. If the language is the same as the old bill and it is construed and carried out in the same manner, I have no objection to it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The language of the proviso seems to contemplate that that is so, because it says "shall be discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1923."

The Clerk read as follows:

INDUSTRIAL WORK AND CARE OF TIMBER.

For the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, for necessary traveling expenses of such matrons, and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the conducting of experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, cotton, and fruits, and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for necessary traveling expenses of such farmers and stockmen and for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for them; and for superintending and directing farming and stock raising among Indians, $375,000, of which sum not less than $50,000 shall be used for the employment of field matrons: Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin: Provided further, That not to exceed $12,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, cotton, grain, vegetables, and fruits: Provided also, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, physicians, nurses, and other hospital employees, and stockmen provided for in this act shall not be included within the limitations on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman a question. Mr. Meritt in the hearings says that it is necessary to have a number of timber cruisers and inspectors for the reason that they are selling a good deal of timber in recent years and it necessitates the employment of a number of people in the work, so that we are sure that the Indians will get adequate prices and compensation for all timber sold. I would like to ask the chairman how much timber is being sold on the Indian reservations and what becomes of that money?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say in answer to the first question that I have not the data at hand, but if the timber is on an Indian reservation and is sold, the proceeds will go into the tribal fund.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman know anything about the relative amount of the sales each year, except what is stated in the hearings?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think that is all, but I dare say that in the report of the Commissioner on Indian Affairs there will be a statement.

Mr. SNELL. Why should not the amount of money necessary to pay inspectors of timber come out of the funds received from the sales?

Mr. CRAMTON. I suppose that could be done.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not only fair that it should be done?

Mr. CRAMTON. The result would probably be the same. The Indians are selling timber and the money goes into the tribal fund. Then when we make an appropriation for the benefit of the Indians who have funds to their credit held in trust by the Federal Government, such appropriation is made reimbursable out of these tribal funds. So that with one or two exceptions, like the Osages—and there are very few exceptions—the tribal funds are not very great. In the matter the gentleman speaks of there might be a good deal of bookkeeping involved, but in the long run where the tribal funds are used for the benefit of the Indians it amounts to the same thing.

Mr. SNELL. I hear it stated frequently on the floor that it does not make any difference how big the appropriation is or how little, it comes out of the tribal fund. So that is all talk, is it?

Mr. CRAMTON. We are not dealing with that under the particular item before us, but if the Indians have a tribal fund to their credit the appropriation comes out of the tribal fund.

Mr. SNELL. If we spend money taking care of the tribal funds, it seems to me that in a matter of this kind it should be reimbursable from the tribal fund.

Mr. CRAMTON. I imagine that the amount involved in this would be a negligible amount.

Mr. SNELL. A hundred thousand dollars for cruisers and inspectors. Mr. Meritt says that that is why he needs a large number, because it takes a large number, and it seems to me that it ought to be reimbursable.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I arose to speak along the line upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has just spoken. At the beginning of this paragraph, at page 29, it reads:

For the purpose of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests.

I am wondering whether the committee has any information relative to the amount of money that is being paid for preserving living and growing timber. I might make a short statement in respect to a situation with which I am familiar. In the Uintah Indian Reservation at the time it was opened for settlement in 1905, 250,000 acres were set apart as Indian grazing lands. A large part of that land is covered with a thick growth of what is commonly called scrub cedar. There are thousands of cords of wood on these lands that will really go to waste. Since 1908 the settlers who homesteaded lands in that country have been permitted to go into these cedars and get what wood they wanted from the dead and down timber. Recently, within the last six months, the department has adopted the policy of charging them 50 cents a load for the wood. I am not speaking against the amount, but I am simply saying that I am against the principle. The wood is going to waste. The people have no other source of fuel, except coal from mines a long distance from their homes, and surely a charge of 50 cents a load would not pay the expense involved in making and collecting the charge. I think the charge ought to be done away with entirely. If the wood will go to waste, as I believe much of it will, why not let the settlers have it? Has the committee any information as to the manner the money is being expended for preserving living and growing timber? I appreciate that in this locality to which I refer there is some cutting of fence posts by the settlers. They have a value, but only the living timber is cut for the posts. This charge that is being collected is for the timber that is going to waste, which will never be used, or at least a great part of it never will. I am against the principle of the thing entirely. As I say, I am not arguing that the fee ought to be increased, because I think it ought to be abolished. The people are opposed to it. The wood is going to waste. They have been allowed to use it since 1908, and now the department is collecting this small fee—certainly not enough, as I say, to pay for the charge of collecting it. It must cost considerable to check on the people who go from 6 to 25 miles to get the wood. Is that an illustration of how the money is being spent for preserving living and growing timber? If it is, it is being spent for the purpose of watching the settlers who may go and get dead and decayed timber, that will go to waste unless they are permitted to use it. It can not be disputed that the supply of wood far exceeds any use that will be made of it for a long time to come.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. What the gentleman desires is legislation permitting the use of the dead timber by the people adjacent to the Indian reservation?

Mr. COLTON. Well, that may be necessary, but I think not. I am just wondering by what authority the charge I referred to is being made.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not answer the gentleman definitely as to that. The statement of the bureau is that this amount, which is something less than $100,000 for the purpose of preserving the living and growing timber, and so forth, is to support the general forestry activities in the Indian reservations, where there is timber amounting in value to $100,000,000.

Mr. COLTON. Has the gentleman any detailed information as to what is being done along that line?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no detailed information. There is no information before the committee on the particular thing the gentleman speaks of. What the gentleman does desire, I think, is legislative in its character, which, of course, could not be done in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to inquire of the chairman of the committee the purpose of the first proviso, excepting from the provisions of the paragraph the Menominee Indian Reservation, so far as timber is concerned. I would inquire particularly with respect to the status of the Government plant at Neopit, on the Menominee Indian Reservation.

Some years ago the Government launched into the policy of attempting to occupy the Indians by giving them employment in a large lumber manufacturing camp and expended something like $2,000,000 of the trust funds of the Menominee Indians. This was during the régime when it was popular to spend moneys rather extravagantly in the development of forestry and the like. The Government built very extensive highways, and a railroad on the Menominee Indian Reservation. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether that plant is now in operation, and what its success has been so far as the last report is concerned?

Mr. CRAMTON. The language in the bill to which the gentleman refers is a continuation of language heretofore carried. The committee has no information as to the plant to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Some years ago it was my privilege to be a member of the so-called Mann Committee on Pulp and Paper Investigation. I had the privilege, in company with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], of visiting this Indian reservation, just as the lumber mill was about to be started. We then saw the policy of the Government in constructing branch railroads under the forestry division. It was building them as if they were on a par with a trunk line running through the most thickly populated portion of the country.

At that time the representatives of the Menominee Indians protested against the use of the $2,000,000 of their funds in a venture by the Government which subsequently proved to be more or less of an extravagant luxury. It is a matter of some concern to me by reason of the visit, although it is a couple of hundred miles from my home district. I wanted to know about the status of the plant, as to whether the money of the trust funds of the Menominee Indians is still being wasted in that way?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, he will note that the language in the bill referring to the Menominee Indian Reservation simply is a provision eliminating that reservation from the provisions of this section as to timber, so that this item has nothing to do with timber on that reservation.

Mr. STAFFORD. The exception is for that purpose, so that the Government may continue to operate the lumber mill on the Menominee Indian Reservation. That is the purpose of the exception.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, this exception of itself would not authorize—

Mr. STAFFORD. No; but there is a provision later on, I assume, that does authorize the continuance of the lumber mill. I am sorry the gentleman has not the information, which would be exceedingly interesting to the Menominee Indians—

Mr. MANN. That is not carried on an appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). And the people of Wisconsin and the people in general. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF INDIAN POLICE.

For pay of Indian police, including chiefs of police at not to exceed $50 per month each and privates at not to exceed $30 per month each, to be employed in maintaining order, for purchase of equipments and supplies, and for rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $140,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Committee on Appropriations has reduced this appropriation for the pay of Indian police to $140,000. The amount carried last year was $150,000 and the appropriation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, was $200,000. I presume the cut was made because the Indian Bureau did not ask for more.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the primary reason, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HAYDEN. So far as my State is concerned, more money should be spent for the pay of Indian police. First, because they are particularly needed on most of the reservations to aid in gathering up the Indian children and placing them in school. Then there is an acute situation on the Moqui Indian Reservation, where an increase in the Indian police force is absolutely necessary. The Hopi Indians, residing on that reservation, are surrounded by Navajos, who have driven them up into the rocks and have taken away a large part of their grazing lands.

The conditions of which I speak have been investigated and reported upon time and again. The present Indian agent and his predecessor have both recommended that a squadron of Cavalry be permanently stationed on this reservation to maintain respect for law and order. Recently Gen. Hugh L. Scott, former Chief of Staff of the Army, looked into the situation for the second time. In 1911 President Taft sent the general out to the Navajo country, and he then recommended that 25 Indian policemen be appointed for duty on the Moqui Reservation. Instead of 25 Indian police but 8 poorly paid men were appointed, and that number has been recently reduced to 6, which is a totally inadequate force to restrain the Navajos and make them respect the rights of the other Indians.

I very much regret that the Committee on Appropriations reduced this amount. It can be made an excuse for doing nothing in what Gen. Scott declares to be a very serious situation. Yet I can not consistently criticize the committee for not appropriating money that the bureau has not requested. But it is incumbent upon the bureau in this particular instance to provide an adequate police force, out of any funds that may be available, to prevent the Hopis from being intimidated and having their rights trampled upon by the Navajo Indians.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. CRAMTON. The information given the committee was that it was not proposed to reduce the number of these police even if the item is reduced as indicated. The item includes salary and other expenses, and there is a reduction of $5,000 in salary in cutting down the item. But the other $5,000 is taken up in connection with other subjects of expenditure, such as equipment, subsistence, and so forth. It is possible and quite probable that out of the fund of $140,000 they can make some substantial savings. Anyway, it is not the expectation of the bureau to reduce the number of men.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing an extract from the report recently made by Gen. Scott.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYDEN. Gen. Scott says:

The Hopi live in villages on top of high mesas, and some of their houses antedate the landing of Columbus. Their villages are strongholds which they built to escape the inroads of the Ute and Navajo. They are an inoffensive, peace-loving people. Their little farms lie in the valleys, and, unlike the Navajos, they bring in their cattle and sheep to corrals near the villages. They are a people of fixed habitation, whereas the Navajo are seminomadic, following their flocks and herds through miles of country.

This whole land is semiarid and a large portion of it is absolute desert. The Navajo are aggressive and independent. There is no doubt that the majority of these on the Moqui Reservation have come in from all sides with a deliberate purpose of taking the grazing lands, which rightfully belong to the Hopi. When a Navajo sees a Hopi with anything he wants he takes it and there is no recourse. If a Hopi is using grazing land which the Navajo wants, he will drive the Hopi off, scatter his stock, and force him to draw back to the narrow area adjacent to the Hopi villages. The Hopi declares that the Navajo steal their stock and run them off to other parts of the country and sell them, and if a Hopi has horses running in their neighborhood the Navajo will rope them, use them all day to round up their own stock, and then turn them loose, thus saving their own horses.

For years this preventable situation has continued. In 1911 I was sent by President Taft to Keams Canyon with troops to enforce some regulations of the Indian Office. I then found the Navajos encroaching on Hopi land and mistreating the Hopi Indians. The agent at the time was given but three policemen, too poorly paid to attract the right men with which to maintain order on a reservation which has the area of an empire. I then recommended that he be given 25 well-paid policemen with a white chief. The number was increased to eight without change of compensation, which number has lately been reduced to six.

This statement is enough to show the absurdity of any expectation that the superintendent can keep order. The reply to my question as to whether orders were obeyed was that "orders were not sent out, as they were not respected or can not be enforced." The superintendent consequently is powerless to maintain the dignity of his office, with the result that the authority and dignity of the Indian Office and of the United States are made a mock of over a large section of Arizona.

The Hopi looks in vain to the department for protection, for although aware of this condition for many years the Government has continued to neglect its duty in providing a remedy. There were, undoubtedly, a few Navajos living on this land before the reservation was set apart for the Hopi, who had some rights of occupancy, but the many Navajos who have come in since, in defiance of orders, should be put off and kept off the Hopi Reservation by force and the Hopi protected in their rights.

The superintendent maintains he should have a squadron of Cavalry stationed at Keams Canyon. It might be well to have such a force present at the eviction of trespassing Navajos and for a short time after until tranquillity is restored; but the Navajo, when treated with justice, are a well-behaved people. There is, however, a large floating element from other reservations which has come in to the Keams Canyon jurisdiction which occasionally makes trouble. In my opinion a white chief with 25 well-paid police will be sufficient in ordinary times. As it is now, only six insufficiently paid policemen are allowed by the department to maintain order on 3,863 square miles. These men are paid but $20 a month, with $10 additional to the chief. They are all Indians. The agent is only allowed sufficient subsistence to maintain but one or two of these men. At the salary given, no Indian who is self-supporting will take the position of policeman, with the result that it is not possible to get dependable men.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the development of a water supply for the Navajo and Hopi Indians on the Moqui Reservation and the Navajo, Pueblo, Bonito, San Juan, and Western Navajo subdivisions of the Navajo Reservation in Arizona and New Mexico, $35,000, reimbursable out of any funds of said Indians now or hereafter available.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Clerk has just read the last of the Arizona items relating to the Indian Service in this bill. Every member of the Committee on Indian Affairs who visited the Navajo country with me in 1920 will testify that twice $35,000 could probably be expended during the next fiscal year in the development of an additional water supply for these Indians. But neither the Indian Service, the Bureau of the Budget, nor the President have asked for a larger sum, and I know that it would be utterly useless under such circumstances for me to offer an amendment increasing the amount. The meagerness of this appropriation is typical of a large part of the bill. The necessary money to carry on essential and important constructive work that should progress is either denied or doled out in meager dribbles.

I admit that so far as the Arizona Indian items are concerned the Committee on Appropriations has allowed every dollar asked for by the Indian Bureau, but I blame the bureau for not asking for and properly justifying larger appropriations when they should know full well that more money is absolutely needed to adequately conduct its work. Somebody lost his nerve. The "Hell and Maria" lion of the Budget roared and evidently the entire Indian Bureau trembled and took him at his word. Other bureaus said, "This may not be a roar at all, but just a bray from beneath a lion's skin," asked for what they really needed, and in many instances received it.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my friend from Idaho.

Mr. FRENCH. I wondered if the gentleman considered this. There is at the head of this very important bureau of the Government a man who for years sat in this Congress, former Representative Burke, a man who understood the temper of the Congress, a man who felt that he could come before the Congress and submit items not upon which he could compromise later, but those which he actually needed.

Mr. HAYDEN. My information is that neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of Indian Affairs were present in Washington at the time these estimates were prepared and submitted by the Indian Bureau to the Director of the Budget. I do not know who is responsible, but from all appearances that entire bureau was thrown into a panic by the loud and strident tones of Gen. Dawes.

During the progress of the war the Indian Office patriotically removed the skin from many of its appropriations and trimmed away much of the flesh because every cent was needed to win the victory. This year they have cut to the very bone, and now, with the aid of the Director of the Budget and the Appropriations Committee, they have chipped away pieces of the bone from this skeleton of an appropriation. But two things can result from this drastic example of alleged economy. Either there will be deficiency appropriations to maintain the Indian Service or that service will be so crippled in its field activities that it can not properly function.

The Indian Bureau has asked for no new construction whatsoever at any of the Indian schools or agencies in Arizona, yet many new buildings are absolutely needed. The appropriations for Indian irrigation projects have all been reduced, which simply means that the overhead will continue without any material increase in construction. For instance, but $50,000 is allowed for canal construction in connection with the Florence diversion dam project on the Gila River. That appropriation should have been at least $300,000 in order to accomplish any real results. So it goes all throughout the entire bill. I hope that next year the Indian Office will ask for what they actually need, and not be scared by any loud noise that may come out of the Budget Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word along the line suggested by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Burke, realized very thoroughly the condition of the country at the time he proposed his estimates and the necessity of paring down all appropriation bills to the bone, as has been said, and as the responsible head of the Indian Service he submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and through him to the Budget Bureau, the very lowest reasonable estimates that he could make touching the expenditures that would be necessary to maintain the Indian Service for the coming fiscal year.

I want to say that Mr. Burke acted in the most sincere good faith, to such an extent, in fact, that his estimates were not pared down one dollar by the Budget Bureau itself when the officers there saw the excellent work that he had done and the good faith with which he was carrying forward the matter of making estimates. And I want to say further that the subcommittee and the full committee had profound respect for the work he had done and were generous in the consideration of the estimates he had submitted.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Certainly.

Mr. HAYDEN. I hope that nothing that I have said will be construed as any reflection upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with whom I served in the House and for whom I have not only great respect but a sincere affection. But we must remember that he has been in office but a short time. And I am satisfied that when he submits his estimates and comes before your committee next year to justify them he will ask for material increases, because he will find that he can not properly conduct all of the various activities of the Indian Service in view of the drastic cuts that have been made. I hope that, having laid the foundation of confidence which he has by the good faith that he has shown, the committee will heed his requests hereafter and give him what he really needs in the future.

Mr. FRENCH. I recognize that there are many branches of the Indian Service that need financial assistance, and I hope that by another year we may go ahead and provide adequately for various projects that are highly meritorious and deserve our most generous consideration.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he makes generous acknowledgment to those associated with him in the bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 13, 1922.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CRAMTON: I want to acknowledge your complimentary comments on the estimates furnished by the Bureau of Indian Affairs in your report on the bill making appropriations for the Interior Department and in your remarks on the floor of the House.

I feel somewhat embarrassed by the personal references in what you said, as I believe that I am only incidentally entitled to the credit for the showing made in our bureau estimates. The credit is due to my very able and conscientious assistant, Mr. Meritt, and the chief clerk, law clerk, and heads of the different divisions that constitute the budget committee of the bureau. To them and their immediate associates is due largely the credit for what was accomplished, and, as before stated, as commissioner I am only incidentally entitled to any credit.

Those I have in mind and have mentioned constitute the force that is very largely responsible for what the bureau does. They are men who have had long years of experience, and of their fidelity, ability, and effort too much can not be said, and I want you to know my estimate of their loyalty. I shall hope that you may call at the bureau at your convenience, when I shall take great pleasure in having you meet the persons who constitute our budget committee, in order that you may have a greater appreciation of the value of these individuals. You have already had an opportunity on several occasions of forming an estimate of Mr. Meritt, and I want you to meet those that are directly associated with him in making up the estimates for your committee.

Assuring you again of my thanks for your reference to myself, but particularly on the part of the bureau for your words of commendation, I am,

Yours, sincerely,

CHAS. H. BURKE, Commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Calif., including pay of superintendent, $150,000; for general repairs and improvements, $14,000; in all, $164,000.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I offer three amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered as one amendment. Strike out, in line 21 of page 39, the words "seven hundred and fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "eight hundred," and on line 23 strike out "$150,000" and insert "$160,000," and on line 24 strike out "$14,000" and "$164,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000" and "$190,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers certain amendments which he asks unanimous consent shall be considered as one. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SWING: Page 39, line 21, after the word "of," strike out the words "seven hundred and fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "eight hundred," and on line 23 strike out "$150,000" and insert "$160,000," and on line 24 strike out "$14,000" and "$164,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000" and "$190,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the first two amendments is to provide support at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Calif., of 800 Indians instead of 750 on the same per capita basis now used in the bill.

The fact is that during the last year 100 Indian boys and girls applied for admission to this institution and were refused admission because they had no place to put them or to take care of them.

It seems to me we have to consider what is the obligation which this Government has voluntarily assumed toward this dependent race. We do not have to educate any of them if we do not want to, but we have undertaken the task of helping to make of the Indian race a self-sustaining, independent people, who otherwise would continue to be forever dependent.

It seems to me that it is economy to teach the Indian boys and girls who want to acquire an education, a trade, by which they will soon become independent, self-sustaining, instead of continuing to keep them in a condition where they will forever continue to be wards of the Government and continue to be a burden on the Government. Their education should start at an age in which they can acquire and learn a trade, because when they have passed beyond that age they can never learn it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This is a boarding school?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We have facilities for taking care of 750; have we board and facilities for the additional number proposed?

Mr. SWING. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not propose the erection of any buildings there?

Mr. SWING. In the hearings Mr. Meritt, who is quite familiar with the situation, refers to an appropriation for adding sleeping porches, which will enable them to take care of the additional number. The work at this school is done entirely by the pupils. There is no repairing or any improvement done except that done by the Indian boys under the instruction of the faculty and instructors. The only thing the Government pays for is the raw material. I was there in last December with Secretary Fall, and he went over the entire situation and expressed the opinion that this school needed additional assistance in order to take care of this additional number.

In my opinion, at the Sherman Institute at Riverside, Calif., the Government gets more for a dollar than at any institution I have ever been in.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Has the gentleman taken this matter up with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. SWING. I will submit the statement of the Indian Bureau. They state the facts as I have stated them here, but did not ask for the additional money. The responsibility is ours. If we desire not to accept it, well and good. Mr. Meritt says in the hearings:

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the Riverside school is one of our best nonreservation schools. It is ideally located in southern California, and draws pupils not only from California but from Arizona. If we had the money for repairs and improvements and additional construction, we could take care of probably 1,000 children in that school at a very small additional cost. But on account of the desire of the Government to reduce expenditures to the limit, we are not asking for any new construction this year, nor for any increased attendance.

Now, the fact is that 100 Indian boys and girls have applied and want to attend school, but can not attend merely because there are no facilities for them. This amendment will provide the necessary sleeping porches so that they can attend, and the sustenance to enable them to go through the school.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this school, as Mr. Meritt says in the hearings, is ranked as one of the best schools. Its attendance has been gradually increasing. In 1918 the average attendance was 541. In 1919 it was 505, in 1920 it was 640, in 1921, 732, and in December the latest information was that the actual present attendance was 798, and they were being cared for with the present equipment at the school. That is substantially the number that the gentleman from California contemplates. Now, the per capita cost was $181, and $181 for 800 pupils would be $144,800, and the committee has allowed $150,000. So that it is apparent that the appropriation proposed by the committee will take care of the number in attendance and probably the number that could be taken care of with the present buildings.

Mr. SWING. May I ask the gentleman this question: Does he know that $181 per capita is possible because the superintendent of this school had the good business judgment to purchase before the increased cost of living a large supply of cloth and other supplies, and that it has been using those for the last few years? They have bought no cloth for the last four years, but have repaired and used the same suits over and over. I saw one suit of clothes, for instance, that had been worn by six successive Indian boys, patched and repaired and made to do in the interest of economy. Now, those supplies are exhausted and you can not figure next year a per capita cost on the basis of $181.

Mr. CRAMTON. We hope we can, because the costs of living are going down. Now, this school that the gentleman is interested in is not in a class by itself. I will call the gentleman's attention to a very good school at Cherokee, N. C., with a small attendance, and, of course, the average per capita costs would naturally be larger, but with an average attendance of 257 the cost per capita was $135 instead of $181. I am told that they are doing very good work there. The gentleman will find that the average per capita cost varies in different schools—sometimes there is a good reason for it and sometimes it is not so easy to explain.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. MANN. What does the Government supply these schools—board, teaching, quarters for how many months in the year, six, nine, or how many?

Mr. CRAMTON. My impression is that the school year which they attempt to supply is nine months.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Government has found a method of taking a boy and keeping him at school nine months of the year, giving him board, teacher's services, quarters, and clothing for $135? Because, if they have made that unique discovery it ought not to be kept secret under a basket, but ought to be published to the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. There are a number of schools where the per capita cost is less than $200; but it should be remembered that many of these schools have adjacent lands and that the farm products and garden products that they can raise are not figured into this per capita cost. Then they seem to utilize the labor of the students to a considerable degree. Anyway, I want to call attention to the fact that the per capita cost of $181 is a figure that the Indian Bureau believes can be maintained next year, and we have already figured on an attendance of approximately 800 that can be taken care of at that per capita cost for the amount recommended by the committee. Probably a further increase in the future in the size of that school should be contemplated, under what is said here, but the committee did not believe this to be the year when we should undertake building programs.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that in this particular school the agricultural products raised on the school grounds under the superintendency and management of the teachers of the school amounted to $25,669 last year; and other products of the school, not agricultural in character, amounted to $12,790, and these items will necessarily supplement the appropriations that we make. Or rather, they did supplement them last year, and some similar products will supplement the appropriations next year.

Mr. SWING. Yes; they buy leather and teach the Indian boys to make harness and then sell the harness and turn the proceeds in to help run the school.

Mr. FRENCH. But the $25,669 of agricultural products would not be included in such an item. That would be a clear-cut addition produced by the students themselves for the support of the school.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, Calif., including pay of superintendent, $24,000; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; in all, $28,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 49, at the end of line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Greenville Indian School, Calif., including pay of superintendent, $24,000; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; for reconstruction of school buildings destroyed by fire on December 17, 1921, $60,000; in all, $88,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the Bureau of the Budget reported for the continuation of this school $25,000 and $5,000, and the committee cut it all out of the bill. They made no report on this school. After the Bureau of the Budget reported and the estimates had been submitted to Congress, on December 17 last fire destroyed the main building. I have a plat here which shows the buildings. There are some 28 minor buildings and you can see from the plat how they are located. No. 21 is the building that was destroyed. They have a hospital and office, a workshop, a barn, a commissary, a storehouse, and laundry buildings. There is a farm of more than 100 acres and more with a barn on it. They have their cattle. There are some one hundred and more Indians in attendance on this school. The average daily attendance is something over ninety. The nearest other place to attend would be about 200 miles and over away.

After this building was destroyed by fire some of the children were sent to the Fort Bidwell Indian School in northern California, about 200 miles away. Some were sent to Oregon, some were sent to Riverside, some were sent to Nevada; and according to the last report from the department of finance having charge of the State board of control, some of them were sent to exist on a very poor diet and a number were sent home without anything. This school has been doing splendid work. I have a number of reports in regard to it, in particular a letter from the missionary minister living there, who is familiar with the situation. As showing the splendid work that has been done, I will read one quotation from his letter. He says:

To abandon the Government school is a crime against the Indians, a crime against the whites, and an injustice to our State, the Nation, and humanity.

He goes on to show what has been done and what is being done. The parents of these young boys and girls live within 3 to 20 miles of the school. The children go back and forth. They get results. They help build up their own conditions at home. They learn various trades and become of some value.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. What do they teach these young Indians?

Mr. RAKER. They teach them blacksmithing, they teach them laundry work, they teach them farming, and give them a general education. They have a farm at this place. They raise cows and horses. They run their own dairy. They are teaching them how to plant gardens and to plant everything that they can live on. These boys go and help out on the home farms of the Indians within 3 to 20 miles, and help their fathers and mothers. They are doing good work. Now, because of the fire it has been necessary to send some of the Indian pupils to Oregon, a thousand miles away, and some into Nevada, 900 miles away.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. May I have five minutes more? I do not want to take the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman from California yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I was struck with the statement of the gentleman which he quoted from the communication of the minister, that to abandon this school would be a crime against humanity. Did I understand the gentleman correctly when he stated that the Indians whose children are in attendance at this school are residing within from 3 to 20 miles contiguous to this school?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. It is along that line. Do I understand that sending these children to these schools so far remote separates them from their fathers and mothers during the whole period of the school year?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; that is the situation.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Is it contemplated that this school shall be entirely abandoned?

Mr. RAKER. I did not want to go into that question.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I do not want to anticipate the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. But I shall answer it. The assistant commissioner said in his report, to my utter astonishment, that they did not intend to rebuild this school. I did not see the report and did not know that they had gone into this rebuilding until I saw the publication. In the meantime, I had been down to the Department of the Interior, to the Indian office, and while the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had answered a number of letters, I said to him, "I must, for the protection of these Indians, for their advancement, get a new building." He then told me that when I had the bill introduced to bring it down and that he would go over it, and he said that they would take no definite action against it or for it until they had an opportunity to go into it fully. I supposed that was the situation, and I know that now it is the attitude of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Burke, that he will not oppose, when he gets all of the facts, the rebuilding of this Indian school. I call the attention of the gentleman in addition to what he has already said to the fact that I put it at 20 miles, but I do not think it is quite as much as that. I have been through that country. I am familiar with it and have been since I was a boy. I have seen those people living on the places in the last 10 years, and I have seen the boys and girls who have come to this school go out and live with their parents. They are building nice homes; they have cattle, horses, wagons, and they have a farm. They are raising everything that the white man raises, and learning from this Indian school and having a chance to get back home.

The closest place that you can possibly put these Indians will be over 200 miles from this school up to 1,000 miles. I know the Government does not desire to put those boys and girls in that attitude, but wants to give them an opportunity for a good education. I am satisfied that if I had had an opportunity to present all of the facts to the committee in charge of this that they would have recommended that this appropriation be made. Everybody in that county—the judge, the district attorney, the people generally; in fact, the whole community—say that that Indian school ought to be rebuilt because the Government has the amount of money invested there, and there is no better locality in the United States for Indians to go to school, climatically and otherwise, than at this Greenville institution. They have a farm there; they have water. They can learn the things of life in which they are interested and that will make them good citizens.

I trust that the committee to-day will provide sufficient appropriation to maintain the school for the next year. I sent home and got an estimate from the superintendent, and he says that with $60,000, instead of having one building as it was for the boys and girls, he can put up two good buildings and go on with the school as it ought to be taken care of. I submit the following from those who know:

URGES INDIAN SCHOOL—MISSIONARY AT GREENVILLE OPPOSES THE IDEA OF SENDING INDIAN CHILDREN TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

GREENVILLE, PLUMAS COUNTY, January 27, 1922.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BEE:

SIR: To rebuild or abandon; to educate the Indian children at the Government schools, or to send them to public schools? That is the question.

On December 17 last the building containing the dormitory and the study rooms at the Greenville Indian School burned to the ground, and an effort is being made by the citizens of Plumas County to have the school rebuilt and enlarged to meet the real demand as they see it. The department at Washington seems to believe it best to gradually abandon the Indian schools and send the Indian children to the public schools. This, as I see it—having spent several years as missionary at this institution—would be in many instances a menace to the whites and a great injustice to the Indians, except, possibly, to a small number of children whose parents have had the benefit of Indian schools, where proper sanitation, discipline, and some education in the various branches of farming, mechanics, housekeeping, and various other accomplishments necessary to good citizenship obtain. If the children of parents who unfortunately have not had these advantages are not surrounded by proper sanitation, proper moral and religious instruction, the latter furnished free by the various churches and societies, and taught to be studious and industrious they can never be what the Government desires them to be—cleanly, industrious, studious, law-abiding citizens.

To abandon the school is unjust to the Indians, because they are discounted by many white children and made sport of, because a boy of 17 or 18 is a mental babe in the kindergarten class, nor can the child so outclassed feel but discouraged, and being discouraged fail to do his best. It is unjust to the Indians, because they have never had real discipline such as obtained in this Government school, which discipline is a requisite to real citizenship. These children of the forest are not degenerate as a class. They have brain power and brain capacity, but are undeveloped.

In no public school in our fair land is there a higher state of morality than in the Greenville Indian School. In no school of our land can be seen a greater percentage of children who freely and sincerely have responded to a broad and liberal religious teaching, for in three years over 90 per cent of these students have been baptized and are as faithful as are whites. In no country or city school are swearing and vulgarity so uncommon as in the Greenville Indian School.

To abandon the Government schools is a crime against the Indians, a crime against the whites, and an injustice to our State, Nation, and humanity.

Let some of our charity extended to other lands be applied to the overdue education of the Indians. While our dealings with other nations has been just, generous, and righteous, what citizen can read of broken treaties and the spoliation of these people and not feel that much of our righteousness is on the outside? There are those who say that this is a waste of money; that the Indian "goes back to his blanket." That applies to a few, but to any fair-minded person who visits Indian homes the great contrast can readily be seen between those who have had some Government school advantages and those denied that right. Educate one generation of Indians and then the majority can stand on an equal plane of achievement with any other race. Some stand first in the athletic world, some in law and medicine, in mechanics and music. Educate them under proper conditions and the Indian question is forever solved.

OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT,

HON. JOHN E. RAKER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. RAKER: On the 17th of December, 1921, the United States Indian school near Greenville was destroyed by fire, and about 80 Indian children that were attending this institution have been removed, some of them going to Fort Bidwell, some to Riverside, some to Salem, Oreg., and others to Stewart, Nev.

From the best information obtainable it is my understanding that the Department of Indian Affairs has decided not to rebuild the school. The attitude of the department, I am advised, is to do away with the Indian schools and to force these Indian children to attend the public schools. There seem to be ample reasons why this practice should not be engaged in, and I shall try to set forth some of these reasons.

(1) The full bloods come from a people of rather low moral type and are otherwise unfitted to mingle with the white children. The mixed bloods, in the great majority of cases, are illegitimate children, therefore are not suitable subjects to be placed in our public schools. It could not be hoped that the full bloods could be able to compete with the white children, and the illegitimate mixed bloods could only expect to become the butt of ridicule of the better circumstanced white children.

It would be rather absurd for us to hope that any degree of uplift would be experienced by these Indian children being thrown in contact with the white children, and, on the other hand, it seems to me that it could have but a demoralizing effect, to say the least, upon the white children.

(2) These children are charges of the Government, and at this late day I do not believe that it is a wise policy on the part of the Government to abandon them and force their tuition upon the public schools.

The training of the Indian child requires special qualifications on the part of the teachers, and, as you know, most of our public schools are taught by young and inexperienced women.

From what I can learn, this school for the past five years has turned out many graduates, and the school itself has had a splendid moral influence upon the Indians of Plumas County as well as upon those in the surrounding territory.

This Indian school has been maintained in Indian Valley for 25 years or more, about 100 children usually being in attendance. Generally speaking, these children are well behaved and cleanly. Now, would these conditions not be materially changed if these children were forced to go to the public schools for their education? I believe that this would be the result, many of them would not attend school at all.

The school, it seems to me, is ideally located from every standpoint. It would be hard to find a location more beautiful or healthful than where this school has been located, and I believe that it is a fact that under the supervision of Supt. E. K. Miller these children have been as well taken care of as any institution of its kind in the country. I believe in justness and fairness to these Indian children and their parents that before this school is abandoned every phase of the situation should be studied by the Indian Department of the Government, and I trust that you will give this matter the attention that it seems to merit, and assuring you that my sole object in bringing this matter to your attention is for the best interests of all concerned. With kind personal regards, believe me,

Very sincerely,

C. L. EATON,
General Superintendent.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. RAKER: I am in receipt of your letter of January 20, in regard to the rebuilding of the Indian school at Greenville.

I understand that the California Federation of Women's Clubs have taken up this matter in earnest, and that they are bending every effort toward the rebuilding of this school.

I understand that it cost in the neighborhood of $1,600 to transport the Indian children and their keepers from Greenville to the various schools to which they were assigned. This amount of money would have gone a long way toward fixing the buildings on the grounds, so that the children could have been kept at Greenville until an appropriation could have been made for a new building.

My letter to you of January 14 covered the matter as thoroughly as I could, and it seems to me that it is a matter of properly taking care of these Indian children and not forcing them into the public schools of California.

Yours, truly,

C. L. EATON,
General Superintendent.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
Congressman Second District, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE RAKER: This is to acknowledge receipt of your wire and also letter of January 16 concerning the care of Indian children by the Department of Indian Affairs and to thank you for same, as well as for your interest in this matter.

I herewith inclose letter from Amy D. Steinhart, Chief of the Bureau of Children's Aid, who has investigated the condition of certain children formerly cared for at the Greenville Home.

I will appreciate any information you may be able to furnish me in the future in connection with this matter.

Again thanking you, I am

Very truly, yours,

Chairman State Board of Control.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE,
Sacramento, January 26, 1922.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
Congressman Second District of California,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE RAKER: Mr. Daniels has submitted to this department your letter of January 16 in regard to plans of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Burke, for the care of Indian children. Their problem has been brought to our attention because of the request made by Greenville school that a number of the children not eligible to the institutions which you tabulate be returned to their homes. We have learned from reliable sources that many of the homes to which they have been sent are quite unfit to safeguard them and are maintained at a minimum standard of income. Our experience in work with Indian families has led us to believe that an attendance in Greenville has resulted in an appreciable improvement in the condition of children who were under its care, and there seems every indication that the gain made while at Greenville will become a loss if some plan is not speedily made for their custody. One of our informants went so far as to say that the children were reduced to the necessity of finding food by almost any method and of living on the poorest and barest diet.

You will understand, therefore, how greatly interested we are in any plans that may be made and we will appreciate it if you will keep us in touch with such progress as is made toward their consummation.

Thanking you therefore, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

AMY D. STEINHART, Chief.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, this school is in a somewhat similar situation to that referred to by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GENSMA], except that there is more reason why this school should be suspended than in his case. There is the additional reason that the buildings have recently been destroyed by fire.

Mr. RAKER. Just one.

Mr. CARTER. The building. I have been advised that it will take some $25,000 to repair those buildings and put them in shape for occupation and the continuation of the school. I just understood my friend from California to say that it would take $60,000, so that the reasons are more than twice as potential why the amendment should not be adopted, even than those given by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs himself. There is another reason why this school ought to be discontinued, and that is that it has no railroad connection now. The railroad that once ran up into this section of the country has been discontinued.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not make that statement. There is the Western Pacific and its branch which goes within 3½ miles of this school, running every day.

Mr. CARTER. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs told me a few moments ago that the railroad connection had been discontinued to the school, and there was no connection with it. Of course if the gentleman from California disputes that, then I shall conclude that he knows more about it perhaps than the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, because he comes from that section of the country. However, that disposes of only one of the many reasons. As a matter of fact this school never ought to have been established in this place. It is away up in a high altitude in northern California, where the climate is cold, and the Indians ought not to have been taken up there to start with. I dare say that it would not have existed as long as it has had it not been for the effective and diligent service rendered to his constituents by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. The reasons now have disappeared completely for any continuation of this school, and I am advised by the Indian Bureau that there will be no damage done whatever to the education of the Indians, that every one of them can be taken care of in the public schools of California, at Riverside, at Portland school, and at the other schools in that section of the country.

There are abundant school facilities for Indians in California, in Arizona, in that section of the country. It is better provided with Indian schools than almost any section of the country, and if there is any place where a school can be dispensed with, it is here. I hope the committee will sustain the report of the Committee on Appropriations, notwithstanding the efforts of my very good friend from California.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the amendment to be for the support and education of Indian pupils at this particular school, and that that is all there is to it.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understand the school building has burned?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How can they carry on a school there on the flat ground?

Mr. CARTER. It can not be done. It is impossible until the school is replaced.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I have a letter here right on my desk from a man who knows, who says that these people could have been taken care of in some of those outbuildings, and there would not have been necessity for one of them to leave the school. If you will give us this appropriation to continue the school next year, and give us the $60,000—

Mr. MANN. But that is not involved in the amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes. The amendment is for the education and maintenance of the school as it has been, and $60,000 to rebuild the school. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma is so kind and so fine, but yet knows so little about California and its climate—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Just a moment more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman that he would never make such a statement if he had lived in the Indian Valley in Greenville. It is one of the best—

Mr. CARTER. I hope the gentleman will not take up so much of my time with his question, or I will not have time to answer.

Mr. RAKER. It is one of the best agricultural sections of the State of California.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I have traveled considerably over the State of California, and I find there every character of climate. As a matter of fact, I was out there last spring a year ago, and while traveling about the beautiful city of Los Angeles with Mr. Will Rodgers, the noted comedian, his wife was expatiating upon the beauties of California. Rodgers said, "Oh, Charley, do not pay any attention to her. We have been here 11 months. We have talked climate, we have talked atmosphere, we have talked air, we have talked irrigation, and we are as big liars as any of them." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the situation as set forth in the hearings is that practically the entire school plant there has been destroyed by fire, and that statement is substantiated by the gentleman's asking $60,000 to restore it when the old buildings were only valued at $71,000. My judgment, from the little attention that I have been able to give to it, is that the Indians can be taken care of in other existing schools and given better education, better care, than by the restoration of this little plant. The greatest expense comes in the number of little schools, and better economy and better results can be secured in the larger schools. Now this plant has been destroyed, it seems to me a very good time to leave it closed.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. If the gentleman will use another moment of time, how many pupils have been in attendance at this school?

Mr. CRAMTON. About 100, and those are being taken care of at other existing schools.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. But they are being separated from their families.

Mr. CRAMTON. They were already.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Their fathers and mothers are still residing in their old homes and expect to do so?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say I do not wish the gentleman to understand that these people were all near enough that they could go home and see their families every night and morning.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Were they within 3 to 20 miles?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think not. They could not have been.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Let me ask the chairman of the committee another question. Is it the policy of the department to enter upon a policy of the centralization of these schools or not?

Mr. CRAMTON. I should hope it would be their policy to concentrate the pupils in a small number of schools, so far as boarding schools are concerned, rather than try to put all within 3 to 20 miles of their home regardless of how small the school might be. I hope they will concentrate them in schools of sufficient size that they can have the facilities that are possible when a large number of pupils are gathered together and be aroused by the spirit of emulation that is present in a large school.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word if that will get me some time. I am impressed with this amendment offered by the gentleman from California if the circumstances are as he has stated. I am not familiar with this subject, had no opportunity to be familiar with it, but it would seem to me that any school that provides for the instruction of 100 pupils, Indians or Americans, is of sufficient importance to warrant its maintenance and its continuation.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. In a moment. I just want to make this statement first. There is propaganda extended through this country very assiduously and energetically by papers and organizations that we shall enter upon a great Federal policy of supervision of the public schools of the United States. They are expected to go into remote localities where there is some illiteracy discovered, spend millions, yes, hundreds of millions of dollars, to eliminate and correct those conditions and reduce such illiteracy; and it would seem to me that if here are 100 pupils, contiguous to this school, within 20 miles, if there are, as stated, fathers and mothers living on land they are cultivating, where they have their homes, that it is not the most humane thing nor the soundest policy to say that we will remove those children 100 miles from their homes, scatter them out in other schools, and give them this instruction. I do not understand in detail this proposition, and do not pretend to, but it would not seem to me as a very sound public policy or that it is true economy—

Mr. RAKER. I want to answer that right there. As a Member of the House and on my word as a Member of the House, I know every trail and byroad in that country, and I say to the gentleman over 90 per cent are living in homes within 20 miles of that school.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I resist the motion to strike out the last word. According to the rosy picture painted by the gentleman from California, about how self-supporting and industrious these Indians are, does not my friend from Kansas think that they ought to be able to educate their own children at their own expense?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. That question would be equally proper if applied to any of these schools.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I have never heard anybody else paint such a rosy picture about the industry of the Indians and their success as the gentleman from California painted about these.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Let me answer. We all appreciate and understand the felicitous expressions of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], his power to picture and to paint. It is almost equal to that of the Republican floor leader when he descends on the beauties of Box Elder Canyon in the State of Wyoming. [Laughter.] But really, I think even as a matter of sentiment we owe something to the Indians, and as a matter of sound public policy we owe them much, and it is only in continuance of and in conformity with the policy we are carrying out in all these Indian schools.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. If I have any time to yield, I will.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. STAFFORD). The gentleman from Kansas has not the floor. All time has expired on this amendment. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. RAKER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 20.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation for the Greenville Indian School, California, for the fiscal year 1922, is hereby made available during such fiscal year for the support of Indian day and industrial schools, including the Fort Bidwell School, California, to provide support, education, and transportation of pupils enrolled at the Greenville School at the time of its destruction by fire.

Mr. RAKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the matter under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the matter under discussion. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. What is the necessity of doing that? The gentleman has just gotten permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say something further, openly and aboveboard. In response to the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE] in regard to the Indians, when he answered the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I wish to say that when the State of California was admitted into the Union under the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo these Indians had large tracts of land in their possession in the State of California, and through a Government official who was sent out there 18 solemn treaties were entered into with those Indians and they put them in the Government archives and kept them there for 50 years. Now, if those Indians had been granted what was theirs by right, by treaty, when the State of California came into the Union, they would not now be here seeking consideration at the hands of the Government. They would be well provided for by what was theirs.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. What became of the land that those Indians owned?

Mr. RAKER. The land was taken up by American citizens who went there determined to get gold, and nothing would stop them.

Mr. CARTER. And they are now citizens of the State of California?

Mr. RAKER. That makes no difference.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from California claim that those treaties were ever ratified by the United States Senate?

Mr. RAKER. I did not say they were ratified.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman left that impression—though not on me, because I knew better.

Mr. RAKER. I did not say they were ratified or that they were rejected. But it makes no difference. There was a solemn treaty entered into by the Government of the United States, through a duly authorized agent, with these Indians, and nobody knew for 50 years what was the situation of those treaties. They were kept in the secret archives until they were brought out. If these Indians had been treated properly and given what belonged to them, they would have sufficient money now to live in proper condition and in proper homes, and on their own farms.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman, of course, is stating a very pathetic fact.

Mr. RAKER. But it is true. That is the trouble.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that those 15 treaties—

Mr. RAKER. Eighteen treaties—

Mr. WALSH. More or less, that were negotiated, but never ratified, should be of any more binding effect on the United States than the treaty of Versailles, which was negotiated and not ratified by the Senate?

Mr. RAKER. You know it has always been an idea of mine, in reading Blackstone and Kent, that where two people enter into an agreement there is something to be done by them, and if I comply with my part and do all that I have to do, the other side can not stand back and say they will not stand by theirs.

The Indian kept his agreement. He kept the faith and did what the treaty said he should do; and the Government, instead of fulfilling its obligation under the treaty, let all this land be taken from the Indian and did not even furnish to him the provisions or cattle or horses which it said it would do, and the Indian has been in destitute circumstances all the time and has been given only a little dole here and there from time to time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Who was in the Senate from the State of Massachusetts when these treaties were defeated. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from California, in order that he might answer the question propounded to him by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Texas asked the gentleman from California who was in the Senate at that time.

Mr. RAKER. I know what the gentleman asked me. Will the Clerk turn to the books and see? Daniel Webster ought to have been.

Mr. CARTER. He means when the League of Nations treaty was negotiated.

Mr. RAYBURN. What I wanted to know was, who in the Senate at that time was the official treaty killer?

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know as a matter of fact whether these treaties were ever submitted?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; they were submitted and rejected.

Mr. WALSH. And failed to get the two-thirds vote?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And as a result of that the Indians went ahead and did all they were required to do, but the United States did nothing?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. Nobody seems to know what became of the treaties.

Mr. WALSH. What became of the Indians?

Mr. RAKER. A great many of them, three-quarters of them, by reason of natural causes, disease, and want of proper care and treatment, died. That is what became of them.

Mr. WALSH. A blanket Indian—

Mr. RAKER. A blanket Indian is a pretty good fellow; put a white man's suit on him and he will do good. If you treat him right, he will make a good citizen and a good worker if the white man will give him a chance. But the trouble is he has never had a fair chance for his existence.

Mr. WALSH. What has been in his way?

Mr. RAKER. The domineering, overzealous, wonderfully progressive mind of the white race has been in his way from the time the white man landed at Plymouth Rock until he fell off on the edge of the Pacific Ocean. You can not stop the white man from taking the United States.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman seems to be arguing that the white man should have paused a little in this march of civilization and let the red man have his way.

Mr. RAKER. Not at all.

Mr. WALSH. As a matter of fact we have spent a great deal of money and are squandering a great deal of money in behalf of the Indians as a result of treaties, whether they were ratified or not, and the more we do for them the more it costs the taxpayers.

Mr. RAKER. I would not impede in the least the march of civilization that started when our forefathers landed on Plymouth Rock, but I say the Indians should be treated fairly and decently and they should be given a chance for their lives.

Mr. WALSH. Have they not had it?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. WALSH. What has prevented them from living out there?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman knows the old saying that a good Indian is a dead Indian, and the white people have acted accordingly. Why, until within a very few years we would not consider the Indian's word in court.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman must confine that statement to his own State. That condition never existed in Oklahoma.

Mr. RAKER. I was not talking about Oklahoma.

Mr. WALSH. California has a great many peculiarities that do not attach to the other States. I am not referring to the California delegation in Congress. The State has very active and alert Representatives here; but what the gentleman has just said about the treatment of the Indians in California can not be laid up against the other States of the Union. The gentleman has just spoken of the discrimination against their competency as witnesses in court. That is a matter purely local to the State of California. What has Uncle Sam got to do with that?

Mr. RAKER. I am simply saying that the march of the white man and his determination have been such that he has moved the Indian right before him in his westward march through every State of this Union.

Mr. WALSH. What should the white man have done, in the gentleman's estimation?

Mr. RAKER. He should have taken care of the Indians and given them a certain amount of the lands that belonged to them, and provided for them, given them proper schooling and education, and treated them justly, leaving them right in the localities in which they lived.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For enlarging and repairing canals, repairing structures and dam, and replacement of structures of the irrigation system for the irrigation of lands on the Fort Hall Reservation, Idaho, and lands ceded by the Indians of said reservation, $300,000, to be immediately available, the total cost of the work to be done on this project not to exceed $760,000: Provided, That the amount herein appropriated and the amount to be appropriated in the future for the completion of the work shall be divided equitably by the Secretary of the Interior between the Indian lands and the lands in private ownership: Provided further, That no additional work toward the enlargement of this project, but only the necessary repairs to the present project shall be made, unless and until the Secretary of the Interior shall be able to make or provide for what he shall deem to be satisfactory agreements with such private land-owners to repay their proper proportionate part of the cost of the entire work to be done: And provided further, That in case of lands still held in Indian ownership benefited hereby there is created a lien against such lands for the proportionate share of the money expended hereunder, which shall be enforced against such lands by the Secretary of the Interior under such rules, regulations, and conditions as he may prescribe.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask for more definite information with regard to this large project called the Fort Hall project. That seems to call for the expenditure of quite a large amount of money.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, this project, which it is proposed to repair and enlarge, was constructed about 10 years ago, but by reason of the fact that the canals carrying the water were too small it is necessary to expend the appropriation proposed to enlarge the canal and repair the dam at the reservoir, which will permit of the reclamation of more land than was originally contemplated to be irrigated. It is also necessary to reconstruct the diversion dam, and also to stop the leaks in the reservoir which occur when the water is raised in the reservoir because of fissures of volcanic origin.

During the month of September I went over this project with the Secretary of the Interior and the engineer of the Indian Service, and the estimate of the amount of the appropriation made here is the result of the observations of the Secretary of the Interior and of the engineer of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the project engineer, as well as engineers in private employment.

There is a great quantity of land for which there is water available if the reservoir dam can be repaired so as to hold the water, and also to have these fissures on the end of the arms of the reservoir repaired, and so prevent the water from disappearing. These holes through which this water disappears were not discovered until within recent years, and it is believed that if these repairs are made there will be sufficient water stored to irrigate about 50,000 additional acres of land, a large portion of which belongs to the Indians, and they will get the benefit from the irrigation of these lands.

Mr. SNELL. Is it expected that any of this money will ever be returned to the Treasury? Do they ever return to the Treasury money that goes into these irrigation projects?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The law contemplates the return of all the money to the Treasury.

Mr. SNELL. I know the law contemplates it; but from actual experience, is the money ever returned?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. My understanding is that the money is being returned.

Mr. SNELL. Has there been any money returned which has been expended on this individual project?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I can not advise the gentleman definitely as to whether the Indians have returned any of the money that was expended in connection with the original construction of the project, but values have been created there by reason of the irrigation of this land, upon which the Government has a lien. Each Indian has a 20-acre tract of irrigated land which he either cultivates or leases, and when the project is enlarged as contemplated, he will have 40 acres additional, so that it will make these Indians practically independent.

Mr. SNELL. Is this appropriation sufficient to complete the whole project?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This is sufficient to complete the whole project so far as the Indian lands are concerned; but if it is found that additional water can be stored in the reservoir, outside lands owned by the whites will come in for a share of this water.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. With the gentleman's permission, I desire to say that as a result of an investigation into the so-called reimbursable appropriations in 1919 and 1920, authorized by joint action of the House and Senate, it was shown that out of a total of $23,000,000 of reimbursable appropriations, most of which had been applied toward the construction of the large irrigation projects, less than 20 per cent of that amount had been returned to the Treasury.

And the further fact is, Mr. Chairman, in a majority of the more recent projects which are the larger projects, of which I understand this is one, not 5 per cent has been returned, and without knowing what the facts are in this case, my guess is that there has not been 2 per cent of the amount spent on this particular project returned to the Public Treasury.

Mr. SNELL. That is the information I was trying to get at.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman must remember that these payments extend over a long series of years. When the projects have been completed, the Indians are then called upon for reimbursement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not wish to be understood as interposing an objection to the completion or consummation of these irrigation projects, but I do want to register my protest against these large expenditures at present, because I know as a result of having gone on certain reservations that the work of construction has actually gone far ahead of the necessities of either the Indians or the white men on the reservation. I observe a statement made by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] a few moments ago that this large sum is necessary in order to enlarge a reservoir and in order to prevent losing the water through fissures in the earth brought about by volcanic action.

Mr. Chairman, there is no good reason on earth why these large sums should be appropriated from year to year to meet the whims of some reclamation engineer who has in mind the completion of some great irrigation scheme at some future time without any knowledge of the wants of the people.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I hope the gentleman does not apply that remark to the Fort Hall Reservation, for, if so, it is evident that he has not been informed in regard to the facts.

Mr. RHODES. It is quite evident that the gentleman from Idaho has not investigated the facts, because he was unable to state whether or not any of these funds had ever been reimbursed to the Public Treasury. I am not saying that there may not be a necessity for a small appropriation, but I do say that in the majority of these cases these large appropriations are not necessary. Let me ask my friend from Idaho this question: Is there an actual demand for water on the reservation that can not be met?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes. Over 20,000 acres of Indian lands are leased to the white people for which water in sufficient quantity could not be supplied. The canal is not large enough to carry the water and the Indians are losing the amount of rental that they otherwise would receive.

Mr. RHODES. I submit that while the statement is no doubt true it does not answer my question. I asked the gentleman if the white men or the Indians have filed applications for water which can not be supplied. That is what I mean by necessity. I understand that the gentleman may be quite right in making the statement if you bring the whole irrigable area within the water furnished by the project. But in the absence of definite information I can not concede the point.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The hearings will disclose that there is a great demand for this land, and the report of the engineers sets out in detail the additional land which can be made available if the canals are enlarged and the reservoir repaired. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to say that the water right to which the Government is entitled amounts to 200,000 acre-feet, but the filing will expire in September; and if this legislation is not enacted the water to which the Indians are entitled will not be available because the water rights will expire under the State law. It is necessary in order to hold the water right to enact this legislation and begin work on the enlargement of the canal and the repair of the dam at the reservoir, otherwise the water right will lapse and be taken up by others who have already filed application for it.

Mr. RHODES. I have heard witness after witness day after day make use of these same broad and sweeping statements, insisting on large appropriations to carry forward the idea of some impracticable dreamer who wanted to go out on the western domain and convert the large areas of grazing land into farm land, which can not be done successfully. I warn the House that no man is safe in saying here that this money will ever be reimbursed to the Public Treasury. The gentleman from Illinois last Saturday checked up my good friend from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] on a statement he made in attempting to show that there was an obligation resting on Congress to make appropriations because of existing treaties. I dare say that on the Fort Hall project, the Crow project, the Blackfoot project, and the Flathead project not one is made necessary because of treaty stipulations. They are only made necessary by what you are trying to do here now, creating a necessity by the passage of a law which in a majority of cases I fear is not justified.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I fear the gentleman is from Missouri. [Laughter.]

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman's fears are well founded.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the commissioner's statement makes it clear that the effort is not so much to secure the reimbursement while the lands are in the possession of the Indians as it is when the time comes that the Indian parts with the title to his land, and they are bound to do so some time or other, and then because the water rights are a lien on the property they will then be reimbursable to the Government.

Mr. RHODES. Does the gentleman know that in many cases 80-acre allotments are encumbered in a larger sum to-day than they would sell for; and, if so, does the gentleman think it right for Congress to pass legislation year after year imposing excessive charges upon these lands that have been allotted?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take more than my five minutes and I am trying to answer some of the questions the gentleman asked when he had the floor. The policy is, so far as possible, to insure the return of the cost of these water rights to the Government in all the lands coming into white ownership. In this particular project there have been errors on the part of the engineer that have made prohibitive costs, and, as I understand it, already the owners of the lands have been relieved of a portion of that cost. The gentleman will find much more in the hearings than I am able to give him now; that is, as to the gentleman's complaint that money has not yet come into the Treasury.

The gentleman must understand that a very large amount of the cost of construction will come back. As to the particular item, the gentleman will find that there are now under constructive works 35,000 acres, of which 29,969 are actually irrigated, and, further, that practically every acre of land that can be settled is being irrigated, and that the operation and maintenance charges are somewhat heavy owing to the physical condition, the system's rapid growth, moss in the main canals, the latter requiring frequent cleaning, the increasing demand of water for delivery, and additions which can be made only after necessary repairs to canals, and so forth, enlargement of canals, and replacement of structures have been made. There is no doubt but that there is a demand there for an extension and furnishing of a larger amount of water.

Mr. RHODES. Does that demand arise from the engineer in charge of the project, or does it come from the Indian and white farmers?

Mr. CRAMTON. It comes from the farmers. The engineer made a mistake on this project.

Mr. RHODES. If the gentleman is certain of that, it should be accepted as a justification for the appropriation, but to simply rely upon the visionary scheme of some reclamation engineer whose ambition is to complete a great project from an engineering standpoint is no justification.

Mr. CRAMTON. The project already has suffered from the lack of capacity of one reclamation engineer, who made serious mistakes in the construction of the dam, and that now has to be corrected.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, let me offer this word in addition. The demand here is such on the part of the farmers that it is crowding well onto the construction work that is done. So far as settlement may be concerned there is more demand than there is available land under irrigation to satisfy that demand. But the immediate demand for a continuation of this project is a demand of a different kind, and that is a demand that is imperative by reason of the law of priority of use of public waters. If these waters shall be filed upon and used by some one other than the Indians, after the time limit shall have expired next September, within which time this water may be used under the laws for the Indian lands, then it will be impossible for these Indians to receive water from the sources now available, and, therefore, impossible to receive waters from any source that would probably be within the economical financial expenditure of money to attain.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What becomes of that water if they do not use it?

Mr. FRENCH. The settlers in the country make their filings upon the water. They use the water for some purpose that is recognized under the law as a useful purpose, such purpose, for instance, as irrigation, and that is the main purpose.

Mr. SNELL. Then the water will have to be used for irrigation by somebody?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. It is simply a question of who files first?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And the Government has to pay the expense, regardless?

Mr. FRENCH. Not at all. On the other hand, whoever uses the water and develops the irrigation project pays for the water. Many of these projects to which I refer have been developed under the Carey Act, or by private individuals or companies organized under State laws, or by the Government under the national reclamation law, but whichever way the projects may be developed the settlers themselves will pay for the water.

Under the national reclamation law they will pay over a period of a good many years, and under the law by which we are developing irrigation systems on Indian lands the arrangement is much the same. The water is paid for over a long period of time.

Here is a case where we are up against a time limit running against the Government within which the use of the water filed upon for the Indians must be attained.

Mr. SNELL. What is to prohibit extending the time?

Mr. FRENCH. It can not be done.

Mr. SNELL. Why not?

Mr. FRENCH. Because under the laws of the State where this doctrine of use prevails—

Mr. SNELL. Could not the gentleman's own State extend the time? They are as much interested in the Indians as we are. They are your own citizens.

Mr. FRENCH. It has been extended to the limit of time possible by the State law.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that the State can not extend it further if they wanted to?

Mr. FRENCH. No.

Mr. SNELL. Why not?

Mr. FRENCH. Other applicants have already offered their filings upon the available water. Now, it may or may not be possible legally for the State to step in and provide another condition touching those who hold secondary filings on this water, but the legislature will not convene prior to next September, and then it will be too late. Again, sentiment would not sustain such a proposition.

Mr. SNELL. Why would it not be just as well that the white people who are willing to pay for this water should take it and use it as for the Government to buy it for the Indians?

Mr. FRENCH. Economically it would be as well for the section of country involved. But the Government is a sort of guardian to the Indians. I do not know that in all instances we are doing the economical thing in developing irrigation projects on all Indian lands, but I do know this, that if the Government is to take the place of a guardian of its ward it ought to do that which will be for the best interest of the ward. In another 10 or 15 years, if these waters shall be permitted to be diverted to some private concern made up of members of the white race, the Indians would awake to find that they had no water. Naturally they would wonder why their guardian, the United States, did not at the time it could divert water from reasonably possible sources that could be developed for irrigation purposes at the minimum cost, and this is the minimum cost, approximately $45 per acre; they would wonder, I say, why their guardian had not protected their rights.

I called attention the other day to one case where the Government on account of treaties entered into with Indians in the State of Washington felt it was obligated to set apart a million dollars to provide water for the reclamation of lands within the Yakima Indian Reservation, because it had not protected the rights of the Indians prior to that time.

Mr. SNELL. On this one project there are only 5,000 acres in the project proper that is available at this time for water.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the gentleman is in error. My impression is that—

Mr. SNELL. I understand there is a balance of about 5,000 acres theoretically under the constructed work, but the works are not sufficient to irrigate the amount already to be irrigated, and it is to take care of these 5,000 acres that they are going to do this so as to take care of a great deal more. It seems to me we are spending a great deal more money now than is absolutely necessary at this time.

Mr. FRENCH. No—

Mr. SNELL. The engineers give $20,000 as the cost of building a retaining wall to protect the water which my friend, Brother SMITH, spoke about specially.

Mr. FRENCH. No; I have the figures here. The project has a total of 52,000 acres, and 35,000 acres are already under ditch.

Mr. SNELL. I understand it is 5,000 acres more at the present time where they want water.

Mr. FRENCH. No; the 5,000 acres is under the immediate work. If the gentleman will notice, the 5,000 acres is under the immediate project that theoretically has been constructed and which your chairman has informed you is under laterals and ditches which are too small. This 5,000 acreage can not be taken care of, because the canals can not furnish the water. They are not large enough.

Mr. SNELL. How much money has been spent upon this project?

Mr. FRENCH. It is rather a large project and it has required up to the present time $866,000 plus, and it will require something like a total of $766,000 more. We are asking at this time for $300,000 to continue a part of this work for which the Government has already appropriated so large an amount. Again, I want you to remember that this is made imperatively necessary now because of the time limit on the water rights—

Mr. SNELL. I think that is something that the gentleman's own State has within its power and should take care of. I do not see any reason why not.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield? I can read from the State law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. I ask for three additional minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Here is an extract from the State law in reference to water, which reads:

All rights to the use of water acquired under this chapter or otherwise shall be lost and abandoned by a failure, for the term of five years, to apply it to the beneficial use for which it was appropriated, and when any right to the use of water shall be lost through nonuse or abandonment such right to such water shall revert to the State and be again subject to appropriation under this chapter.

Mr. SNELL. Is not the gentleman's State giving as much interest to its own citizens as to any others—

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is bringing in an argument here that the State is allowing the use of that water instead of appropriating the money. Now, I could not see why they would not be willing for it to be used at any time that the Federal Government appropriated the money. If you get the money you ought to be interested enough in making—

Mr. FRENCH. Allow me to say this: Probably the people of Idaho are no different from the people of other States, and they would welcome the development of lands by irrigation that would be for the benefit of either whites or Indians. You would not find any sentiment that would support postponement. Bringing the State of Idaho into the matter and by law granting further extension of time, were such a thing possible, would mean the tying up of the water for years or until our Government would see fit to develop the project for the Indians, and would not find support of public sentiment in Idaho. That, in a few words, is the long and short of it. In this case the Government must go ahead with the project to protect the Indians' rights or the rights will be forfeited.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I take it that this law has been upon the books—

Mr. FRENCH. For years.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If the gentleman will yield, it will affect other rights and disturb the whole situation.

Mr. FRENCH. Absolutely. We could not pass a private law for this particular project under our Constitution, and a general law withholding water from beneficial use is unthinkable.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. If the gentleman will permit, I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that there has been a second filing upon some of this water?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Is it possible the State of Idaho would not have the power to extend the time to use the primary right?

Mr. FRENCH. It has already extended the time of the primary right to the limit under the law.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It has been extended twice.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. May I ask the gentleman a further question?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Is there any limitation in the statutes of Idaho as to the number of times it may be extended?

Mr. FRENCH. As I understand it, the extension has already been made to the limit of the law; but, as I stated, you would not find any sentiment in my State or in yours that would support an extension of time that would prevent the development of an irrigation project with water available here, if not by the Government, then by private initiative.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 750 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., and for pay of superintendents, $150,000; for general repairs and improvements, $14,000; for addition to heating and power plant, $20,000, to be immediately available; for repairs and construction of drain, ditches, and dikes on the Haskell School farm, $18,000, to be immediately available; in all, $184,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: On page 44, lines 1, 2, and 3, strike out the following: "For repair and construction of drain, ditches, and dikes on the Haskell School farm, $18,000; to be immediately available."

Mr. CRAMTON. That is simply to correct the text, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For promoting civilization and self-support among the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, $95,000, to be paid from the principal sum on deposit to the credit of said Indians, arising under section 7 of the act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, to be used exclusively for the purposes following: Not exceeding $42,500 of this amount may be expended for general agency purposes; not exceeding $20,000 may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in aiding in the construction, equipment, and maintenance of additional public schools in connection with and under the control of the public-school system of the State of Minnesota, said additional school buildings to be located at places contiguous to Indian children who are now without proper public-school facilities, said amount to be immediately available, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized in his discretion to convey to the proper district school authorities such undisposed of land as may be required for the proper use of any such school, and, if sufficient undisposed of land is not available, to use a part of said sum in the purchase of necessary land for any such school, and to convey the land when purchased to the proper school district; not exceeding $20,000 may be expended in aiding indigent Chippewa Indians upon the condition that any funds used in support of a member of the tribe shall be reimbursed out of and become a lien against any individual property of which such member may now or hereafter become seized or possessed, and the Secretary of the Interior shall annually transmit to Congress at the commencement of each regular session a complete and detailed statement of such expenditures, the two preceding requirements not to apply to any old, infirm, or indigent Indian. In the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior; not exceeding $17,500 may be expended for the support of the Indian hospitals.

Mr. KNUTSON rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KNUTSON. I want to ask did the gentleman's committee go into the purpose for which similar moneys have been expended in the past? And did it inquire whether the methods employed in using the moneys appropriated by Congress out of the tribal funds are in violation of treaties entered into with the Chippewa Indians?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think everyone in the House is familiar with the fact that there has been a controversy for some time as to the use of the tribal funds of these Indians for purposes of administration. Not only that general policy, but certain amendments to the text as to certain details were suggested from several sources representing these Minnesota Indians. All these matters had the consideration of the subcommittee, with the result that the text was reported as it appears in the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Should not this money be employed in helping the Indians become self-sustaining and in helping them to get on their own land and to construct buildings by equipment so that they can go ahead and farm?

Mr. CRAMTON. The committee was satisfied that the use of the money as proposed was in harmony with the treaties and the best that at this time could be made.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did the committee go into the treaties at all?

Mr. CRAMTON. It did not go into them in as much detail as the House has done heretofore. I made some particular inquiry, but not so much as has been made by the gentleman from Minnesota and other members of the Minnesota delegation, who have given it much thought, gentlemen of great ability, and I hardly think any two of them agree as to what the situation is.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if other tribes who have funds held in trust for them by the Government pay the cost of administration out of their own funds?

Mr. CRAMTON. There are many cases in this same bill where that is done.

Mr. KNUTSON. In all cases?

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, generally speaking; yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. What exceptions are there?

Mr. CRAMTON. When they do not have enough tribal funds so that they can pay them.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did the committee go into the treaty of 1889 at all?

Mr. CRAMTON. The committee gave consideration to that. The gentleman will note that the brief statement that I have before me, the letter, is but one of a number submitted to me, and we have studied them very carefully.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say that this matter was called to my attention too late to enable me to go before the committee in regard to it. I expect to ask the Senate committee, when this matter comes up, to examine it carefully and to make such changes in the bill as will meet the treaty of 1889. The Indians claim that the money is not being well used at the present time.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that, of course, so far as I am concerned, on any amendments that are put in the bill or an any section added by another body, we will, of course, have a full and free conference.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I would like to ask the committee if it has the proposition before it in regard to the hospital on White Earth reservation that was authorized a couple of years ago to be turned over to the State? I will ask whether any proposition involving that question was before the committee?

Mr. CRAMTON. The question was before the subcommittee, the one, I think, at White Earth, the tubercular hospital, the proposal that it shall be reopened.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. It was conducted once, if I am correct, and due to a protest of the Indians against the use of their own funds to support a hospital for their own use, they desired it to be closed. Now they desire it reopened. But the committee did not see fit to increase the item above the estimate to the extent that would be necessary in order to reopen that hospital, although there seems to be reason to believe that the hospital is needed.

Mr. STEENERSON. I want to say to the gentleman that the appropriation act of three years ago provided that this hospital should be turned over to the State of Minnesota, but it said nothing about the land on which the hospital is located. This hospital, according to my advices, is very much needed, and the State board of health, in view of the ravages of trachoma and tuberculosis and other diseases, is anxious to take hold of it, simply for the benefit of the community at large; that this locality here is a dangerous one to the State at large, and they are willing to operate this hospital without any expense to the United States, provided it shall be turned over with the ground on which it is located.

I notice that Senator NELSON has introduced an amendment, which is on file over in the Senate, providing for the turning over of the land upon which this hospital is situated, a provision which was omitted in the original proposition. Of course, I understand that it is subject to a point of order here, because it would be legislation amending the appropriation act of two years ago; but I have sent for the amendment, and if unanimous consent is given I shall be very glad to put it in here. If not, I want to mention it now, so that if it is put on in the Senate it will be understood that it is very desirable that it remain and be agreed to by the House.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman will remember that an amendment transferring the land owned by the hospital was suggested to the subcommittee by the Indian Bureau.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. But we did not put it on the bill because it was a matter of legislation.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. And we wanted to bring in the bill free from any legislation. I do not know how the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] feels about it, but I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. I can probably get the text of the amendment very soon. It seems to me it is a very desirable thing, because it will open this hospital to the Indian patients there and will prevent the further spread of these diseases, trachoma and tuberculosis, which are threatening the community. The State board of health sent a special man down here, Mr. Chesley, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Newton] knows. He was here in the interest of this very proposition. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Newton].
